ENTRE NOUS.

SEVERAL complaints have reached me with reference to the abstraction of the Supplement to Truth of the 18th ult., dealing with the Kilburn Sisterhood. Every purchaser of Truth ought to have received the Supplement, and if in any case it was not delivered, I can only suggest to the purchasers that they should insist on having it from their newsagents. As to complaints about the disappearance of the Supplement from public libraries and reading-rooms, that is a matter which the authorities of those institutions must see to. I have done my best to meet the demand for extra copies, and I will continue to do so. For the rest, I can only say that, up to the present moment, I have no further developments of any kind to report in connection with my remarks upon the Church Extension Association. And I hardly think that the time has yet come for me to say more on the subject.

The Queen is to come up to Buckingham Palace from Windsor on Tuesday, the 21st, arriving in town in time for luncheon. The Royal wedding takes place next day, and on Thursday, the 23rd, her Majesty will leave town for Osborne, travelling by special train from Victoria to Portsmouth Station, and crossing the Solent in the Royal yacht Alberta, which has just undergone an extensive refit. There will be a "family" dinner-party at Buckingham Palace on the 21st and also on the 22nd, and possibly a concert may be given there during the week.

An imaginative "London Correspondent" has informed a number of provincial journals that the Queen "has failed to derive benefit from her visits to the Riviera and to Scotland, and much anxiety is felt by her entourage." This is a pure and simple fabrication. Many years have elapsed since the Queen has been in such good health as she has enjoyed during the last three months, while her Majesty has been remarkably free from the rheumatism from which she constantly suffers, and which, although in no respect serious, is often troublesome and painful.

The State Concert at Buckingham Palace was a very crowded function, and the ball-room was crammed for some time before the Royalties entered in procession. As the time went on, the room became terribly hot. There were some very smart dresses to be seen, and a wonderful display of jewels. There was a terrible crush in the supper-room for some time. The display of fruit from Frogmore was remarkably fine, and there was a splendid show of gold plate. The floral decorations were, as usual, beautiful, particularly the arrangement on the staircase.

The Prince of Wales is to leave town for the season on Monday, the 27th. It is not yet definitely settled whether the Prince will be the guest of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon at Goodwood during the race week, or if he is to stay on board the Osborne in Portsmouth Harbour, proceeding each day of the meeting to Chichester by special train. In any case, the Prince and Princess of Wales are to arrive at Cowes in the Osborne on the evening of Friday, the 31st, and they will stay in the Solent for about a fortnight. The Prince is afterwards going to Homburg, while the Princess will be conveyed in the Osborne to Copenhagen, accompanied by Princess Victoria, Prince Charles of Denmark, and Princess Maud. The Princess will stay in Denmark until the end of October, and she is not going to Scotland this year.

I learn that the Duke and Duchess of Coburg will not be present at the Royal wedding on the 22nd. The Duke is to leave Clarence House next week for Coburg, whence he will proceed to Kissingen for three weeks, after which he is going for the shooting season to Rheinhardsbrunn, his beautiful seat in the Thuringian Forest, where he is to be joined by the Duchess and Princess Beatrice of Coburg, who are now at St. Petersburg.

The Queen is likely to receive a large number of applications for Bushey Park, a very charming Royal residence which had been occupied by the late Duc de Nemours for more than forty-six years. Bushey was long the abode of William IV. and Queen Adelaide, when Duke and Duchess of Clarence, and her late Majesty resided there between 1837 and 1849, when she died. It is rumoured that Bushey is likely to become the residence of the Duchess of Albany, and that the Queen intends to give Claremont (which is her own private property) to Princess Beatrice. Whoever may get Bushey, the place will require extensive and costly repairs; and it is to be hoped that the beneficiary will pay for them instead of the expenses being saddled upon the country.

Her Majesty has placed Abergeldie Castle at the disposal of the Empress Eugénie for the autumn, and she will reside there during the month of September.

Albert Cottage, one of the Royal residences in Osborne Park, is to be inhabited for some weeks during the summer by Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia, to whom the place has been lent by the Queen. Osborne Cottage, where Sir Henry Ponsonby lived during the last year of his life, is to be placed at the disposal of the Duke and Duchess of York and their "nursery" during the Cowes season.

In connection with the question of Park management, which is now so much to the fore, I am asked to ventilate a grievance of the children who frequent the north side of Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens. Up to a year or so ago there was a lodge at the Bayswater end of the Broad-walk, where milk, ginger-beer, buns, jumbles, and other refreshments suitable to the juvenile population were on sale. The Park authorities, with that well-known regard for the convenience of all sections, &c., &c., which I have referred to above, pulled down this lodge, and the milk, ginger-beer, jumbles, and other delicacies can now only be obtained at the kiosk on the other side of the Serpentine. I have had a very indignant communication on the subject from a young lady who patronises the north side of the Park daily, with her nurse. She has a weakness for jumbles, but objects to having to walk nearly a mile every time she wishes to invest a farthing or a halfpenny in these luxuries. Now that the authorities are gradually opening their eyes to the requirements of the adults on the south side of the Park, perhaps they will also give their attention to the children on the north. As a matter of fact, children are the principal patrons of Kensington Gardens, and when they are playing about at this time of the year, they ought to be able to get a glass of milk or water, if not a ha'porth of jumbles.

A friend who has been staying at Bournemouth, and writes to me in praise of the beauties of that town in the early summer, suggests that I should impress upon the inhabitants the desirability of improving the sea frontage. I have done my best in this direction from time to time for years past, but with so little effect that I have gradually come to the conclusion that the Bournemouth people are deaf to argument on the subject. Excellent plans have been put forward for constructing a marine under-cliff drive, and liberal subscriptions from the Railway Company, ground landlords, and others have been promised; but the Town Council or the influential ratepayers, which ever it may be, fail to see how much the interest of the town is bound up with the improvement. The first thing people wa when they come to stay at the seaside is a go opportunity of walking, sitting, and driving by t sea, and in this respect, more especially as regar driving, Bournemouth is far inferior to almost any oth watering-place in the kingdom. Of course cheap trippe swarm there, as they do to every other town to whi railway companies run cheap trips, but I take it th cheap trippers do not promote the permanent prosperi of any holiday resort.

I believe the great hindrance to Bournemouth as fashionable watering-place is the presence of a larg resident population of half-pay Service men, and othe people whose ideas are as limited as their means, an whose ruling principle in municipal politics is to avoi being called upon to pay a few shillings extra per annun to the public purse in the form of rates. These people however, are short-sighted as well as selfish, for whatever tends to enlarge the attractions of the town to the better class of visitors tends equally to increase the value of property, and the letting value of houses, furnished or unfurnished. I am told that at Bournemouth residents find more and more difficulty in letting their houses furnished for the season. Serve them right!

Visitors to Folkestone this summer will get the benefit of a greatly improved train service. The South Eastern Company have just started a fast morning up-train, which leaves Folkestone at 8·55 and arrives at Cannon-street at 10.30—a very good run. The chief afternoon down train has also been accelerated.

It may be hoped that this waking-up on the part of the South Eastern will have some effect upon other southern lines, more particularly the Brighton. The train service between London and Brighton stands urgently in need of improvement. One of the great faults of it is that the Company seem to think that when people travel to or from Victoria, time is of no consequence to them. The fast morning and evening trains to and from London Bridge are fairly good, but the unpunctuality of the Victoria service is simply disgraceful. The Company make a great mistake in their assumption that time is of no consequence at Victoria. Plenty of people have business at the West End, and to all those whose business engagements lie as far east as, say, Holborn Circus and Fleet-street (which includes the greater number of London lawyers), Victoria would be a more convenient station than London Bridge, if the train service were equally good.

Owing, I suppose, to what took place at the General Election, Commissionary-General Hamley appears to think that there are no Liberals left in Derby, and he is, therefore, inviting the whole population indiscriminately to become members of the so-called Junior Conservative Club in Albemarle-street. This idea is a mistake. I am in a position to state that there are still a great many Liberals in Derby, and they authorise me to say that they have no desire whatever to enrol themselves among the Junior Conservatives.

Last week the annual sale was held at the Royal School of Art Needlework, and some curious efforts were made to stimulate business. I take the following from a circular issued to some of the Associates :—

> H.R.H. the President has most graciously signified her intention of being present, and herself taking the arduous post of having charge of the chief stall.
> I would suggest in passing that if any Associate or her friends would like to buy any special article, it can (by notice being given to me) be placed on H.R.H.'s stall. . . . .
> Cards with H.R.H.'s monogram giving notice of the sale on the two following days, the 26th and 27th, can be had from Miss Ffenell, at the school. . . . .

I wonder how many individuals were induced to buy goods by the opportunity thus afforded of having any article they chose placed on H.R.H.'s stall. The Royal School of Art Needlework must be in a bad way if only this sort of snobbishness will keep it going.

"What is the difference," asks a correspondent, apropos of Li Hung Chang's journey to Europe, "between a yellow jacket, a button, or a peacock's feather on the one hand, and a thistle, a bath, or a garter on the other? Why do we lavish so much ridicule on the importance attached to the first set of emblems by the Chinese when we ourselves set just as much store by the second set?" There is much force in these questions, and I commend them to the attention of the wags in the Press who are always poking fun at Li Hung Chang's yellow jacket and peacock's feathers. Looking at the matter impartially, it seems to me that a yellow jacket, or a glass button, or a peacock's feather, is more suitable for decorative purposes than either a bath or a garter—I do not say a thistle, because no doubt that is an object highly appropriate to many of those on whom it has been conferred.

It would be impossible to fix any limit to the benefits likely to accrue from the recent discovery of the Röntgen rays, and every day demonstrates more fully how great a boon has been placed in this direction at the disposal of surgical science. This may not, perhaps, represent exactly the sentiments of the great Li Hung Chang, although, as a result of his compliance, the Professors at the Charlottenburg Polytechnic, Berlin, were enabled to fix the exact position of the bullet he received from the would-be assassin at Shimonoseki last year, and which is still lodged in his left cheek. If those rays could only have unfolded the manifold schemes lying dormant in the brain of the wily old Chinese Envoy, it might in the long run have been better for the people of both hemispheres.

I have intercepted—I trust I may be forgiven—a letter intended for my correspondent, "Madge," which ought to be very comforting to men who wear stays, or those who would like to wear them if they dared. There is a popular idea that women laugh at the corset-wearing male, much as men laugh at the trouser-wearing female. But some women, it seems, have more liberal ideas. The writer of this letter is one of them. She has two brothers—"both rather distinguished cavalry officers"—who have "worn stays pretty constantly ever since they joined," and so far from ridiculing her brothers, this exemplary young lady is full of admiration for the increased grace thereby afforded to the fraternal figures.

But there is discrimination in this lady's taste—which only makes her opinion the more valuable. That anxiety about the smart fit of a uniform, which is "quite consistent with manly behaviour in the field," she finds to be a very different thing from the vanity of an effeminate youth of her acquaintance, who "is laced every morning by his sister until his waist is the same size as hers—namely, 17 inches." Perhaps I am a little lacking in discrimination myself, but for the life of me I cannot see where the difference comes in. Are stays only becoming to soldiers? Or is a scarlet coat more in need of the support afforded by a corset than the suit of solemn black customary in civil life? If stays are lawful wear for any male, I should have thought that they would be more excusable in a humble individual—say a journalist—who spends his days in a stuffy office poring over a desk, than in a stalwart hero whose life is spent in martial exercises. Anyhow, whenever I see in future a "rather distinguished cavalry officer," with a remarkably neat figure, I shall be wondering whether he is a brother of my fair correspondent.

One of my readers thinks that in my remarks on the subject last week, I have overlooked one of the uses of mourning hatbands. This is his point :—

> I remember, after returning from seven years' service abroad, meeting a friend and inquiring after his wife's health—a most awkward question, as she had, unknown to me, been dead only a few weeks. My friend wore no hatband on his black hat; but had he assumed one, I should have hesitated before making the usual complimentary inquiry.

Am I, then, to take it that the only use of a mourning band is to prevent "awkward questions"? If so, I would suggest that the intimation should be conveyed in a more definite form; for, unless it be in the case of a widower, there is nothing in the mourning band which indicates the precise relationship of its wearer to the deceased. If it be "awkward" to inquire after a person in ignorance of his death, I shall always hesitate in future about inquiring after the relatives of any friend whom I meet with his hat thus embellished. I confess I do not quite understand this awkwardness. In the case above mentioned, the widower evidently preferred to communicate the sad intelligence by word of mouth rather than by his hat; he ought, therefore, to feel no awkwardness in so communicating it. The friend had no means of knowing of the bereavement, and, therefore, ought to feel no awkwardness at showing his ignorance of it. The truth is that to the awkward all things are awkward.

The verses in last week's TRUTH on the Cricket Match Parasol have had, I am glad to say, one practical result. A lady writes that she will cheerfully forego her parasol and wear only the tiniest of bonnets at cricket matches if all the gentlemen round her will cease to blow tobacco smoke into her face. This seems a very fair and reasonable proposal, and I would suggest that an agreement on the subject should be entered into between ladies and gentlemen who find themselves neighbours at cricket matches.

I need not say that the lady just referred to is extremely sensitive to the fumes of tobacco, and she makes a variety of proposals for the benefit of all those who suffer like herself from the consumption of the weed by others. As I fear that I am somewhat of an offender in this respect, it is a little difficult for me to take an impartial view of the subject. After making the best effort I can in this direction, however, I hardly think that public opinion is ripe for one reform advocated by my correspondent, namely, that a separate enclosure—she even goes the length of proposing a set of "kennels"—should be marked off in the Park, somewhere near the Achilles statue, for the exclusive use of smokers. But the lady is on firmer ground when she goes on to complain of the annoyance caused to others by indiscriminate smoking in hotel bedrooms. Now that it seems to be the fashion for every hotel bedroom to have a door communicating with the next room, it is, no doubt, a nuisance to those who object to tobacco smoke to have a man (or even a woman) smoking in the next room at night. My correspondent is residing at a first-class hotel in the West End. She states that she has frequently complained to the manager of smoking in the next bedroom to her own, and the manager blandly replies that it shall not occur again. But it always does. There is the simplest possible way out of this difficulty—namely, to have smoking bedrooms in hotels, like smoking carriages on railways, and to separate them from the other rooms. Nobody could object to this—except, possibly, those ladies who, I am told, are sometimes given to enjoying a cigarette on the sly in their bedrooms, and who might possibly feel some diffidence about asking for a smoking apartment.

The hints given in TRUTH two or three weeks back to the Committee of the M.C.C. gain fresh point from the disgraceful scene at Lord's on the first day of the Australian match last week. It is computed that on this occasion about 25,000 people paid for admission at the gate, of whom not one half had any chance of seeing the play, while probably not more than one in five could see it either properly or in comfort. The result was the encroachment of the would-be spectators on the ground, to the serious embarrassment of the players, which has already been described in the daily papers. As I said the other day in regard to the Oxford and Cambridge match, for the M.C.C. to take the money of the public long after all chance of seeing the game has come to an end, is no better than a fraud. The stand accommodation open to the public should be greatly increased, and even then some indication of the number of people on the ground should be given at the gate, from which the public could judge for themselves before they paid their money what chance they had of seeing anything in return. The truth is that the M.C.C. have enclosed so much space at Lord's for the use of themselves and their friends that the ground has practically become a private one on the occasion of all the great matches, and if the Committee do not take some steps to improve the public accommodation, this state of affairs ought to be taken into account when the fixtures are arranged. It is absurd to hold great matches, like England v. Australia, Gentlemen v. Players, Oxford v. Cambridge, on a ground which only offers proper accommodation for two or three thousand of the general public.

I have received the following verses from an invalid who dates from a part of London which is, I know, specially subject to the nuisance of which my correspondent complains. His stanzas do not, I think, require any comment from me, as they so clearly tell their own tale. I am, however, very pleased to publish them :—

THE DEMON OF NOISE.

With an interest great I've perused what you've said
Of "The Matinée Hat" and "The Opera Head;"
And only last week I had cause to extol
Your most pertinent lines on "The Match Parasol;"
But though these small nuisances doubtless are rife,
They affect, bear in mind, but the pleasures of life;
Whereas I complain, laid up here on the shelf,
Of a pest that embitters existence itself.

How gladly would I, were the chance only mine,
Dodge the "Matinée Hat" and yet never repine;
The "Opera Head," whatsoever its size,
Would ruffle me not, though it tickled my eyes;
Nay, even the "Match Parasol," I avow,
My view to eclipse I would meekly allow;
For I, you must know—for my sins be it said—
Have for more than four months been confined to my bed.

Need I say what this means? When you see my address
I fancy, dear TRUTH, you'll be able to guess.
As a Londoner, you'll understand, I am sure,
What it is, hour by hour, that I have to endure.
You will know what "alarums," what shocks, and what frights
Are the bane of my days and the curse of my nights;
You will guess what it is that my comfort destroys—
That most dreadful of demons—the Demon of Noise!

Of course, in a City like this, I'm aware
To expect perfect quiet would hardly be fair.
I admit certain noises, perforce, must be rife
As a part and a portion of work-a-day life;
In the street there, of course, must be traffic, I know,
The "growlers" must rumble, the 'buses must go;
But what I complain of, in gloom and despair,
Is the unneeded noise that I'm fated to hear!

I complain of the sounds which the tradesmen emit,
For these, I contend, are not needed one bit.
I complain of the milkman's cacophonous cry,
I complain of the butcher's reiterant "Buy!"
I complain of the coster's vociferous yell,
I complain of the muffin-man's irritant bell;
And the howl of the man who purveys for my cat,
In the strongest of ways, I complain, TRUTH, of that!

And what of the organs, that come in relays,
And grind out their tunes till my senses they craze?
And what of the Teutons, who, three times a week,
With discord make all this doomed neighbourhood reek?

"HÔTEL BURLINGTON," AT SUNNY BOSCOMBE. (200 rooms.) Every luxury. Delightful grounds. Magnificent golf links. Sea-water baths. Moderate charges.—Bournemouth East Station.

And what, let me ask, of the merciless set
With the throaty trombone and the cracked flageolet ?
And the Scotchmen with bagpipes, who cruelly dare
Drone something remotely resembling an air ?

So the days pass away; but I cease not to groan,
For I know that the night brings more noise of its own ;
For it's then the church bell at the corner "cling-clangs,"
And the clock seems to strike with more resonant "tangs."
It is then that the revellers pass in a row,
And hiccough obscene comic songs as they go ;
Whilst worse than all else, like some virulent stab,
Comes the sound of the whistle that calls for a cab!

Ah, yes! when the night but for this would be still,
It is then that this whistle is blown with a will.
Shrill, fitful, and strident, it pierces the air
Like the shriek of a banshee, consigned to despair.
So surely as worn by long vigils I doze,
So surely some neighbour his torture-tube blows ;
So surely as I with insomnia fight,
That damnable whistle sounds out through the night!

If the people who selfishly blow it but knew
How it pierces the ear of the invalid through ;
Could they only conceive how it's able to keep
The sick and the weary from health-giving sleep ;
Could they hear how they sigh, could they see how they start,
Could they know how despair find its way to their heart ;
Then methinks a kind impulse at once they'd obey,
And would call cabs at night in some less noisy way.

This much, then, dear Truth, I would ask at your hands,
Please publish my not too-outrageous demands ;
And do what you can to increase London's joys
By trying to lessen its terrible noise ;
Or at least, for the sake of the sick—who, like me,
Are doomed to the victims of selfishness be,
With all your resources unceasingly fight
Those people who whistle for cabs late at night!

I notice a letter in the Globe suggesting that the Victoria Cross Gallery, painted by Chevalier Desanges, should be bought by the nation, and find a home in the National Portrait Gallery. That gallery already has too many portraits of persons who are not—whatever they once might have been—famous, and to add to it all who have obtained the Victoria Cross would be absurd.

Gradually the country houses of our nobility are giving up their art treasures in the shape of Old Masters. The famous Rembrandt, "The Standard Bearer," the gem of the gallery at Warwick Castle, has now been acquired by private purchase from the Earl of Warwick by Mr. Charles Wertheimer, and I understand that the picture, which had previously been believed unsigned, has been found to be signed in full with the date 1654, the best period of the Great Master, and that Mr. Wertheimer again paid a record price.

Sir Henry Stewart Cunningham has written a delightful monograph on Lord Bowen, which has been printed for private circulation, but it is earnestly to be hoped that the book will be published, for it literally swarms with good stories and brilliant mots, while much of the material has been supplied by Bowen's friends and judicial colleagues. Here is a choice sample of Bowen's ready wit. Some one spoke of a work entitled, "A Defence of the Church of England, by a Beneficed Clergyman," whereupon said Bowen, "In other words, a defence of the Thirty-nine Articles, by a bonâ-fide holder for value!" Lord Davey (a most competent authority) described Bowen as a judge combining "the breadth of Lord Mansfield with the accuracy of Lord Wensleydale."

The late Lord Lilford has not lived to complete his monumental work on British birds, on which he has been engaged for eleven years. He did not commence it until after a quarter of a century of preparation. It is, however, satisfactory to learn that the materials for the remainder of the work (three parts out of thirty-five) are in such good order that it will be easy to finish it.

The following lines have been sent to me by an occasional contributor:—

A rabid race, fanatically bold,
And steeled to cruelty by lust of gold,
Traversed the waves, the unknown world explored ;
The cross their standard, but their faith the sword ;
Their steps were graves ; o'er prostrate realms they trod ;
They worshipped Mammon, while they vowed to God.

To prevent misapprehension, I hasten to add that this is not a description of the nineteenth-century English in their pursuit of gold in South Africa, or elsewhere, but the poet Montgomery's picture of the sixteenth-century Spaniards in South America.

Arthur Bourchier intends to revive Foote's old comedy, "The Liar," at the Royalty Theatre. It has been erroneously stated that since the death of Charles Mathews, William Farren has been the only actor to represent young Wilding. But Charles Collette has played the famous part for hundreds of nights in the provinces, and produced it for a series of matinées at the Prince's (now the Prince of Wales's) Theatre in London in April, 1884. On this last occasion Mr. Sydney Brough, Miss Rose Murray, and Miss E. Romer were in the cast. The Aquarium cast of 1878 contained James Fawn, William Farren, Norman Forbes, Charles Collette, Emily Miller, and Marie Litton.

I am asked to call attention to the Grand Bazaar in aid of the Actors' Orphanage Fund, which is being held to-day and to-morrow (July 1 and 2) at Queen's Hall. The object of this bazaar will commend itself to all, and "the profession" are working at it with that enthusiasm which they always show when any charitable object is to be served—nearly all the best known actresses in London being on view at the stalls. The last fact alone ought to be sufficient to secure a huge attendance of the outside public.

The Ford Professorship of English History has just been converted into the Ford Lectureship at a cost of £323. This piece of preferment is worth only £40 a year, and it would be interesting to learn how it comes about that eight years' stipend has been fuddled away in preliminary expenses. Such a monstrous waste of money is peculiarly unseasonable at a time when the University is constantly complaining of inadequate means owing to the falling off in the income. Where on earth did all the money go to, and for so simple a transaction why were such expensive forms necessary ?

The proposal of the Financial Board of Cambridge University to expend £12,000 in purchasing land adjoining the museum was unexpectedly carried at the last Congregation by a very large majority. The opposition was strong, as the scheme had been severely criticised, but there had been a vigorous whip by the supporters of the purchase, so the grace was carried by 149 to 62. The price is regarded as exorbitant, and it is thought that the claims of certain departments (notably geology) are being unjustifiably overlooked. There was no opposition to the purchase of two acres of land from Downing College for £15,000.

Bishop Earle's incumbency at St. Botolph's has not opened auspiciously, for at a largely-attended vestry meeting his appointment was formally censured. Bishop Temple's job is the more flagrant and discreditable, inasmuch as it was originally intended to take away two-thirds of the rector's stipend for poor parishes in the diocese of London, but when the Bishop decided to pitchfork one of his assistant Bishops into the living this project was abandoned. Bishop Earle is to receive the full tithe, and also the rent (£2,000 a year) from Dashwood House, which is the rector's glebe. Bishop Temple's name will occupy a high place in the list of jobbing prelates, for this last achievement of his is quite worthy of such scandalous ecclesiastics as Manners, Sutton, Sparke, North, and Pretyman.

Canon Gore, who will to-day replace Canon Duckworth as the Canon in residence at Westminster Abbey, is to preach on Sunday afternoons during this month, except next Sunday, when Archdeacon Farrar is to be in the pulpit at that service. The special evening services in the nave will be discontinued after the 26th. The Bishop of Rochester is to preach in the evening next Sunday, the Bishop of Ripon on the 19th, and the Master of Trinity on the 26th.

The Bishop of Exeter has invited the Nonconformist ministers of Devonshire to a garden party at his Episcopal Palace. Bishop Bickersteth's indiscretion in composing a special prayer of thanksgiving for the Tory triumph at last year's election has not been forgotten by the Dissenters, and he was roughly criticised at a Bible Christian meeting which was held at Torquay on Thursday. The Diocesan was described as "a very weak man," "a very silly old man," and even in stronger terms. Bishop Bickersteth means well, no doubt, by his present invitation, but it seems to me utterly chimerical to suppose that a more friendly feeling between the Anglican clergy and the Dissenting ministers will be the result of his entertainment.

THE RESTAURANT BURLINGTON, 169, Regent-street, is NOW OPEN. The exquisite cooking and artistic surroundings, combined with the ever-changing panoramic view of Regent-street, make it the most charming salle à manger in London. One is at once reminded of a dîner or déjeuner overlooking the Parisian boulevards.

I would respectfully call the attention of the Curates' Union to a poster of which the following is the substance :—

A TEA
FETE & GALA
In aid of the Llanstadwell Curate's Stipend Fund, will be given
IN THE SPORTS' FIELD
On WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1896.

AUNT SALLY !
SHOOTING GALLERIES !
LAWN TENNIS !
ARCHERY !
COCOANUT SHIES !
ETC., ETC.

It is bad enough to be expected to live upon a curate's stipend, but to be dependent for this exiguous dole upon the proceeds of Aunt Sallies and Cocoanut Shies, and to have the fact advertised all over the countryside in large capitals, is adding insult to injury. If these things are done in the Established Church, what will be done after Disestablishment ?

An incident calculated to excite derision in the profane is reported from Rochester. At a recent Sunday morning service in the Cathedral, Canon Cheyne, in reading the first lesson, omitted certain passages, which he, apparently, considered as not tending to edification. It fell to the Dean to read the second lesson, but before commencing he gravely read out the passages omitted from the first lesson by the Canon. Dean Hole is a bit of a humourist, I believe, and doubtless he remembers the passage in "Don Juan" which records the advantages of furnishing an expurgated work with an appendix.

I have received the following letter from Canon MacColl. When I asked why the Canon is silent about British outrages in Africa, I was not thinking merely of the incident reported from Firket. There have been other outrages of which the Canon might, I think, have obtained "indisputable evidence" had he desired it. The Turk, I know well, is an unspeakable scoundrel; but I never can forget the parable of the beam and the mote, and I often wish that those among us who show such officious anxiety to operate on the eyes of foreign nations were a little more solicitous about our own British optics :—

The Residence, Ripon, June 27, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—I see but a limited number of papers down here, and my time is too much occupied to do more than skim even these. "Canon MacColl," you say, "was right in protesting against Armenian outrages in Asia; but why is he silent about British outrages in Africa?" I answer that my first and only knowledge of such outrages is this paragraph in TRUTH. Christian outrages on Mussulmans are, in my judgment, much worse than Mussulman outrages on Christians, for it is an article of religious faith with the Mussulman to regard non-Mussulman subjects as outlaws, who have practically no rights as against the Mussulman. The system is atrocious, but does not violate the consciences of those who sincerely believe in it. This fact diminishes the guilt of the perpetrators of Turkish outrages on Christians. On the other hand, Christians who commit outrages violate the spirit and the letter of the religion which they profess, and this aggravates their faith.

You ask, "What should we have said if Armenian women had been divided up amongst Turkish troops?" Armenian women have been divided among Turkish troops, and Christian Europe has looked on supinely. As a matter of fact, the women of the Christian subjects of the Sultan are always at the mercy of the Mussulmans, for they have no sort of protectors. Even in the cases of the thousands of forced conversions to Islâm during the last twelvemonths, the women of the Christians were distributed among the Mohammedans, and the bereaved husbands were forced to take fresh wives.

If there was any forced distribution of women at Firket, or course it was infamous; but I happen to know most of the principal officers there, and I believe them to be incapable of such infamy. It would not surprise me to learn that the captured women preferred to be distributed among the troops to restoration to their former masters. It is impossible to apply our ideas as to marriage to a social system in which marriage has practically no existence. I think, at all events, that it would be wrong for me to protest against an outrage of which I have as yet no indisputable evidence. I have never done so in the case of Turkish outrages.—I remain, &c.,

MALCOLM MACCOLL.

A Roman Catholic correspondent tells me that we misuse the term "Suffragan" in England. I believe we do. Every bishop is by rights a suffragan when considered in relation to his metropolitan. This is laid down by Dr. Johnson, with good authority. But if we call an ordinary bishop a suffragan, what are we to call the present Suffragan Bishop? My correspondent suggests that "auxiliary" or "coadjutor-bishop" would be the correct term. I have no objection. But has not the title "suffragan bishop," as we now use it, somehow got settled by Act of Parliament?

Archdeacon Bardsley was one of the most influential and most popular of the Evangelical leaders, and he will be widely missed, for he was a most sensible and broad-minded man. He did much good and sound work both in London and at Bradford, and Archbishop Tait (an excellent judge of men) had a very high opinion of him. He was always most tactful and genial, and was a universal peacemaker. Archdeacon Bardsley was a wonderful organiser and administrator, besides being an admirable preacher and a most powerful platform speaker. The great living of Bradford is in the gift of the Simeon Trustees, while to Bishop Boyd Carpenter falls the Archdeaconry of Craven and a Canonry of Ripon, which together are worth £700 a year.

In the current issue of the Orsett Deanery Magazine the Rev. Canon Whittington refers, as an evidence of "the almost virulent hatred of the Church which marks the minds of some men," to the recent agitation respecting the disposal of a parochial charity at Orsett. From the point of view of the Church, the Canon could scarcely have selected a more unfortunate illustration. What are the facts? It was discovered, as I mentioned at the time, that certain funds intended for the poor had been for many years misappropriated to the maintenance of the services in the parish church. The Charity Commissioners at first suggested that the Church should be left in possession of one-half the income, and that the other half should be given to the poor, but this scheme was strongly opposed and another adopted by which the Church was to retain one-third of the money, a third to go to the poor, and a third to general parochial purposes. The fact that the Nonconformists favoured the second scheme rather than the first is now brought forward by the Canon as a proof of "the spirit of envy, malice, and jealousy" which was displayed towards the Church. I rather fancy that most people will, on the contrary, regard the case as a proof of the unscrupulous rapacity which the Church shows even when she has been detected in the robbery of the poor. The scandalous part of the business is, not that she should have been denied half, but that she should have been granted a third of these charity funds.

It is wonderful how many rare gems of Christian thought—how much of the spirit of charity and tolerance and brotherly love—the diligent reader finds enshrined in the pages of the parish magazines. There is such a magazine for the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-on-Mersey, and in the June number the editor—presumably the vicar or his curate—discourses on the question "Ought Churchmen to go or to give to Chapel?" The answer is a decided negative—not, the writer says, because Church people are better than chapel people, or because chapels have done no good, but "because we cannot think it right for any man to leave God's Church for man's," and "because to set up or support new 'bodies' of Christians is really, however little people may intend it, to act against God." Only the Anglican Church, it is implied, is God's Church. It so happens that this effusion, remarkable equally for its smug self-complacency and its bitter bigotry, has been published just at a time when St. Mary's is indebted to Nonconformists for liberal contributions towards the cost of new Sunday schools. Apparently there is no scruple about accepting the money of those who "act against God" for the purposes of "God's Church."

The following is taken from a characteristic letter which has been addressed to the Burton-on-Trent Evening Gazette by that eccentric cleric, the Vicar of Rosliston, whose scandalous conduct in regard to the parish churchyard I have so often noticed. Mr. Vallancey grossly misrepresents the claim of the parishioners. What they claim is simply the right to keep the graves of their dead relatives and friends in a decent and orderly condition. This successor of the Apostles, on the other hand, insists upon treating God's Acre as in the fullest sense of the word the parson's freehold, and if anybody ventures to trim a grave or cut the grass which grows above it, he promptly sues the "trespasser" for damages. It is a pretty commentary upon the government of the Church of England that, after all his outrageous performances, such a man as the Rev. Vallancey should be allowed to retain a cure of souls:—

DEAR SIR,—It has just occurred to me that one of the little items at work here may not generally be known, namely: Firstly, that the people claim the churchyard as civil parish property; secondly, that they say that the huge amount of one shilling paid to me is not for the breaking up of the grass, but bonâ-fide purchase. "High diddle diddle, the cat in the fiddle!" . . . . I am a Radical Conservative, and a Democratic Tory, and a High-Low-Broad Churchman. I can respect every man who acts clearly according to his conscience, but at the same time, remember that conscience is not a safe guide. We are all more or less right, and more or less wrong; generally more so. Anyhow, I want to be "kind and loving unto every man," except d——d rascals, and the country abounds in them.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN VALLANCEY.

Some rather fine points in Sabbath observance have been perplexing the minds of the unco' guid in Stornoway. It seems that a number of fishing boats returned to the harbour in the early hours of a Sunday morning, and some of the salesmen were disposing of the fish by auction up till five or six o'clock a.m. All the Sabbatarians were agreed that this was a wicked desecration of the day; but on the question as to what should have been done with the fish there were acute differences of opinion. One party were unable to see any objection on conscientious grounds to the herrings being "roused with salt into barrels," and left on the quay till the Monday. Another party were equally convinced that a proper respect for the Sabbath required that the herrings should be merely sprinkled with salt and left in the boats. To avoid the possibility of sin, one crew threw their catch overboard, while another crew would not sell their fish, but gave them away to some strangers. The less scrupulous strangers made about £16 out of the gift. Sabbatarianism in Stornoway has indeed run mad.

Ought an Irish landlord to be compelled to pay tithe rent-charge on land from which he has not received the rent? I am not, I trust, actuated by any spirit of undue partiality for Irish landlords, but it seems to me that the answer to the question should be in the negative. The Irish Land Commissioners, however, think otherwise. On May 28, a Waterford landlord received a peremptory summons from solicitors to pay, within one week, one year and a half tithe rent-charge, due May 1, "together with 3s. 6d., our charges," failing which, the worst was to follow. At the time this notice was received the landlord had not been able to collect the 1895 rent, to say nothing of the rent for the current year. To call on him under these circumstances to pay the tithe rent-charge to date under threat of legal proceedings, and to fine him the price of a solicitor's letter, seems rather sharp practice. But I am told that the practices of the Irish Land Commissioners are often of that character.

A little incident which has recently occurred in the Strangers' Hospital in Rio de Janeiro is worth the notice of young ladies who contemplate taking nurses' engagements abroad. The nurses of this hospital, which is conducted by a committee of English and American gentlemen, decided to decline to nurse cases outside the hospital. On the strength of this decision one of the nurses declined to go to an outside case. The committee summarily dismissed her, and two or three other nurses resigned out of sympathy for her. There was no express undertaking in the nurses' agreements that they should do work outside the hospital, although the agreements were very full and definite upon a great many points (one clause precluding the young ladies from getting engaged to be married). But it seems from the correspondence that the committee took their stand upon its being a general custom for hospital nurses to take outside engagements when required to do so.

Possibly this is the general rule, but it is easy to see that in tropical climates, where, during the fever season, the work in the hospital is very hard, the nurses may feel a reasonable objection to being employed outside in the season when the hospital work is slack. If they do, I can only say, in view of what has happened at Rio de Janeiro, that they must be careful to see that this is properly provided for in their agreements. Seeing the great inconvenience and loss to which a nurse is exposed by being summarily dismissed in a foreign or colonial town, without a right to compensation even to the extent of a passage home, it would seem reasonable to suggest to the managers of such hospitals that their agreements should clearly specify all the duties which the nurses will be expected to perform.

Correspondents in all parts of England continue to send me letters received in connection with the Snowball collection for Guy's Hospital started by a Miss Weston, of "Heather Lea," West Dulwich. This snowball is now actually in its forty-seventh series, and as every one who has contributed has given sixpence, and repeated the letter three times, it would seem that, even making allowance for numerous breakages of the chain, Miss Weston must have received a very considerable sum of money. It will require a very considerable sum, however, to compensate the hospital for the discredit brought upon it by recourse to this means of raising cash, and it is surprising that the hospital authorities should ever have countenanced such a proceeding.

Besides their many other faults, the Charity Commissioners appear to be a disgracefully dilatory body. I have heard of a case in which a scheme was sent down in draft for the signatures of the Trustees, and returned to the Commissioners duly signed, in December last; but although what remained to be done was apparently a mere matter of form, the scheme has not yet been passed, and nothing more has been heard of it by the parties concerned. Another scheme was returned to the Commissioners in December last, and has never since been heard of. I am told that in the latter case a clerk conversant with the work could have done all that remained to be done in one hour; but six months do not suffice for it in the office of the Charity Commissioners. I believe this Commission to be one of the rottenest public bodies in existence, and I trust I may live to see it radically reformed.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Country Holiday Fund for Poor Children:—Mrs. E. B., £2; C. T., 5s.; Gladys and Karin, £2. 2s.; A. B., 10s.; T. H., 2s. 6d.; C. Capel Smith, 10s. 6d.; and A. E., £1.

THE PRINCES' RESTAURANT, Piccadilly, W., now open, is the most elegant and best appointed establishment of the kind in London, where Society can meet to enjoy Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers of the most recherché description. Signor Bocchi's celebrated orchestra performs daily and Sunday during dinner and supper.

MR. JOHN GEORGE MORTLOCK, having heard that many of his customers are under the impression that he is retiring from business, begs emphatically to contradict the rumour. Mr. Mortlock (in conjunction with six of his nearest relatives) continues to conduct the business established by his great-great grandfather, John Mortlock, in 1746.—The Old Pottery Galleries, 466, 468, 470, Oxford-street; 31 & 32, Orchard-street; and 2b, Granville-place, Portman-square, London, W.

It is not a pleasant thing to be always carping at the military authorities, but this disagreeable duty, which too often falls to my lot, is greatly mitigated when I find that the hints which I scatter by the wayside fall upon good ground and bring forth fruit. An instance of this has just occurred at Sheerness in the disappearance from a certain Company of Royal Artillery of an officer whose conduct had attracted a good deal of unfavourable notice. I only hope, for the sake of all parties, that the officer in question may get on better in the post to which he has been transferred.

Is there no definite rule with regard to the right of Medical Officers in the Army to charge fees for attendance on the families of other officers? It is a subject on which I am frequently hearing complaints, from the point of view of both parties concerned, and I have just heard from an officer who evidently thinks it an unwarrantable thing that a certain Medical Officer has made a charge under such circumstances. No doubt Army doctors frequently do attend the families of officers without charge; but this may easily be because they have no desire to create unpleasantness. I do not myself see on what principle an officer can expect to have his wife and children doctored free of charge by a Medical Officer; but if he has such a right, it ought to be clearly laid down, for the sake of all parties concerned.

The extravagant expenditure on the Army Medical Staff is a subject which cries aloud for the intervention of an economical reformer. The net cost of the Department is now £557,000, even after deducting the Indian contribution. Twenty years ago the outlay on the Army Medical Staff was £373,000, and it would be interesting to learn how so prodigious an increase has been occasioned.

There seems to be need for some closer attention to the apportioning of the duties of warrant officers in the Medical Staff Corps. I hear that it is a common thing for such officers to shirk their duties where, as occasionally happens, there is a medical officer in charge who, from having spent a great part of his time in India, or for any other reason, is not fully conversant with the regulations on the subject. A case in point may be seen at one of the Colonial stations, where there is a warrant officer who has so successfully shunted his duties on to his juniors, that he is now attending to nothing but the pay and clothing of the detachment, which is only twenty strong. In other words, the warrant officer is letting himself off with about three hours' work per week.

The first complaint that I have received against No. 18, Victoria-street, since the advent of the new Director-General, comes apropos of the issue of the amended regulations for the Army Medical Service. The critic of these regulations remarks that there are several points on which the Service would be glad to see amendments, and which could at once be ascertained, if the headquarters would make some attempt to get at the ideas and wishes of the Staff at large. From this point of view, it seems to me a pity that when the late vacancy occurred the opportunity was not taken of appointing the new Director-General from outside the office, rather than from within, and thus bringing the Headquarters Staff more into touch with the requirements of the Department. However, the new Director-General has one great advantage in the transfer from Victoria-street of the civilian clerk, whose presence there has been so much objected to. The duties of this clerk are now, I understand, to be chiefly performed by the new professional assistant of the Director-General, Surgeon-Major-General Taylor—a change which ought to do much to allay the dissatisfaction which has hitherto been felt.

In contrast to the shabby and discreditable treatment many military veterans now receive, a correspondent recalls the fact that one of the earliest acts of Mr. Disraeli's first Administration was the publication of a Royal Warrant stating that it had come to her Majesty's knowledge that a number of old soldiers who had served in the Peninsular War and at Waterloo were in a state of destitution, and inviting such men to make themselves known to the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, when they would be granted pensions of 1s. 6d. a day. This resulted in over 400 much-needed pensions being granted, and as an evidence of concern for the welfare of old soldiers it gave a considerable impetus to recruiting. It is high time some similar measure was adopted on behalf of the Crimean and Indian Mutiny veterans who, to the disgrace of the nation, are being gradually killed off by starvation.

An officer who has a son at Sandhurst tells me that the custom is in vogue at the riding-school there of making the cadets practise jumping without reins or stirrups. That is a practice which has been condemned before now in cavalry riding-schools, and experts tell me that it is a frequent cause of serious injury. I question whether it is ever of any use, and I believe it is opposed to the Cavalry Regulations; and to impose such an exercise on youngsters, many of whom are only beginning to ride, and may not even be going into cavalry regiments, seems most unjustifiable.

Can any of my military readers tell me whether there is any rule in the Army Act, or the Queen's Regulations, or anywhere else, which forbids soldiers to belong to secret societies? A Service correspondent in India gravely suggests that not only is there a rule of this kind, but that Freemasons come within the scope of the rule. Seeing the extent to which Masonry flourishes in the Army, I can hardly suppose that there is any ground for this opinion, but judging by some of the stories which occasionally reach me respecting the results of Freemasonry among military men, it would be no bad thing if such a Regulation did exist.

CARPET BEATING SEASON.—The Queen says: "A good place to send carpets to is the Compressed Air Carpet and Tapestry Cleaning Company, Brook Green, Hammersmith, W. Dust blown out. No beaters used." To prevent deception carpets cleaned by this process bear the Trade Mark on the back.

In response to numerous requests, I make this week the experiment of starting a Military Pillory on somewhat similar lines to the TRUTH Legal Pillory. It has occurred to me that in this way I may be able to deal with some few of the cases of individual injustice or local grievances which are brought under my notice in such numbers, not only with better effect, and with more convenience to my readers, but eventually with a reduced expenditure of my space; though I cannot undertake to make the Military Pillory a regular weekly institution.

Very appropriately, the first place in the new Pillory is accorded to the 2nd Berkshire, a regiment which has of late been the scene of a very large number of undesirable incidents that have been noticed in local and Service papers as well as in TRUTH. Sergeant Sayers, whose case is here dealt with, is a man of nearly ten years' service, possessing a Field Work Certificate, a First-class Education Certificate, and other distinctions, and having no serious mark upon his record. It is clear upon the facts that he did not have justice, because there is the greatest doubt whether he did not leave his post under a bonâ-fide belief that he had permission to do so; and by every principle of justice he ought to have had the benefit of this doubt. Not only is he convicted on inconclusive evidence, but he is punished with most exceptional severity. The explanation apparently is that in several recent Courts-martial he has acted as "prisoner's friend," and in one or two cases has secured an acquittal. Whatever may be thought of the prudence of a man who thus assumes the post of advocatus diaboli in opposition to the military authorities, there can be no question that if a soldier is allowed to assume this duty, and by reason of his education and ability performs the duty successfully, it is a paltry and despicable act to persecute him upon the strength of it. All the circumstances of this case point to a determination in certain quarters to bowl Sayers out, and I am in a position to say that his conviction and sentence have done much to aggravate the undesirable spirit which recent occurrences have created in the battalion. As regards the other cases summarised below, I cite the one from the Guards' Depot as an example of the unreasonable treatment which subjects a man, shown by the result to have a legitimate grievance, to the stigma of a "severe reprimand" merely for a technical error in attempting to get his grievance redressed. The facts in regard to the Medical Staff Corps at Shorncliffe point to very serious overwork, which calls for some immediate alteration in the arrangements; and the case from Lichfield seems to be a flagrant breach of the Regulations:—

2nd Royal Berkshire Regiment, Devonport.—Sergeant Sayers, charged before a District Court-martial with leaving his post without leave while acting as sergeant on gate duty. The prisoner, who had been acting as "prisoner's friend" for another N.C.O. under remand for Court-martial, obtained leave from Colour-Sergeant Firth, acting as Sergeant-Major, to exchange duty with another N.C.O. and go into Plymouth, where he had an appointment with a solicitor who was preparing the defence. Firth gave evidence that he subsequently informed prisoner personally that this permission was cancelled. The prisoner alleged that he did not understand this, but supposed that Firth merely withdrew the permission to leave barracks. He did not leave barracks, but got the solicitor to come up and see him, and exchanged duty with a corporal when the solicitor arrived. This was the offence alleged. In cross-examination, Firth admitted that on a previous occasion he had himself been reported by prisoner for absence from duty. Firth had also sent a message by a lance-corporal to tell the prisoner that he had cancelled "that order." The lance-corporal, however, when called, admitted that he himself did not know what order was referred to, and that he did not think the prisoner knew. A witness was called for the defence, who stated that he overheard the conversation between Firth and the prisoner, and that what Firth said was, "You are not to leave barracks, and mind that you don't." On this evidence Sayers was convicted and sentenced to be reduced to the ranks.

Guards' Depot, Caterham.—A sergeant, while drilling a squad, drops his pace sticks, which are trodden on and broken by one of the men. He goes before his company officer with a requisition for new ones, there being a fund for the purpose, and is told that he must have broken the sticks by tapping the men's rifles with them, and must pay for new ones himself. He subsequently asks the sergeant-major in the orderly room if he can see the C.O. Next day, the C.O. being away, he is brought before the senior Major, and told that he has been guilty of very improper conduct in applying to see the C.O. without the permission of his company officer. The C.O., on his return, tells him that if he had not a clean defaulter-sheet he would have been tried by a District Court-martial, and that in consideration of his good character he would be let off with being "severely reprimanded." The question of the sticks is then gone into on its merits, and the C.O. excuses the man from paying for them.

Station Hospital, Shorncliffe.—There is here a detachment of nineteen men of the M.S.C., of whom sixteen are, or were up to a recent date, actually employed at the Station Hospital, the others being at the camp Auxiliary Hospital. The daily duties of the men in the hospital extend from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. For the night duty, i.e., from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m., there are fifteen men available, of whom six come on duty each night in reliefs of two hours on and four hours off, with the exception of one who only comes on night duty at 2 a.m. It follows that the men are occasionally on night duty on alternate nights, and that they can never get more than two nights in bed for one night on duty. When on night duty they are practically at work for twenty-four hours in succession, save for the two broken rests of four hours each which they get during the night.

38th Regimental District, Lichfield.—A vacancy having occurred for a Sergeant-Instructor of Volunteers, an N.C.O. of the South Staffordshire Regiment has been appointed to it, whose name was not on the C.O.'s list of candidates, kept in pursuance of Sect. xviii., para. 45, Queen's Regulations. There were three names on this list, one of them that of a man who has been highly recommended by his C.O., and by para. 46 of the same Section, the senior on the list ought clearly to be posted to the vacancy.

When there are so many things in and about our military service loudly calling for alteration or reform, it is somewhat startling to hear of contemplated changes in a direction where things would be much better left as they are. It would appear that Lord Wolseley has conceived the idea of moving the Duke of York's Military School from Chelsea to make room for a central military hospital. If the present hospital accommodation for the troops stationed in London is insufficient, a statement which (if made) I take leave to doubt, there should be means of increasing the capacity of the Guards' hospitals in Vincent-square and Rochester-row without incurring the expenditure which would necessarily attend such a scheme as the one referred to.

I am curious to know how many soldiers get the benefit of the paragraph in the Queen's Regulations which makes provision for soldiers of five years' service and upwards being transferred to the Army Reserve before the expiration of their periods of Army Service. Soldiers frequently complain that when they have registered their names for the Reserve under this paragraph, no practical result ever follows. I had a growl on the subject quite recently from a man of ten years' service, who registered his name with the full approval of his C.O. nine months ago, but has not yet been transferred, and sees no prospect of that result, although the list is sent up from month to month in the regimental returns. The paragraph itself only provides for the transfer of men "when the exigencies of the Service permit," and I expect that the exigencies of the Service permit it very seldom, if ever.

The question then arises, Why do the authorities trouble themselves to draw up and publish such a regulation? It is suggested that it is done purely with an eye to recruiting. When a recruit manifests reluctance to engage himself for so long a period of Service as seven or twelve years, the recruiting-sergeant points to this Regulation, and says, "You see you can always apply after five years for transfer to the Reserve under this section." This seems a very plausible explanation of the section, and quite in keeping with the spirit in which literature is compiled at the War Office for the consumption of recruits.

The life of Thomas Atkins in India seems to be perpetually clouded by trouble of one kind or another in regard to his beer. A Battalion Order of the 2nd Inniskilling Fusiliers recently announced that the price of beer would in future be five annas per quart. I understand that this is local beer, that the brewery is only five miles from the barracks, and that four annas per quart is an outside price for country beer. Further, it is stated that three miles away there is a convalescent depot where the very same beer is sold at four annas. What is the meaning of the extra anna? One would think that it would not be a difficult thing to make some practical arrangement for supplying a certain quality of beer at a certain price to the whole of the British Army, whether at home or abroad; and there is at least one well-known firm of brewers who have signified their readiness to undertake such a contract. Only the jobbery and corruption connected with the canteen beer supply stands in the way of such an arrangement.

Here is a letter which is worthy of notice, as illustrating some of the small annoyances which make our friend Tommy discontented with his lot:—

I should like to tell you a few incidents which happened on the march of a certain regiment from Meerut to Lucknow.

1. On arrival at Alligah there was a three days' horse-fair going on, but orders were issued that no man was to leave the camp in the direction of the city because small-pox was very bad there. Strange to say, this did not prevent officers, warrant officers, and even native cooks and camp-followers, from going in and out as they pleased, and attending the fireworks in the evening. Can you explain why officers, &c., are less likely to catch small-pox than common soldiers?

2. Before arrival at Cawnpore the C.O. asked if the battalion would like to stay a day in the town and have a look round. They all said "Yes," but it turned out that there was small-pox at Cawnpore also. An order was therefore issued that those who wished to see the Well would fall in and be marched there, and that those who did not would have to do an hour's squad drill. A good many chose the squad drill rather than be treated like a lot of children, although they knew that by so doing they risked incurring the C.O.'s displeasure.

3. On arrival at Lucknow all the bazaars were placed "out of bounds," and civil lines are out of bounds as a matter of course; a soldier not being considered fit to come into the same street as an Anglo-Indian civilian. Even places of worship are considered too sacred to be polluted by a soldier, and the only places not out of bounds are the Residency and the Museum. The result is that a soldier can hardly take a walk in Lucknow in the evening without being met by the garrison police and marched off to the garrison guard-room for being out of bounds. But it ought to be mentioned that in this respect officers, warrant officers, and sergeants are not classed as soldiers.

I should much like to know on what principle a C.O., when he gets up a pleasure excursion for the regiment to pay a visit to a place of historical interest like the Well at Cawnpore, orders squad drill for all the men who do not care for the treat.

A district court-martial recently passed a sentence of six months' hard labour upon a man who, while drunk, had aimed a blow at a sergeant, but had not actually struck him. In a general way, I am no advocate for absolving offenders whose only defence is drunkenness; but in a case where the whole gist of the offence lies in the spirit in which the act was done, then the plea of drunkenness ought to have some weight. If, as seems to have been the case here, the man was so drunk as not to know the difference between a sergeant and a private, he clearly meant no more in attempting to strike the sergeant than he would have done had he struck a private; and there could hardly be a serious offence against discipline under such circumstances.

Can anybody connected with the 2nd Royal Scots Fusiliers inform me what has been done with the sum of money which was collected in the summer of 1894 to place a stone over the grave of a colour-sergeant? The question is of some importance, not only as a matter of principle, but because another man in the regiment has died recently, and, the last tombstone never having been erected, there is a natural reluctance among the deceased man's comrades to subscribe for a tombstone, until they know what has become of the money collected in the former case.

May I suggest to those in command of the Channel Fleet, whether now or on future occasions, that they might show a little more consideration for the natural desire of their men to have a closer look than can be obtained from aboard ship at those parts of the British Isles which the Fleet periodically visits. "For two months," writes a naval correspondent, "the Fleet has been cruising among some of the grandest scenery in our Islands; and the men have only had the privilege of a run on shore one watch one night, and the other watch two nights. Yet directly the anchor is dropped the officers swarm on shore, equipped with tennis-bats, golf-sticks, walking-shoes, and every means of enjoying themselves." It seems to me that a little more consideration for the natural wishes of the crews in this respect might, among other things, do much to popularise the Service and stimulate recruiting.

Moreover, there is a great deal of grumbling among Naval petty officers and men in consequence of the attempts which have lately been made to prevent them from wearing plain clothes when they are on shore. It is grossly unfair to refuse them this privilege, considering that officers may wear plain clothes whenever they please. Such a vexatious restriction is the more to be deprecated because it is wholly unnecessary, and can be due only to mere "cussedness" on the part of some official pedant.

There is also a growing sense of dissatisfaction among junior Accountant Officers in the Navy at the small and gradually diminishing allowance of home as compared with foreign service. It was always small, but it is growing beautifully less, and at present the utmost time that an officer of this class can expect to serve in England after a commission of from three to three and a half years abroad, is four to six months—with a prospect of even less in future. This result is due to the policy of the Admiralty in reducing the complement of juniors to ships at home—there is now one where there used to be three—and appointing officers in excess of the complement to ships abroad. So far from this course being justified by the requirements of the Service—as the Admiralty seem to think—I am told by experts that the work to be done is immensely greater at home than it is abroad. Requests have been frequently made from ships on home stations for extra help, but without effect, though there are plenty of officers for the purpose if they were properly distributed. There is the more need for "My Lords" to give their attention to this subject, in view of the inequitable treatment of the same officers in regard to home and foreign service when they rise to the rank of Paymasters.

I read in a Jersey paper the following :—

> A French torpedo boat entered St. Helier's harbour yesterday, and, at about 6.30 last evening, an officer and two men were to be observed deliberately taking soundings at various spots just outside the fort.

No one entertains a more friendly feeling towards France than I do. But is not this somewhat contrary to usage between the best of friends ?

Lord Charles Beresford has described the Director of Transports as an officer who has practically no duties to perform, and he doubtless knows very well what he is talking about. Under these circumstances, it is scandalous that the said Director should receive nearly £2,500 a year with a furnished official residence. The post is about to be vacated, and it certainly ought not to be filled up.

The troopship Malabar has been paid off, and she will be dismantled after nearly thirty years of constant service. She is to be converted into a coal hulk at Bermuda.

A contemporary reports, with much complacency, that the Renown is being so "splendidly" fitted out that by the time she is ready for the Admiral's flag she will be "a floating palace." Dear me! I should think it is time for some one to interfere decisively in order to prevent such fatuous and fantastical extravagance. The floating boudoirs in which some Sybarites boldly encounter the perils of the Solent are bad enough, but it is really too much if we are to have flagships of the same description.

"LIBERTY" SUMMER SALE (this day and daily during July) of Dress and Furnishing Fabrics at greatly reduced prices.—LIBERTY & Co., Regent-street, London.

In a letter from Perim a correspondent indignantly denounces the callous and needless way in which the crews of many of the inferior class of ocean "tramps," colliers, traders, and so on, are exposed to sickness and death from the terrific heat of the sun in the Red Sea. "Many of these vessels that pass Perim daily are," he writes, "almost without a vestige of awning to shield the crew from the sun, which, I need hardly tell you, is fearfully strong during the summer in the Red Sea—more so even than in the Indian Ocean or the Bay of Bengal." The result of this want of proper protection is that many of the men are struck down with sunstroke or heat apoplexy. On the better class of vessels the crews are protected as far as possible from the effects of the heat, and one would think that, apart from any considerations of humanity, it would in the long run pay the owners of all craft to similarly safeguard the health of their men.

In reference to my last week's article on the Trooping Service, I am told that the Canning is not a hired transport, but a troopship belonging to the Indian Marine, and therefore a sister ship to the Clive. By all accounts the two sisters are a very pretty pair. I would take this opportunity of pointing out to the compilers of the most popular books of reference that the existence of the Indian Marine seems to have escaped their notice. I was in some doubt about the Canning last week just before going to press, and endeavoured to satisfy my doubts by reference to the ordinary channels of information, but unsuccessfully. The Navy List does not recognise the Indian Marine, although it gives the names of certain Indian Coast Defence vessels and of the last of the old Admiralty troopships. The Indian Marine belongs technically, I suppose, to the Queen-Empress as much as to the Royal Navy, and these ships ought surely to be included in the Navy List. But what surprises me most of all is that the Indian Marine is entirely omitted from that mine of universal information—Whitaker's Almanack. It is the first time that I ever referred to that source of knowledge in vain.

I am not sorry to find that the Canning is a Government ship, because it shows that the Clive, of which so horrible a picture was recently given in these columns, is not an exceptional example of the defects of the Indian Government troopships. The gentleman who sends me the correction mentioned above thinks that I have been unjust to the hired transports, and says that he has heard officers of the Indian Army speak very highly of the improvement of the service under the hired transport system. But he need not have told me this, for only a few weeks back I published extracts from a letter from a medical officer, who wrote strongly in praise of the hired-transports as compared with the old troopers. When publishing that letter, however, I expressed a doubt as to whether the improvement might be as distinctly visible to Tommy Atkins as it is to his superior officers; and this doubt was more than justified by the evidence, which I gave last week respecting hired transports. On reference to my article, it will be seen that three hired transports were there mentioned, besides the Government troopships Clive and Canning.

An extraordinary amount of correspondence continues to reach me respecting the shortcomings of the P. & O. service to India. Practically, all complaints are summed up in a letter from one officer lately commanding a cavalry regiment in India, who writes :—

The points to which attention should be called are these :—(1) Excessive crowding of the ships on many occasions ; (2) the indifferent fare provided on many of the ships ; (3) the exorbitant prices charged for extras, in the way of wines, spirits, and especially mineral waters. No soda or other water can be procured either in first or second class for less than 6d. per bottle, which is practically a prohibitive price to the humbler class of passengers. When touring in India I have heard complaints on all these heads, as well as against the excessive fares to which you have already alluded.

It also appears, from numerous letters that I have received, that the chief consideration which induces Anglo-Indians to give a preference to the P. and O. is the weekly service and the punctuality of the boats. Now that this is so clear, it will be strange if no attempt is made to break down the P. and O. monopoly.

The recent reference to the subject in TRUTH has brought me several further examples of the extortion which is practised by some shipping and forwarding agents. One correspondent had about a dozen boxes of goods transhipped in London and forwarded to a port in the Adriatic. The amount actually paid for freight was £5 ; but by a series of most excessive charges—the charge for warehousing the boxes for two or three days exceeding, for instance, a week's rent of a fashionable first-floor apartment in Mayfair—the agents employed in the business managed to pile up a bill for £32 odd, and this had to be paid before the goods could be got from the Customs at the Adriatic port. Other correspondents tell similar stories, and the moral seems to be, as I suggested last week, that persons having to despatch goods abroad should not employ forwarding agents, but deal directly with the railway or shipping companies. The latter will charge only the bare freight, and in the vast majority of cases there is no need whatever of any intermediate agents.

At different times reference has been made in TRUTH to the grievances of Departmental warrant officers in the service of the Indian Government. From a statement lately circulated, I gather that an organised effort is now being made to bring this matter before the attention of the Government, and I wish it every success. These Indian warrant officers complain that the great majority of them have not the remotest chance of promotion, and that they are paid less than any men of corresponding rank in the Home Service ; and as they are in precisely the same position now as they were twenty-eight years ago, in which period nearly every section of the Army has received valuable concessions of one kind or another, while the conditions of life in India have undergone a complete change, it seems high time that their case should be looked into.

A lamentable picture is drawn in the Pioneer of the treatment of third-class passengers on the Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway, more especially in regard to overcrowding. An Indian correspondent tells me that in Madras things are every bit as bad as in Northern India. I suppose that, as in England, third-class traffic has been growing, and the railway officials decline to take cognizance of the fact. The Indian Government can practically do what it likes with the railways, and it ought to look after the interest of the third-class passenger.

Intending candidates for the Civil Service might do well to note the following case. After two years' preparation a candidate living at Belfast succeeded in passing the examination for a clerkship of the second division, and by order of the Commissioners he submitted himself for medical examination by a local doctor. Never having had a week's illness, and being of strong constitution, he was startled to hear from the Commissioners that "they were unable to ascertain that he was free from defect or disease likely to interfere with the proper discharge of his duties." The nature of the "defect or disease" was not specified, and two other local doctors whom he consulted certified that he was in perfect health. He then applied to the Commissioners for a further examination, and they requested him to attend a medical Board in London. He did so, paying six guineas in fees and his travelling expenses, and the Board agreed that he was in excellent health. Nevertheless he was informed that the Commissioners could not recommend him for acceptance in the service on account of his family history. It was the first time this reason had been assigned, and the facts were that his mother died of consumption consequent upon pleurisy at the age of forty-seven, and one of his brothers also died of the same complaint, but that his surviving relatives had been uniformly healthy.

In the regulations as to the requisite standard of health for the Civil Service many causes for rejection are specified, but bad family history is not one of them. If it is to be treated as one, the fact should be made known, so that candidates may not waste time and money in passing examinations only to be rejected on such grounds. The sense of grievance in this instance is accentuated also by the knowledge that the Commissioners have not been equally exacting with all candidates.

A case is reported of a clerk in the Savings' Bank Department of less than twelve months' standing who has recently gone out of his mind, and it is suggested that this calamity is the result of the over-work and worry to which the young fellow has been subjected in the office. This occurrence is the more significant in view of the evidence afforded by the case above cited as to the stringency of the Civil Service medical examination. Seeing the importance attached in the Belfast case to family antecedents, it must be taken that the family history of the Savings' Bank clerk was satisfactory, and that he had no taint of insanity about him at the time he was passed.

The protests continually made against sweating in the Savings' Bank Department have not up to the present produced any visible results; on the contrary, matters are said to be going from bad to worse, and complaints are specially strong about the bullying and terrorism exercised over the junior members of the staff.

That the public suffer by the sweating of postmen, sorters, and telegraph clerks there is no room for doubt, and I should very much like to know whether any similar result follows from the present system of management in the Savings' Bank Department. The chief matter of complaint is the system of "piecework," that is to say, the apportionment of a specified task to a specified time. For instance, a Savings' Bank clerk is expected to examine and write up so many depositors' books in an hour. Twenty years ago the number of books was fixed at twenty. During these twenty years the average amount of deposits has enormously increased, involving a corresponding addition to the clerk's hour's work, and I am told that it often happens now that to check and calculate the interest due on twenty accounts in the hour allowed for the purpose is all but impossible. To say nothing of the effect upon the clerk himself, the work constantly done in this way at the highest pressure must necessarily be often inaccurate. To what extent the inaccuracies are allowed to pass I have no means of saying, but in view of the above fact I should strongly advise every depositor in the Savings' Bank to check for himself the interest periodically credited to him.

A telegram was despatched the other day from Croydon at 11.28 a.m. and delivered at Woking at 1.3 p.m. A cyclist tells me that he would undertake to do the whole distance in an hour. If this is so, it seems about time that the Post Office employed bicycles in the place of telegraph wires for short distances. The particular telegram referred to above reached Woking at 12.27, having, therefore, been just one hour in transmission over the wires, which points to the most inexcusable dilatoriness somewhere.

One of the circulars of a Paris garbage-monger, who has lately flooded the British Empire with his advertisements, has just been returned to me from the Island of St. Vincent. The thing is more offensive than anything of this class that I have hitherto seen sent through the post unsolicited, and the gentleman who forwards it tells me that it happened to fall into the hands of one of the ladies of his family. It is really an intolerable thing that the Post Office should persist in subjecting the public in any part of the world to this form of annoyance; and the remedy being so easy, if the Postmaster-General persists in his attitude on this question, it will really become necessary to treat him as particeps criminis.

Gratis and post free, very elaborately-illustrated Price Lists, showing exact sizes of Havana Cigars issued by the HAVANA Trading Association, 177, Piccadilly.—C. A. Carlin, Gen. Manager.

My sympathies have been awakened by a complaint on behalf of a lady who, being the principal creditor in her son's bankruptcy, has received from the Official Receiver a statement of affairs, posted at the halfpenny rate in an open envelope, for the edification of anybody who chose to pry into it. Considering the handsome share of every estate which falls to the lot of the lawyers and officials concerned in the liquidation, a few halfpence for postage stamps really ought not to be grudged where third parties are concerned.

I mention this matter because such abuses of the halfpenny post are far too common. In my private capacity I receive every week shoals of circulars in open envelopes, mostly Company prospectuses. The mining prospectuses alone seem to have come lately at the rate of two or three per diem. I shoot these things into the waste-paper basket almost without looking at them, and probably most people do the same. But every now and then some printed document of importance comes in the same way, and runs every chance of being overlooked. Now that circulars are delivered in such numbers that no one can attempt to read them, it ought to be the rule to send all private letters and documents requiring personal attention in closed envelopes.

I have been much interested by a letter the writer of which is a gentleman who begins by telling me that he does not agree with me in politics, and then goes on to denounce in vigorous terms the abuses connected with the office of High Sheriff. As he very justly observes, the practice of imposing this office upon a man compulsorily, and thereby subjecting him to an enormous expense regardless of his capacity to bear it, and all for no other purpose than to gratify the vanity of her Majesty's Judges when they go on circuit, is on a level with the worst abuses of arbitrary taxation in the time of the Tudors and Stuarts. The following remark specially strikes me:—

> In days long past this office of High Sheriff may have been a useful one, but by legislation, custom, and the march of events, it has been eviscerated—in plain English, gutted—of all use and true honour, and only the shell remains.

The process here described is one which is constantly going on in regard to all our institutions, social and political. By "legislation, custom, and the march of events," the institutions of one age become unsuited to the conditions of the next. Those who desire to bring our institutions into harmony with the circumstances and requirements of the present age are called Radicals. Those who desire to preserve the old institutions which have been "eviscerated—in plain English, gutted—of all use and true honour," are called Conservatives. It is because there are so many gentlemen like my correspondent who do not agree with me in politics that such antiquities, devoid of all use and honour, remain in existence to afflict later generations. The moral of my correspondent's complaint seems to me to be that those who have abuses to complain of should cease to disagree with me in politics, and devote themselves to remedying all such abuses.

I often notice that people who disagree with me in politics write very earnestly to ventilate little social or political grievances of their own. But if men want their own grievances redressed, they must cease to think about them exclusively, and cultivate an equal amount of sympathy for the grievances of all classes. As long as they offer a general resistance to all efforts to bring our institutions up to date, they must accept with the best grace they can any little inconvenience to themselves which results from the perpetuation of anachronisms My friend who is suffering so heavily under the office of High Sheriff mentions that a Bill removing the grievance was brought into the House of Lords, but the House of Lords declined to look at it. If you will have a House of Lords, what else can you expect?

At the Colwyn Urban District Council, the Reverend Mr. Venables Williams moved "That we do not make fools of ourselves;" this having been seconded, the chairman was asked whether the resolution was Parliamentary? He replied that it was, and put the motion. I trust that the chairman is right in his ruling; for, if so, large possibilities are opened out for the drafting of amendments in the House of Commons.

In the Irish Constabulary there is, I hear, actually rule in force which forbids the wife of a constable to carry on business as a dressmaker while her husband is in the force. Whether the rule extends to other trades than dressmaking I do not know; but it is a monstrous thing that such a rule should exist at all. To save any misapprehension, I may mention that I have not had any complaint on this subject from the Irish Constabulary itself, but the fact has been brought under my notice by a gentleman in London, who knows a case in which a woman has thus been prevented from helping to support her family, she being a woman who is capable of earning fully a pound a week. The Irish Members, as a rule, have no cause to love the Constabulary; but I really think that this is a matter which they ought to ventilate in Parliament.

At Birkdale the other day the justices granted a licence to allow the waywardens of the Southport District Highway Board to contract with the Board for the cartage of materials for the roads. This licensing of waywardens for such a purpose reveals a very curious and anomalous state of things. In the case of all other local governing authorities it is illegal for the members to enter into contracts or trade in any way with the body to which they belong; but it seems that under section 20 of the Highway Act of 1864 this wholesome restriction does not apply to Highway Boards, provided they can obtain a licence from the justices. The Southport Board, with the concurrence of the magistrates, has taken full advantage of this provision of the Act. During nine months of last year, for instance, the sum of £513 was spent by the Board for cartages in the township of Formby; and of this amount no less than £470 went into the pocket of the Chairman of the Board. Even if it were proved that the chairman did the carting more satisfactorily and economically than any other contractor could have done it, that would not remove the objections to such a system of dealing with public work, and it is surprising that the justices should be ready to grant the necessary licence. There might be some excuse for employing a member of a Board in some out-of-the-way district where nobody else could be found to accept the contract; but it is ridiculous to suppose that there can be any difficulty of that nature in a township of the size and population of Formby.

Some time ago a young man named George McCabe was found guilty of a grave offence at Chester Assizes, and sentenced by Mr. Justice Day to twenty years' penal servitude. In reply to a memorial on the prisoner's behalf, the Home Secretary has just intimated that he cannot interfere with the sentence at present, but that the case will not be lost sight of; and in announcing this decision a local paper makes a curious statement concerning the trial. It seems that as McCabe was without money some friends raised a fund and handed it over to a Liverpool solicitor, who undertook to conduct the defence. It is asserted, however, that the solicitor neither attended at the trial himself nor briefed counsel. Be this as it may, however, it is certain that McCabe was undefended, and the witnesses who should have been called on his behalf were not examined. There appears to be an impression that but for this the result of the trial might have been different; and the conduct of the solicitor in question is deserving, if the facts are correctly stated, of the fullest exposure and severest censure.

Far be it from me to say a word in deprecation of any legitimate action for maintaining rights of way for the public; but there seems to have been no excuse whatever for the course which was taken a few days since in prosecuting a farmer named Thurman at Essex Assizes for obstructing a footpath at Tendring. The allegation of the prosecution was that the defendant had reduced the path in width by ploughing away part of it; but witnesses for the defence showed that the path was really as wide as it had always been, and the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. It is a singular thing that such a trumpery dispute should ever have been made the subject of an indictment in a criminal court; and still more singular is it to observe that the Rector took a leading part on the side of the prosecution. One would have thought that a clergyman would have exerted his influence to prevent a frivolous prosecution which has only resulted in saddling both the defendant and the ratepayers with a heavy bill of costs.

The Oldham Bench continue their reprehensible practice of dealing summarily with cases of outrages on female children which ought to be sent for trial at the Quarter Sessions or Assizes. There was an instance the other day when a father—a widower—was charged with disgraceful assaults on his daughter, a girl of fourteen, and also with attempted assaults on three other little children in a public park. Notwithstanding the seriousness of the case no depositions were taken, and the magistrates had apparently decided before hearing the evidence not to commit the accused for trial, but to reduce the charge to one of aggavated assault and dispose of it themselves. This they did, the prisoner being allowed to escape with the utterly inadequate sentence of two months' imprisonment. The conduct of the Oldham Shallows in matters of this kind is a gross scandal, and I am not surprised to hear that it has aroused a strong feeling of indignation among the local public.

A point of some interest, more especially to married women with their own banking accounts, and to their bankers, was raised at West London Police-court last week. There was a charge against a gentleman of forging his wife's name to a number of cheques drawn on a bank where she had an account; but the prosecution had to be abandoned owing to the fact that as the couple were living together at the time of the alleged forgery the evidence of the wife against her husband was not admissible. As the magistrate remarked, "it amounted to something like a miscarriage of justice;" but such is the law, and however asinine it may be, it has to be followed. If, therefore, a man desires to appropriate his wife's money he can, so long as he is living with her at the time, forge her name to a cheque without fear of the consequences.

To anybody who is dissatisfied with his or her tailor's or dressmaker's work a judgment just given in the Cupar Sheriff Court may afford a useful lesson. An Edinburgh firm sued a gentleman and his wife for the price of two costumes which they had made for the lady. The garments did not fit, and, after being sent backwards and forwards for alterations no fewer than nine times, they were finally, at the end of nearly three months, rejected as unsuitable. Without entering at all into the question of fit, Sheriff-Substitute Henderson held that the defenders were liable for the amount claimed, on the ground that when the garments were originally supplied they did not reject, or express any intention of rejecting, them. According to this decision, if you are supplied with misfitting clothes, the wisest thing to do is to refuse them at once, for if, out of consideration for the tailor, you give him a chance of altering his work, it will be judicially construed—in Cupar, at any rate—into an acceptance of the goods. The decision does not seem to me quite fair to the customer, nor do I think that in the long run it would, if held good, be of much advantage to the tradesmen.

Last week Mr. Alderman Truscott committed a man named Izzard to gaol for seven days in default of paying a fine of 20s. for furiously riding a bicycle up Cornhill. It appeared that the defendant was employed in delivering evening papers. A City correspondent sends me the report with the suggestion that the sentence is worthy of a place in my Legal Pillory; but whether he considers it too severe or too lenient he does not explain. For my own part, I see nothing in it to which exception can be taken. Certainly, I have no sympathy with the cyclist. The scorcher is a big enough nuisance on any road, but it is especially desirable that his appearance in busy thoroughfares in town, whether he is on business or pleasure bent, should be checked with a firm hand.

With reference to a note in a recent issue respecting a County Court case in which a man was sued for throwing a stone and so killing a dog which had attacked his child, a solicitor at Yeovil writes that Judge Philbrick did not say that "it was right for the father to protect his child, but that it must not be done to excess." To this I can only reply that the remark was so given in a newspaper report of the case. The solicitor further states that the dog had gone some distance away when the father threw at it, and that he, therefore, acted vindictively and not in order to protect his child. On this point, however, there was a direct conflict of evidence between the parties, and the balance of testimony seemed to me in favour of the defendant.

So surely as the Assizes come round, so surely do the judges have to lecture the magistracy upon the question of bail. In Glamorganshire last week, Mr. Justice Wright drew attention to three scandalous instances in which men who were found to be innocent had been kept in gaol for considerable periods on trumpery charges of theft through the failure of the committing justices to allow bail. One man against whom, as it turned out, there was not a shadow of evidence, had been kept in custody for two months; and another, whose case was disposed of by the grand jury, for three months. But however often the judges may advise and admonish them, it seems impossible to get some thick-headed members of the Great Unpaid to act with any sense or discretion in such matters.

Referring to a paragraph in last week's TRUTH a correspondent writes:—

> You seem to consider Mr. Justice Grantham a severe judge. What about this case?
> "At Bedford yesterday a straw-hat worker from Luton, named Robinson, was sentenced by Mr. Justice Grantham to fifteen months' imprisonment for placing a sleeper on the Great Northern Railway, whereby the train was nearly wrecked. Robinson is twenty-three years of age and this is his twentieth conviction."
> This does not strike me as an excessive sentence for such a crime; on the contrary, it was a long way too merciful.

Just so. But it is in regard to his sentences on previously-convicted prisoners for ordinary offences against property that complaint is made of Mr. Justice Grantham's severity. This man Robinson appears to have been only guilty of a diabolical attempt at wholesale murder, and so in spite of his nineteen previous convictions he escapes with fifteen months' hard labour. If, now, he had been convicted on some charge of shoplifting or housebreaking his past record would almost certainly have ensured his committal to penal servitude for five or seven years.

Among the cases in my Legal Pillory this week, the very different measures of justice which were meted out at Dublin to a party of rowdy young undergraduates on the one hand and a couple of negligent telegraph messengers on the other, appear to have been admirably designed to encourage the unfortunate idea that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. Certainly Mr. Swifte's sentences on the two telegraph messengers were monstrously harsh, especially in view of the merciful recommendation of the prosecuting solicitor, and I hope that ere this the Lord-Lieutenant has ordered the liberation of the lads. The other contrasts in the list are of a more familiar type. At Quarter Sessions the man who steals a pair of trousers is awarded five years' penal servitude, but the miscreant who outrages an old woman gets off with a month's imprisonment; and in the minor courts mere pecuniary penalties are deemed sufficient for brutal assaults or shocking cruelty—note the tender treatment of the "well-to-do farmer" at Denbigh—while terms of hard labour are freely imposed for such crimes as the theft of two eggs, or sleeping out under a hedge or in an outhouse. The Grimsby Bench, it will be observed, still continue the scandalous system of imprisoning fishing apprentices for "disobedience":—

Dublin Northern Division Police-court. Before Mr. Keys. Richard Hutchins, a student at Trinity College, charged with maliciously damaging two railway carriages to the amount of £20; also with assaulting a stationmaster by striking him with a strap which had been taken from one of the carriages. Four other students were similarly charged with wilfully damaging the carriages, and with obstructing officials of the company in the performance of their duty. Fined 1s. each, and ordered to pay £2 each compensation to the company.

Grimsby Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. W. Jackson. C. Morton, A. Bannister, S. Oates, J. M. Dennis, and A. Connell. John William Cottingham, charged with assaulting a lad named Markham. Defendant took a knife out of Markham's pocket, and when asked for it struck the lad in the face, knocked him down, and kicked him. Fined 1s. and 12s. costs.

West Sussex Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. R. H. Hurst. John Novell pleaded guilty to unlawfully and indecently assaulting Mary Wellcome, an old woman. One month.

Dundee Police-court. David Dickson, convicted of assaulting Alexander Robb. He knocked Robb down and kicked him, cutting his head and face, and rendering him insensible. Fined £2.

Sheffield Police-court. Before Dr. Hunt and Mr. C. Hobson. Albert Lingley charged with assaulting Margaret Adams. He struck her on each side of the head, causing her to fall, and while she was on the ground hit and kicked her. She was rendered unconscious, and was obliged to keep her bed for three weeks. Ordered to pay £1 15s. costs, and bound over.

Dublin Police-court. Before Mr. Swifte. Two telegraph messengers pleaded guilty to a charge of having neglected to deliver telegrams with which they had been entrusted. The solicitor to the Post Office stated that the boys would lose their employment, and he asked that they should be discharged under the First Offenders Act to come up for judgment when called upon. Mr. Swifte, however, committed one defendant for a month, and the other for six weeks hard labour.

Grimsby Police-court. Before the same magistrates, William Cutler, fishing apprentice from the Romford Union, charged with disobedience by neglecting to go to sea. He said he ran away because the skipper had threatened to throw him overboard when they got to sea. Fourteen days.

Gloucestershire Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. R. J. Kerr. George Taylor, convicted of breaking into a house and stealing a pair of trousers. Five years.

Pershore Police-court. Before Messrs. H. R. M. Porter and C. Whitaker. George Watkins, convicted of stealing two hens' eggs. Fourteen days.

Penrith Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Longrigg, W. L. Brooksbank, W. Seatree, and T. Altham. Barbara Kirk charged with sleeping out under a hedge in Wethericks Fields. Fourteen days.

Wisbech Police-court. Before Alderman Groom, Alderman Goward, and Mr. W. M. Rust. Thomas Bamber charged with absconding from the workhouse. Twenty-one days.

Denbigh County Police-court. Before Mr. W. D. Griffiths and other magistrates. John Hughes, charged with cruelty to a cow. Defendant, a well-to-do farmer, left the animal at a farm which he vacated, and it was found there in a shocking condition of emaciation, the bones nearly protruding through the skin. The cow had been suffering for months from ulcers and cancer of the tongue. On being remonstrated with, defendant said he knew the cow would not recover, and he did not see the use of bothering about a dying animal, so he left it to take its chance. The cow had been in calf, and a veterinary surgeon suggested that defendant had kept it alive for the sake of the calf. Having secured the calf, he had left the cow to die of starvation. Fined 20s. and £2. 2s. costs.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Tait. Robert Reekie and Catherine Cheyne, charged with creating a breach of the peace, and also with assaulting Mary Baird. The man seized Baird by the throat and threw her to the ground, and both the accused then kicked her about the body. Reekie, who had been twice previously convicted, was fined 15s.; Cheyne 5s.

Falkirk Sheriff Court. Alexander Hall pleaded guilty to having assaulted his wife by knocking her down, kicking, and beating her, subsequently dragging her out of bed, and striking her with a belt, and finally knocking her down with a clothes prop and breaking her arm. Fined £5.

Shrewsbury Police-court. Before Messrs. W. M. How, J. E. Jones, T. P. Deakin, and G. J. Holt. Mary Ann Edwards, an elderly woman, convicted of stealing a cotton shirt, a counterpane, and a pair of sheets. The Chief Constable said he believed this was the woman's first offence. One month.

Newbury Borough Police-court. Before Messrs E. Harris, S. Hemsted, J. Absalom, H. J. Midwinter, and J. Hopson. Richard Condon, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Amersham Police-court. Before Messrs. J. W. Garrett Pegg and G. Weller. James Hawes and Joseph Hawes, charged with taking three partridges' eggs. Fined £1 each.

Newark Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor (Mr. R. Challerton) and other magistrates. John Holland, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Ipswich Police-court. Before Colonel J. H. Jossclyn, Messrs. H. M. Jackaman, S. R. Anness, and R. D. Fraser. Ellen Harvey, married woman, charged with stealing some corn value 1s., which she took from the place where her husband was employed. Fourteen days.

Last week one Barnes was summoned at Southport for assaulting his wife. The evidence was to the effect that the defendant had on different occasions pushed his wife down, hurting her spine, struck her on the temple, hit her with a broom-handle, taken a running kick at her and caught her in the side, chased her out of the house and struck and knocked her down. It transpired that this amiable character was a total abstainer, and (when not engaged in beating his wife) a preacher in a local mission-hall. I should not myself have regarded these facts as any palliation of his offence—rather the reverse. The Southport Shallows appear to have thought differently, however, for all they did was to order Mr. Barnes to be bound over to keep the peace for three months. Or possibly they consider that a wife-beater is sufficiently punished if he is put under a penalty to abstain from his favourite diversion for a short period. Whatever idea may have been present in the muddy minds of the magistrates, the result of the case is admirably calculated to encourage the gentle art of wife-beating in Southport.

The parish schoolmaster at Marown, near Douglas, seems to be a nice, kind, considerate, reasonable sort of individual to be entrusted with the education of little children. Recently a little girl of six arrived at the school in a perspiring condition, which she could scarcely help, seeing that the day was extremely hot, and that to get there she had to climb one of the highest hills in the Isle of Man. But this exacting pedagogue insists that his pupils shall come cool, however warm the weather may be, and so he proceeded to give the little girl a taste of the tawse for disobedience to his orders. It is satisfactory to record that he has been convicted and fined for this assault; though, to my mind, the most fitting penalty for a man who is ready to strike a child on such a preposterous pretext would be an application of the tawse to his own hide.

Here is another useful ray of light on Messrs. "T. Smith & Co.," the rubber-stamp people of St. Helen's-gardens, W. It may be remembered that this firm persisted for a long time in printing on their circulars a garbled extract from TRUTH, conveying a totally false impression of what I had said about them, and that they were only induced to discontinue the publication by a threat of legal proceedings on my behalf. They have now got on their circulars a sheet of testimonials headed thus:—

PROOF.—As the genuineness of our offer has on different occasions been called in question by prejudiced persons, with a view of proving, by independent testimony, the bona-fides of our employment, we reprint the following testimonials and Press notices, originals of which may be seen at our office.

T. SMITH & Co.

Smith's testimonials seem to be worth about as much as his extracts from TRUTH. A gentleman picked out one of these the other day, and wrote to the address given ("Joseph Little, Derrybane Saw-mills, near Rathdrum, co. Wicklow"). The letter was in due course returned through the post with the endorsement "Not known." Doubtless the rest of the testimonials are of much the same character.

That irrepressible swindler, Ernest Day, of 439, Old Kent-road, is now sending out his impudent circulars with a deep mourning border. This is to bear out his story that he has recently come into possession of the prints of which he endeavours to dispose "through the death of a relative," and he still sticks to the old fiction that "the portrait was highly treasured by my relative, and I would not part with it but that necessity compels." This man, as every reader of TRUTH is probably aware, is only a dealer in worthless old prints and similar rubbish, and it is a pity that those on whom he seeks to impose do not prosecute him for endeavouring to obtain money by false pretences.

I am sorry to find that I was mistaken in stating that the publication of the TRUTH article on "The Reappearance of Henry Holmes" had been followed by the disappearance of that individual's advertisements. The advertisements, it seems, are still running in the Musical Standard. A musical paper can hardly plead ignorance as an excuse for this proceeding, for though the public have been kept in the dark about them, Holmes's misdeeds have been an open secret in the profession for two years past. I should like to know whether the editor and proprietor of the Musical Standard regard Holmes as a fit person to exercise any educational authority over young people. If they have any doubt on the subject, I shall be pleased to submit to them a selection from Holmes's writings now in my possession, which ought to considerably facilitate their decision.

Why do we forbid beggars to solicit alms in the street and leave them free to pester people at will through the post? Surely the latter form of mendicity is quite as much of a nuisance as the former, and it is a nuisance "which has increased, is increasing and ought to be diminished." A whole batch of such appeals has come under my notice during the last few days. Here is the first:—

Abberton Rectory, Colchester, June, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—Two of my sisters and I are trying to get a pony, and some sort of conveyance, for our mother, who suffers so very much with rheumatism; we live five miles from the nearest town where it is possible to do any shopping at all, and she finds it impossible to walk there as she used to do. Will you help us with our plan by sending us just one shilling towards it, we shall be so glad if you will. Please forgive me for writing to you in this way, but we are so poor, and I saw your name in the list of the "Friends of the Clergy," and so I ventured to write to you. Would you kindly return this letter, so that I may use it again. —I remain, yours truly, A. BEATRIX GUNTER.

For thorough-going impudence this would be hard to beat. "Mamma is getting too infirm to walk five miles to do her shopping, so please help us to buy a pony and trap." The other day the daughter of a Dorsetshire parson was advertising in the Times for a bicycle, which she suggested her doctor had recommended her to ride for her health. I took special pains to inquire into this case, and have no doubt that the tale about the doctor was a freak of feminine imagination. Mother's rheumatism in the above case is an equally flimsy pretext, for even granting the rheumatism, the three Misses Gunter ought to be able to do the shopping for their mother. If the truth is that these young ladies don't like the five miles' walk, it is clear that they want the pony and trap quite as much on their own account as on their mother's. The crowning impudence of the thing is the request for the return of the letter. Apparently these damsels even shirk the trouble of writing their own begging-letters. I would ask any other "friends of the clergy," who may be favoured with similar appeals, not to send them back, but to forward them to the Editor of TRUTH.

In view of the foregoing, special interest attaches to the next begging-letter on my list. It is dated from "The Rectory, Little Oakley, Harwich," and is written in a childish hand by Miss Winnie Allen. Miss Winnie states that "Father wants to build a new church," and that she, being only eight years old, is trying to help by collecting £100. This young lady also asks that her letter may be returned, "as they take me so long to write"—a very artful way of putting it. I dare say that "Father" is quite right in trying to rebuild his church, and I hope he may find the money; but I would point out to him, by reference to the Misses Gunter, the evil results of putting children to cadge for money from strangers at so early an age. Perhaps when the Misses Gunter were only eight years old they were taught to beg for church, and schools, and similar objects, and the evil habit has grown until here they are to-day begging for a pony and trap for the convenience of their mother—not to mention themselves—when going out shopping.

Here, however, is the gem of the collection. It has been sent during the last week to several ladies whose names have appeared in the first column of the Times :—

COPY No. 1.
Chapel-square,

Durham.

MADAM,—Please excuse the liberty I take in asking your kind consideration. I was betrayed some time since by a man who was married. I did not know at the time that he was married. I thought he was single. He has left me now. Will you help me to raise a little money to start a shop to keep my child and me? Will you send me one shilling, and send a copy of this letter to two of your friends?—Yours,

Here we have the begging letter combined with the fashionable snowball. The document is type-written, and appears to have been sent out in all directions, so that Miss Mary evidently hopes to set a few dozen snowballs rolling for the benefit of herself and baby, with a shilling coming in at every turn. Should this meet the eye of any neighbour in Durham who happens to know Miss Carruthers, I shall feel grateful for further information about the lady.

I am indebted to a gentleman who has been studying some of my remarks on the extortion practised by money-lenders, for a very useful suggestion on the subject of limitation of interest. This gentleman tells me that it is a rule of law in the East, a rule still upheld in the Indian Native States, that the interest is not to be calculated until the principal has been discharged. This is a most excellent rule, and gets rid at once of all complications connected with the repayment of loans by instalments, as well as depriving the lender of any right to interest upon interest. The same gentleman also suggests that, where a loan on a promissory note or other personal security has been paid off by instalments, the security should be considered as cancelled, so that after this point any provision in the document respecting the rate of interest should cease to be operative, and the lender be merely entitled to a statutory rate of interest, say 5 per cent. Is there any reason why some provision of this kind should not be incorporated in the Bills of Exchange, and Bills of Sale Acts?

A year or two ago, when the subject of dentistry was under discussion in TRUTH, special reference was made, at the instance of a well-known London dentist, to the urgent need of a more systematic attention to teeth in schools under public control. This point is again very clearly brought out in a little pamphlet entitled "What the Dentist can do for the State," by Mr. G. Cunningham, L.D.S., dental surgeon to the London Hospital, the pamphlet being a reprint of a paper read at last year's meeting of the British Dental Association. A cobbler thinks that there is nothing like leather, and a dentist naturally thinks that there is nothing like dentistry; but when one has made allowance for professional sentiment, I have no doubt that systematic attention to the teeth of children has a most important bearing upon their happiness in after life. I suppose, too, that unsound teeth are one of the consequences of civilisation in its present shape, and that if we recognise that the public health is a question of first public importance, we ought to look after the teeth as well as the rest of the anatomy.

Mr. Cunningham gives some striking statistics showing the prevalence of bad teeth among children in English and Scotch schools, and in one instance at least, that of the training-ship Exmouth, he shows the good results which have followed from the appointment of a properly qualified dental attendant. The Metropolitan Poor Law authorities have lately shown a proper appreciation of their duties in this respect towards the children in their schools; and I see no reason why the subject should not be taken up by School Boards, and all public authorities who have children under their care. It is also, as has been already pointed out in TRUTH, a matter which demands attention in the Army and Navy, where ordinary medical treatment is already provided by Government, but where dentistry is strangely overlooked.

I wonder whether all my readers know the value of old artificial teeth when they contain gold in any quantity. If they do not, I should advise them to get good advice on the subject before selling, for there is an enormous demand for such articles in the advertisement columns of the papers, and I suspect that a good deal of swindling is done in the trade. There is one advertisement in which those who have teeth for sale are recommended to apply to a manufacturing dentist rather than to a wardrobe buyer. A lady responded to this advertisement the other day, and got an offer of £1 for her set, but, being dissatisfied with the offer, she took the goods to a pawnbroker, who at once offered her £2. 14s. for them. If, therefore, a manufacturing dentist is a better purchaser than an old clothes merchant, a pawnbroker would seem to have the advantage of both.

Here is a curious example of preferential railway rates in favour of the foreigner. The Great Eastern Railway Company advertises a cheap circular tour from Brussels to Glasgow and Edinburgh for £2. 14s. A Scotchman inquired whether he could go the same tour at the same price, but starting from Edinburgh instead of Brussels. The answer was that in that case the fare would be £3. 19s., so that for carrying a Scotchman £1. 5s. more is charged than for carrying a Belgian. It may be that this difference is prompted by the reluctance of the railway concerned to tempt Scotchmen to spend their money elsewhere than at home. If so, it is really an indirect compliment to the free and easy way in which Scotchmen spend their money. But I fear Scotchmen will be the last to appreciate the compliment.

There was a discussion at the meeting of the Swansea Corporation, the other day, which throws an interesting light upon their notions of the functions of such a body. A plan for some new houses had been thrice rejected by the Sanitary Committee, on the ground that it did not comply with the building by-laws, but on a fourth application, when the chairman and vice-chairman of the committee were absent, the plan was passed. Those who defended the final action of the committee in the Council did not deny that the plan violated the bye-laws. What they argued was that such a thing had been done before, and that they were entitled to do it again—in fact, two worthy councillors, named Freeman and Skidmore, actually contended that the object and business of the committee was not so much to see that the bye-laws were enforced as to exercise their "discretion" in permitting them to be relaxed. Everybody can imagine what is meant by the "discretion" of a Corporation committee in such matters, and after this surprisingly frank avowal the ratepayers of Swansea will doubtless be curious to ascertain in whose interests the bye-laws are occasionally waived.

Considering that paupers who simply abscond from the workhouse, and so rid the ratepayers of the burden of their maintenance, are liable to three months' imprisonment, it seems well-nigh incredible that a fine of £20 is the maximum penalty prescribed by the Legislature for the Poor-law officer who embezzles hundreds of pounds of the ratepayers' money. I am not surprised, therefore, at the receipt of several letters drawing attention to the case, at Chatham, of one Passby, a relieving officer under the Medway Guardians. As relieving officer and collector, Passby had purloined sums amounting to £146. 11s. 8d. There were two charges, and the Stipendiary Magistrate ordered him to pay a penalty of £20, with costs in respect of each, together with the amount he had embezzled—altogether £191. 13s. This was, indeed, a ludicrously inadequate penalty, but, in accordance with the Act 4 & 5 William IV., c. 76, it is all that can be imposed upon any officer employed by or under a Board of Guardians, no matter what the extent of his defalcations may be. So tender is the law towards such offenders that in default of payment a distress warrant has to be issued, and it is only when there are no—or insufficient—effects to satisfy the warrant that the offender has to go to prison, and then only for three months for each offence, without hard labour. The only exception that can be taken to the action of the Chatham Stipendiary in this case is that he made the two sentences on Passby in default of payment concurrent, instead of consecutive, so reducing his punishment for embezzling £146 to three months' imprisonment.

Periodically some enthusiastic Semite puts forwards a plan for a Jewish State in Palestine, and if Jews like to go there and can induce the Sultan to guarantee to them the autonomy for which they profess to be anxious, by all means let the bargain be struck. But what would the Jews do there? They are a practical race; their main business is to act as intermediaries in the commercial and monetary transactions of the world. They are neither manufacturers nor agriculturists. Even if they were, a worse country for either of these industries cannot well be conceived. The proposal is about as reasonable as it would be to send a colony of sheep-shearers to a land where there are no sheep to shear.

I do not believe that the British Empire Zollverein is within the area of practical politics, because I doubt whether the inhabitants of these isles would agree to a duty of 1s. per quarter on foreign food supplies, and I am certain that for this quid pro quo the Colonies would not consent to let in all our manufactured goods duty free. This objection is far more fatal to the proposal than its denunciation by the Cobden Club as contrary to Free Trade; neither Protection nor Free Trade being, to my thinking, a dogma which precludes a consideration of each special case on its merits. Where I am with Mr. Chamberlain is that, instead of dealing in vague generalities respecting a closer union with our colonies, he pointed to the sacrifices that we and they would have to make in order to make this closer union anything beyond a pious opinion.

Apropos of Mr. Chamberlain's Zollverein scheme, an anonymous correspondent writes:—

> The principal product that Australia exports is wool, and some £20,000,000 worth of that article comes yearly to London for sale. Buyers from the Continent and America take two-thirds, or nearly so, of the whole—say, to the value of £13,000,000. If therefore Australia agreed to a preferential tariff in favour of Britons, Frenchmen and Germans would put their backs up at once, and would doubtless retaliate by placing an import duty on Australian wool. Where the benefit would come in Australians do not quite see.

I never accept facts on anonymous authority, but if the above figures are correct (which those "in the know" can decide for themselves in a moment) the argument is sound enough, and well illustrates the sort of mischief which the proposed Imperial Customs Union would bring about.

The humble efforts of the House of Commons to recognise woman's rights by substituting waitresses for waiters on the Terrace have come in for castigation. Now there is an outcry against ladies being allowed to come on the Terrace and be served by our waitresses. But why should not ladies be permitted a cup of tea and a strawberry on the Terrace? What harm does it do any one? In the Palace of the People female visitors are given refreshments, and are allowed to attire themselves as they please; in the Palace of the Sovereign they get no refreshments, and have to put feathers on their heads and drag behind them a lengthy train. Surely our way of showing respect to the fair sex is the more reasonable. Votes I am against giving to ladies; but tea and strawberries they ought to have.

But if I may venture a hint to the ladies, I would suggest to them that they should not hang about on the stairs leading from the lobbies to the Terrace. Here they are very much in the way, and they render it difficult for the ardent senator to fulfil his senatorial duties. Whenever a bell rings for a division, ladies should take it as a signal to clear the course. Last week I was on the Terrace. The division bell rang. On the staircase were two ladies. They were blessed with such opulent charms that they blocked the staircase, and they stood and talked. "Well," said one, "did you look through the window into the House of Commons?" "Oh, yes," replied the other, "but you need not trouble to go, I only saw a quantity of old frumps." On this I waxed bold, and said, "Ladies, behind you is an old frump who will be late for the division if you do not let him go by." The opulent ladies kindly made a narrow passage between them to let me by, and through this I managed to squeeze, blushing deeply. But I was late for the division. If this sort of thing is to go on, we shall have to oppose sex to sex, and a Member will have to get one of the Terrace waitresses personally to conduct him from the Terrace to the door of the House.

FROM THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE.

Picked up at the House of Commons on Tuesday near the seat of the Honourable and Gallant Member for West Ham.

THE BURIAL OF THE EDUCATION BILL.

Not a sigh was heard, not a tear-drop fell,
From the seats where our men sat serried,
There only arose a joyful yell
As the Bill that we loathed was buried.

We buried it gladly at half-past four,
The ground of amendments clearing,
Whilst over the Table there came a roar
Of the Radicals loudly cheering.

It bore no marks of deserved defeat,
No laurels of victory crowned it;
But it lay collapsed in its foolscap sheet,
With a yard of red-tape around it.

Short but strong were the words that we said,
And we showed not a sign of sorrow,
But we bitterly thought, with a pang of dread,
What the papers would say on the morrow.

We knew they would censure it, now it had gone,
And o'er it's dead clauses upbraid it:
But little care we, if it only sleeps on
In the grave where a Balfour has laid it!

That "independent thinking is dying out," as Lord Rosebery opines, is a somewhat doubtful proposition, because independent thinking has been the exception rather than the rule from all time. In the Garden of Eden, Eve let the Serpent think for her, and then used her influence over Adam to force on him what that Serpent had impressed on her mind. Men have always been sheepishly inclined, and this characteristic applies even more to their minds than to their bodies. The aim of Party politics just now is to crush out independent thought and to convert the many into the pawns of the few. It is the party machine rather than the newspapers that strikes at independent thought.

Lord Rosebery, however, ascribes this decadence of independent thought to the vast number of magazines and newspapers. This might be correct if all these publications were themselves of the same way of thinking. But they are not, and consequently a man who takes his opinions from them would have no opinion. I never have believed in the influence of the Press on public opinion. What newspapers do is to furnish each phase of thought with phrases wherewith to defend in conversation opinions already formed. The London daily Press is in the hands of some dozen individuals. Like Majesty, each newspaper assumes the grandiose "we," and postures as an oracle. But the fact that "we" is a vague and anonymous entity is fatal to all influence. I should say that a provincial newspaper, whose proprietor or editor is a known man in the locality through which the newspaper circulates, exercises far more influence over public opinion in that locality than all the London dailies combined. Provincial newspapers are read in the localities they serve; metropolitan daily articles are seldom read, even in London, the purchasers of London papers being fonder of news than of articles.

What is a newspaper? It is a commercial undertaking for making money by means of advertisements. To obtain advertisements, circulation is needed, and circulation is only secured by publishing the news of the day. But the proprietor likes to air his own views, for what they are worth. Those who agree with him regard him as a wise man; those who disagree with him, as an ass. But I never yet knew any one whose own views were ever changed by an argumentative article, although they may perhaps sometimes be by evidence of fact. Whence then do individuals derive their opinions, if they neither think themselves, nor allow others to think for them? This is a difficult question to answer. In politics, some seem to come into the world with a bias one way or the other, and this bias is confirmed, but only in the rarest cases modified, by communication with their fellow men.

The Government still bravely endeavour to keep up a virtuous pretence that the Agricultural Rating Bill is not a measure for the benefit of the landowners, but some of the latter are already beginning to give away the show. Here is an instructive passage from a circular which Mr. Price, the owner of the Rhiwlas Estate, near Bala, has addressed to his tenants. It is as clear a confession as could be desired that this gentleman regards the Bill as expressly designed to save him from the necessity of reducing his rents, or, in other words, to maintain his income at its present level at the expense of the national Exchequer. Mr. Price, who is under the impression that the Bill has already been "actually passed into law," says he wishes to draw attention to the following facts:—

That the Conservative Government have this session passed a measure by which it is arranged that exactly one-half of all the rates payable by you shall be paid out of the Imperial Exchequer, so that where before you were paying £1 in rates, you will now only pay 10s. And, also, you will have to pay only 1s. out of every 4s. land-tax; the other 3s. will be paid by the Government. This I calculate amounts to very closely upon a reduction of 8 per cent. upon the rents of each tenant on the Rhiwlas Estate, and amounts to exactly the same thing as if I were to send Mr. Watkins round to you, and say, that I decided to reduce your rent £8 in each £100, and the same in lesser proportions.

Whether there is to be a Commission or a Parliamentary Committee to inquire into all and everything connected with the Chartered Company is unimportant, provided that the inquiry be a thorough one. On the face of it, probably a Committee would be the better; but against this is the fact that, owing to the Jameson trial, the Committee could not sit until next year. If it is to be a Commission, this, it has been suggested, should consist of a Judge and of two ex-Governors of Colonies absolutely independent of all connection either with South Africa or with South African finance. But the difficulty seems to me to be to decide how evidence against the Company is to be submitted. We have to deal with wealthy, astute, and unscrupulous persons, who will do their best to whitewash themselves and their Company. Some machinery must therefore be called into existence to present the other side of the case. The Government, I believe, are not prepared to allow the Treasury Solicitors to act as prosecutors. The difficulty might to a certain extent be got over were there a Committee; for there are precedents for M.P.s being put on a Committee without votes, practically to act as prosecutors.

Mr. Rochfort Maguire registers, as the personal representative of Mr. Rhodes on the Board of the Company, a protest against the action of his colleagues, which, he thinks, will be injurious to the Company, and is cruel to the Europeans in Rhodesia in their hour of trial. These Europeans, however, are well aware that their hour of trial is due to Mr. Rhodes's Transvaal gamble, and that he is not likely to be of the slightest use in the suppression of the outbreak. Indeed, his having taken away most of the valid men from Mashonaland in order to protect him in his cautious advance into Matabeleland seems to be the cause why the Mashonas have joined the Matabele.

There is no nonsense about these Rhodesians. Most of them have gone there to make money by bringing out as Companies mining claims more or less problematic, and thus obtaining some of the savings of the British investor. As a Company-promoter Mr. Rhodes is a past-master. So long, therefore, as he was at the head of the Chartered Company, the Rhodesians hoped to continue under his auspices the game of "flotation." They cling to him as drowning men cling to straws. I can very well imagine that they had no sort of objection to have with them Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Beit. In their position, and with their aims, so should I. But that either South Africa or even Rhodesia would really benefit by a fresh boom in all the rotten Companies which might be hatched with the aid of these two worthies is more than doubtful. Of paying gold there seems none in Rhodesia. The Naboth-vineyard attempts to rob territory rich in gold from neighbours cannot well be renewed. I do not believe that for many a year the country will pay its costs. If the Rhodesians like to turn to honest farming instead of Company-promoting, they may possibly make a livelihood—but little more than a livelihood. I do not think that they quite realise that there is little probability of even the most sanguine of asses enabling them to grow rich by taking shares in Companies of magnificent promises. Let them remember the "once bit" proverb.

So the "resignation" of Mr. Rhodes, as it is termed, has been "accepted;" or, in other words, the Directors of the Company have been brought, under the gentle but firm pressure of Mr. Chamberlain, to see the necessity for dismissing him, notwithstanding the protests of his representative over here, Mr. Maguire. This is well alike for South Africa and the good name of the Empire. Of course, after the investigation of all connected with this ill-omened Chartered Company, Mr. Rhodes will be put on his trial. If the ciphered telegrams are correct, he has been guilty not only of a wicked conspiracy, but of the basest conduct, to Sir Hercules Robinson, to Mr. Chamberlain, and to Dr. Jameson.

Mr. Rhodes applied the ethics of Company-promoting to politics, and he lowered the standard that it has been the pride of British Statesmen to maintain. He has made, it is said, a large private fortune by his Company speculations, and he used his position as a trusted Statesman to make it. Since Lobengula was—as he stated—cheated out of a concession, I have protested against the doings of the Rhodes gang, and of our official connection with them. Every word that I have said has been proved correct, only "more so." Bad faith, rapacity, and cruelty have dogged the steps of this Chartered Company. It is now ruined. The iniquitous raid in order to bolster up its finances has culminated in an outbreak in the territories administered by it, caused—as the Times correspondent tells us—by the looting of the cattle of the natives, and by the attempt to make them work in the mines as a condition of their getting back what was their own.

In accepting the resignation of Mr. Rhodes, the Directors of the Company inform Mr. Rhodes that he has rendered great services to the Empire. They are welcome to the opinion; for, with all respect to the Dukes of Abercorn and Fife, Lord Gifford, and Sir Horace Farquhar, no one cares one button what their opinion may be in this matter. If they had no cognisance of the occurrences in the Transvaal in December and January last, they are not fit for their posts. The least that they can do is to return their salaries and all moneys made by them through trafficking in their Companies' shares.

I regret the lives that have been taken by the natives of Rhodesia. But I am not surprised at it. They are savages, but nothing that they can do can exceed in cruelty the mode in which they have been treated by civilized men. The record of the doings of the Company towards the natives has been a black page in the history of our country. As was once said of the Turkish Empire, the Company has been a negation of God on earth.

SCRUTATOR.

PARLIAMENT ON THE DOWN GRADE.

CARRYING back my mind to those long past days before I had the honour to be a Member of the House of Commons, I realise how little any one who is not a Member either knows or wants to know about its rules of procedure. And yet nothing probably has a larger share in the destinies of the country. This is why I recur this week to the subject.

Look into the pages of Wraxall's Memoirs, a book somewhat wearisome owing to repetitions, but which gives a fair idea of the inner life of the House of Commons at the end of the last and at the commencement of the present century. The people had then very little to do with the selection of Members. The House of Commons was a popular assembly only in name. But, nevertheless, it was far more powerful than it is now. Nothing of importance was undertaken by the Executive without its opinion being asked for. When anything was undertaken every successive step was again and again discussed. A Ministerial majority was not the mechanical thing then that it is now. Lord North and Mr. Fox were both deserted by their majorities, and in the very first Session that Mr. Pitt, with a vast majority at his back, confronted Parliament as Prime Minister he had to give up several measures that he had brought forward, in deference to the disapproval of his own supporters.

Much the same was the state of things thirty years ago. When I first entered Parliament closure was unknown, and there was no attempt to prevent any important Bill passing during a Session by means of much talking. And yet full control was maintained over the Executive. There were many hours expended on the Estimates, and any one might, each time that the House went into Committee on them, raise whatever question seemed good to him; whilst if he did not find these opportunities sufficient, he could always provoke a debate on any evening by bringing forward a subject, and stating that he would "conclude with a motion," i.e., the adjournment of the House.

Now, how was this all done? By having no time limit for the conclusion of the sitting. Generally speaking, the House sat until well into the small hours of the night, and any one who suggested that it ought to rise at one or two o'clock because it was getting late, would have been deemed a poor sleepy creature. The time limit, I therefore contend, is the cause of the paralysis of the House, not only as a legislative machine, but as a controlling body over the Executive. It will be said that the Session may be continued well into the autumn without adjournment, or that, after an adjournment, it may be continued in November. Theoretically, this is true; practically, it is not. Occasionally recourse (although even this causes much grumbling) may be had to one of these expedients, but public opinion amongst members is so strongly against both, that either must always be the exception, not the rule. Again and again I have heard Ministers declare that, until their programme is carried out, the House will sit on. This is mere brutum fulmen, because they cannot count on their own supporters to aid them to carry into effect the threat. The great majority of the members are as determined not to be overworked, as are the most ardent of trade unionists. A certain period of the year they are ready to devote to the affairs of the nation, but a very substantial period they insist upon devoting to their own avocations, whether these avocations be of business or of pleasure.

There is no probability of any proposal being adopted to put an end to the time limit of midnight for the sittings. Why members should be so desirous to go to bed at midnight I do not know. But they are. Nor, with the necessity of sitting on Committees in the morning, could the sittings well commence before three o'clock. We must dismiss any attempt to get over the time limit as regards the hours during which the House sits on each working day. If anything, therefore, is to be effected, it must be to do away with the sessional time limit. Will any one show me how this can be done in any other way than by putting an end to the present system of dividing the lifetime of a Parliament into Sessions? I know of none, and I know of no advantage that is gained by these sessional divisions of time. Of late years we have frequently tinkered at the rules of procedure. The only result of our tinkering has been to make confusion worse confounded. Under our present rules, the House of Commons, with ever-increasing business thrust upon it, is the very worst machine to transact business that can be conceived by the mind of man. Very little business can be got through. What is done is accomplished in a perfunctory and unsatisfactory manner; whilst, owing to the impossibility of exercising control, the centre of political power has been shifted from the direct representatives of the people to the Executive. Mr. Balfour has admitted that the rules need changing. Let him, then, explain how he would have them changed. As it is, there is a conspiracy to do nothing, between those who are avowedly desirous of reducing representative government to ridicule and contempt and those who secretly desire this. If Mr. Balfour can show any better means than that which I suggest, to make the House of Commons an efficient legislative and controlling machine, then let him submit it to the House of Commons; if not, let him adopt my plan. The actual state of things is a disgrace to the country, and it is sapping all respect for Parliamentary rule, greatly to the delight of those who would reduce that rule to a minimum, and strengthen the power of the Crown, of the Lords, and of the Executive. What our Executive is may be estimated by the fact, that one-half of the present Cabinet consists of Peers, and most of the other half is made up of men who are Peers' relatives. The selection of a Premier is becoming more and more dependent on the Crown, and less and less on the people. This may suit the Conservatives, but it is fatal to the advance of Democracy, for the Crown will, whenever there is a Liberal majority in the Commons, select as Premier some nobleman whose mission is, under the guise of Liberal professions, to take care that there is no Radical performance.

MORE CAVALRY RUFFIANISM.

The experience of Lieutenants Hodge and Bruce in the 4th Hussars, as I have pointed out in my remarks on those cases, has an interest far beyond that of the two individuals primarily concerned. The cases are of public importance as examples of a form of misconduct which there is every reason to believe is chronic in certain cavalry regiments. Since the first reference to the Bruce case in TRUTH a dozen stories of the bullying of unpopular subs. or the boycotting of men of limited means have come to hand. One of them occurred in India only a few weeks ago, and for this reason, as well as for the disgraceful character of the facts, it calls for special notice.

The regiment this time is the 20th Hussars, now stationed at Mhow. Only about two months ago a subaltern joined this regiment, who, for some reason or other, was not acceptable to one or more of his brother officers. The story current in Service circles in India is that another subaltern who had known him previously had a grudge against him. At any rate, it seems to have been decided almost before the lad joined to make things uncomfortable for him. A few days after he joined, a party of his brother officers took him down to the riding school. They took off his overalls, put him on a horse barebacked, and made him gallop round the school. They seem to have armed themselves with whips to keep up the fun, and instead of whipping the horse, they laid on freely across the back and body of the unfortunate subaltern, until he was half flayed. When the torture was over, his tormentors told him that if he went to hospital it would be the worse for him. The poor wretch was so frightened that he did his best to obey this injunction, but his injuries were so serious that he was obliged at last to go to hospital, when, of course, the facts became known. Some attempt seems to have been made to hush them up, but they are now the common talk of the district. I may add that, in this instance, I have had no communication either from the regiment or from any friend of the victim of this outrage. The facts were privately narrated by an officer in another regiment to an officer in London, who thought the case of so much public importance that he mentioned it to me. It therefore comes quite independently of the 4th Hussars case, of which the officer who sent the facts to London appears to be entirely ignorant.

Now here is a case fresh and up to date. The War Office have no excuse for saying here, as in the case of Mr. Hodge, that it all occurred so long ago as to make investigation impossible. The exact truth can be elicited without the slightest difficulty, and some inquiry ought to be held at once in order to elicit it. For the reason that I have just mentioned, I do not profess to give this story on the personal evidence of any one who has been immediately connected with the occurrence. It may be that in course of transmission mistakes or exaggerations have occurred. But—and this is an additional reason for giving prominence to it—the story as reproduced above is freely told and believed in Service circles in Bombay, and if the facts were not as described, it is highly necessary, if only in the interest of the regiment concerned, that the allegations should be disproved. On the other hand, if the statements are accurate, this is a case in which there can be no excuse whatever for not administering that lesson which seems to be so badly needed in certain cavalry regiments. I would therefore strongly urge upon both the Commander-in-Chief, as well as the Parliamentary representatives of the War Office, the necessity of a prompt and searching inquiry into this case. There can be no question that this evil of bullying has existed for years more or less unchecked, and, as might be expected under these circumstances, it appears to be a growing evil. For the credit of the whole Army, not less than in the interest of every youngster who joins, it behoves the authorities to put it down with a strong hand whenever an opportunity presents itself; and if after the outcry that there has been over the recent cases in the 4th Hussars, the Commander-in-Chief and his advisers show any disposition to wink at these detestable practices, to let the facts be hushed up, or to screen the offenders from the punishment they so richly deserve, it will necessarily follow that these abominations will continue to grow, until no gentleman will wish to join a cavalry regiment, and no father will take the risk of putting his son into one.

It will be convenient here to refer to the facts in connection with the race for the 4th Hussars' Subalterns' Cup at the Aldershot Cavalry Meeting in 1895, with which I promised last week to deal. There are certain points in regard to this case which are clear, others which require further elucidation. What is certain seems to be this: a horse named Lady Margaret, which had won a race on the previous day, started a hot favourite for the Subalterns' Cup at odds on. Five horses ran, among them being a horse described as Surefoot, against whom about 6 to 1 was laid at starting. To the astonishment of everybody, and more especially the backers of Lady Margaret, Surefoot won easily, Lady Margaret running second to him. Nevertheless, the names of Lady Margaret and her owner were subsequently engraved upon the Cup as having won the race. Some months afterwards certain allegations in regard to the running were laid before the War Office, and were referred by the War Office to the Stewards of the National Hunt. After investigating the charges, the Stewards pronounced a decision by which all the horses which ran in the race were disqualified for any future races under National Hunt rules. This decision was presumably communicated to the War Office. Whether the officers concerned were called upon to furnish the War Office with any explanation is not known, but no further action of any kind has been taken in regard to the race. So much is certain. What the precise irregularity in connection with the running of Surefoot and Lady Margaret really was it is impossible to say for certain, but the story generally current, and which has already been put forward in Truth, is that the so-called Surefoot was not that animal at all, but another horse started under his name. I feel entitled to assume that this was really the case, because in March last the question was pointedly asked in Truth whether there was any ground for the current allegation that another horse had been run under the name of Surefoot, and although I invited any of the officers of the regiment to explain what the real truth of the matter was, nothing in the shape of a denial or explanation has been put forward. It seems to me incredible that if the facts as then stated had been open to correction, the regiment would not have thought it incumbent upon them to correct them. That some serious irregularity did take place is clear from the decision of the Stewards of the National Hunt, and if the irregularity consisted in running a horse not entered for the race under an assumed name, and thereby defeating a favourite on which considerable sums of money had been laid, the irregularity undoubtedly justifies up to the hilt the course which the Stewards took. The question then arises, on what ground have the War Office decided that it is unnecessary to take any official notice of these facts. By one of the apologists of the regiment it has been stated to me that the War Office came to the conclusion that the five gentlemen concerned merely erred through ignorance of the laws of racing, and not with any dishonourable intention. A statement has also reached me that on the day before the race some consultation had taken place as to the permissibility of running another horse in the place of Surefoot, either because Surefoot was out of sorts, or for some similar reason; that it was then agreed among the officers that this should be done; and that it was generally known, at any rate among the officers, that the horse run as Surefoot was really a different animal.

I cannot say that these arguments strike me as very convincing. If there was any arrangement among the officers that another horse, and, as it turned out, a horse of much superior class, should be substituted for Surefoot, who was generally regarded as not having a chance in the race, the question at once arises, How many persons were aware of this, and what steps were taken to inform those who seem to have been freely backing Lady Margaret up to the moment when the race was started that they had to reckon with another unknown horse whose name was not on the card? Clearly everybody who was backing Lady Margaret ought to have been informed of the whole circumstances. It also seems to me that all bets previously made on Lady Margaret ought to have been off. If precautions of this kind for the protection of those who were not "in the know" were not taken, I am afraid that the plea of ignorance will not weigh as much with the general public as it seems to have done with the authorities at the War Office. To ask one to believe that five gentlemen so intimately associated with the Turf as seems to be required of subalterns in crack cavalry regiments, regularly attending race meetings, and owning, running, and backing their own horses, could be such mere babes in Turf usage as not to see the impropriety of running in this way a horse not known to be entered for the race, is a very large order on one's credulity. But even if the subalterns of the 4th Hussars are to be credited with this infantile simplicity, the rule on which justice is administered outside the Army—and, so far as I know, inside the Army also—is that ignorantia legis neminem excusat. It would seem that this principle was adopted by the Stewards of the National Hunt, and they would certainly have been opening the door to some very strange occurrences had they taken a different course. Why the War Office should adopt a different standard of ethics I do not precisely see.

However, all this is more or less conjecture. Nobody knows for certain what took place in regard to this race; nobody knows for certain what action the War Office really have taken. Seeing that such facts as are known have been widely circulated in the Press, and that very unfavourable inferences may reasonably be drawn from them, I think that for the credit of the Army at large, to say nothing of this particular regiment, the exact state of the case ought to be made known. The matter, as I said last week, has a special bearing upon the cases of Lieutenants Hodge and Bruce, from the fact that the five subalterns whose horses were entered for this race at Aldershot were the moving spirits in the dinner given a few weeks after at the Nimrod Club for the purpose of informing Mr. Bruce that this distinguished regiment was not disposed to receive him as an officer. That the gentlemen who thus took upon themselves to veto a War Office appointment should themselves have been concerned in a transaction which has incurred the censure of the National Hunt Stewards is, to say the least, highly interesting. Again, two of these same officers were also personally concerned in the brutal ill-treatment of Mr. Hodge a few months previously. In the case more particularly of Mr. Hodge certain officers of the 4th Hussars have forfeited all right to be looked upon as gentlemen, and if men are guilty of blackguardly conduct in one direction, they may be in another. Moreover, if the Commander-in-Chief and his advisers are capable of winking at what the Stewards of the National Hunt consider irregular conduct, merely out of consideration for the youth and innocence of the individuals concerned, they also may be equally capable of winking at the brutal outrages upon Mr. Hodge, or the avowed conspiracy to get rid of Mr. Bruce, from similar considerations. The public, and the Service at large, have a right to know two things: (1) the precise degree of misconduct which is considered compatible with the position of an "officer and gentleman" in the 4th Hussars; (2) the precise attitude of the Commander-in-Chief and the War Office towards the various allegations against these particular "officers and gentlemen." After the personal investigation by Lord Wolseley and Sir Redvers Buller, which has now been promised, it is to be hoped that full enlightenment on these points will speedily be forthcoming.

THE GREAT GAS-METER SWINDLE.

Mr. Lough last week asked a timely question of the President of the Board of Trade on the gas-meter question, and Mr. Ritchie's answer should bring home to the inhabitants of London how they stand in this matter. For reasons which have been pretty clearly indicated in Truth during the last month, the chronic grievance of the London householder against his gas-meter—or rather the gas company's meter—has lately become acute. The first quarter of 1895 was an exceptional one in the consumption of gas. At the end of January a hard frost set in, and lasted with unabated severity till the early part of March. With the frost came the usual proportion of London fog and dark weather. For five or six weeks every man who owns a gas-fire had that fire pretty constantly burning at full pressure, and many who have no gas-fires burned an extra allowance of gas for the sake of warmth, to say nothing of the extra consumption for lighting purposes. The corresponding quarter of the current year was in every respect a complete contrast. In place of the frost we had exceptionally mild weather from Christmas to Lady Day, and less than the usual allowance of foggy and dark days. The consumption of gas during the quarter must be presumed, therefore, to have been below the average. Yet when the bills came in at the end of the quarter the vast majority of householders found to their astonishment that they were charged for a far higher consumption than in the first quarter of 1895. In some cases the increase amounted to 25 per cent. or more, the man who paid £5 in 1895 having to pay £6 or £7 in 1896.

This seems to have led to a general loss of confidence in the honesty of gas-meters, and large numbers of householders have set the usual machinery in motion for having these contrivances tested. From such evidence as reaches me, I should say that in a large proportion of cases the meters when weighed in the County Council balance were found wanting. But in the end the victim gains little by their victory. What provision the law may have made for his benefit in such a case I do not know, nor does it much matter. Even if the law is not, as (by the wisdom of our ancestors) it is in nearly all these cases, on the side of the monopolist and against the public, it is of little use for a private individual to enter on a legal contest with a wealthy corporation over a question of a few shillings. Whatever the law may say, the practical result of the condemnation of a gas-meter is generally that the gas company offers a trifling rebate in the bill for the last quarter, and declines to disgorge a half-penny of the proceeds of its gas-meter's frauds during the previous quarters. All that the householder gains is a new meter, and he is lucky if he does not find that he has only exchanged King Log for King Stork.

The extent to which the London public must be plundered every year by the fraudulent conduct of gas-meters is appalling to calculate. I have heard during the last month of some twenty or thirty instances in which meters have been tested and found defective, and in every case the error has been in favour of the Company. I never heard of a case in which a meter was found on trial to be correct, or to be making mistakes in favour of the consumer. From this it would seem to be a legitimate inference that most London gas-meters are inaccurate, and that the error is always on the side of the Company. The Company take good care that the error is not the other way. Has it never occurred to any of my readers to have a new meter fixed by the Company without warning or reason given? It is a thing constantly done, and what does it mean? It means that the Company are dissatisfied with their little representative in the basement. He is too honest for them. Perhaps they suspect that he is making the consumer a present of a few farthings' worth of gas per quarter without putting it down. So out he comes, and in goes a new marker, warranted to put down every foot consumed, and a trifle over. Under this head a gentleman in the North of London gives me an experience which will be very amusing reading to a gas shareholder. The Company condemned his old meter (with which the householder himself was none too pleased), and put in a new machine. Up went the gas bill in the most gratifying way. The householder struck, the meter was tested, and the verdict was "2·28 per cent. too fast." A third meter was put in, and in the next eight weeks the consumption registered was little less than one-third of what it had been during the preceding eight weeks. Allowing for the difference in daylight, it would seem from the practical result that the second of the three meters was nearer 288 per cent. than 2·88 per cent. too fast. This is the sort of galloper that the Company start when they are dissatisfied with the pace of an old meter. I suspect that they have other resources besides the speed of their meters. Even granted that half the meters in London are "too fast," it has still to be explained what made them all go so much faster in the first three months of 1896 than in the first three months of 1895. Is the man who takes the figures sometimes even faster than the meter? I fancy so. And is there any ingenious arrangement by which gas (or air) can be forced through the meter so that the nominal consumption may be substantially increased without the consumer being aware of the fact? I have heard whispers to that effect.

Well, what are we to do? Mr. Ritchie tells us that the Board of Trade have no jurisdiction over gas-meters. He can only refer vaguely to "the local authorities—in this case the London County Council;" and what the powers of the County Council are (or are not) the householder knows to his cost already. The moral of it all to my mind is that we must deal with the gas monopolist as we are going, before long I trust, to deal with the water monopolist. We must take these public services out of the hands of private corporations whose first object is to earn dividends for themselves, and vest them in public authority, which will have no object except to administer them in the public interest all round. As long as the gas company retains its present rights and duties every householder must be more or less at its mercy, and the vast majority will tamely submit to any amount of extortion from the feeling that resistance is hopeless. But substitute for this Company a public body like the County Council, which has to be reconstituted by public election every three years, and every householder will have a remedy for his grievance ready to his hand if he chooses to use it—to say nothing of the comforting knowledge that whatever profits are made out of him will go in reduction of his rates. Is this a dangerous and revolutionary policy to propound? I have heard it said so. If Londoners at large are such fools as to believe it, all I can say is that they must make the best of things as they are.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

A "PRINCE ALMOST."

THE Duc de Nemours was a "Prince Almost." He just missed filling many grand situations. He almost received the baptism of fire at the siege of Antwerp; was almost the accepted suitor of Queen Victoria; and he had a very narrow miss of being Regent of France in the Comte de Paris' minority. Nothing seemed more likely than that he would fill that office a few days before the Revolution of 1848 sent his whole family into exile. An Act of Parliament secured him the Regency. Worshippers of the rising sun had flocked for three or four years to his soirées at the Palais Royal. They were far more aristocratic assemblies than those at the Tuileries. It was whispered that the Duc was almost a Legitimist. He had a lovely wife, who from bashfulness used to blush like the break of day whenever she found she called forth admiration. The Duc was as shy as she was, but not in the same interesting way. His reluctance to come out of his shell was set down to hauteur and want of sympathy with the non-aristocratic. His pose, acquired from dancing and fencing masters, and the habit of appearing on the steps of the Throne, gave him an air of style. His figure was tall and elegant, it had adapted itself early to trousers with under-sole straps, military buckram, a whalebone corset, and to the last it remained erect. His profile had a look of Henry IV., but the front face betrayed weakness. It was said of the Duc that he was almost an imbécile—a too strong word to fit his mental capacities or incapacities. In his old age he was almost a man of large fortune, and would have been so, were it not for the obligation to make heavy allowances to married children and grand-children. The break up of the Imperial throne of Brazil obliged him to add £5,000 a year to the Comte d'Eu's annuity. His fondness for money kept him in the almost stage to saintship. Had it not been for this trait of character, his natural piety might have ripened into perfect saintliness. Where he ceased to be "Prince Almost," was in his devotion to his mother, wife, and daughters. The old Queen of the French and the Duc used to tell their beads together at Claremont. The son became her reader when her sight failed. To win the patronage of St. Joseph—the saint who helps mortals to die easy and in an edifying frame of mind—he subjected himself to mortifications and pious exercises.

Though a neat, methodic person, one hardly is surprised at the Duc de Nemours' will not being found. Possibly he made no will. He had little head, unless for financial matters. On the death of his eldest brother, it was arranged that he should be practically the head of the French Army. To this end, a docile War Minister disposed to take his orders was named. The meddling and nervous fussing of the Duc disorganised the whole machine. Hence the rapid success of the Revolution of '48. On the eve of the outbreak all the cavalry of Paris was ordered at his bidding, to put itself in battle array in the Champs Elysées, then hardly in Paris. They took up position at eleven at night, and remained motionless for twelve hours, the men all the time in their saddles. The Revolution roared round the Tuileries and Chamber of Deputies, but the dragoons of "Prince Almost" remained like equestrian statues until the Revolutionists were triumphant. They were then ordered to return to barracks. The Duc forgot all about them in the decisive hour and a half that it took to upset the dynasty. He behaved well in going with the Duchesse d'Orléans and her sons to the Chamber of Deputies. But he lost his head when the mob invaded the Houses, and got separated from the Duchesse and young Princes. Poor De Nemours found himself like a mouse in a trap. He was very unpopular, knew it, and fell in with the proposal to disguise himself in the uniform of a National Guard. Thus accoutred, he marched as one of a sergeant's company, with musket on shoulder and fixed bayonet, to the Invalides, where the Duchesse d'Orléans had taken refuge. For two days he went about Paris in this uniform, trying to organise resistance to the party that had just dethroned his father. The Duchesse d'Orléans showed a higher spirit. She was advised to cut the lace flounces off her dress, but scorned to do so. If she must die, she would perish as became a Princess and the young King's mother.

The Duc de Nemours, on taking refuge in England, was given Bushey House. He kept it all the years that intervened between his return to France twenty-five years ago and his death. The Woods and Forests paid for the repairs and the gardeners; the flowers and vegetables belonged to the Duc. He was extremely tenacious of his "rights." Strollers were not suffered to intrude on his grounds. He had lost his amiable and beautiful wife at Bushey. This was pleaded as a sentimental excuse for wishing to keep on the house. He really had la religion de ses souvenirs, but he was fond of money, and, in the event of a third exile, liked to have a delectable haven for nothing. He lived there like a monk during his short sojourns since 1871. He had become a member of the tierce order of St. Francis. His eldest daughter went into it also, and proposed for her model Saint Clara, the foundress of the Poor Clarisses. The youngest daughter, the Princess Blanche, devoted herself to religious painting. She sent a pictorial offering of her own work to the Pope on the occasion of some great anniversary. It is said that he slyly looked the gift horse in the mouth. The Duc de Nemours did a splendid stroke of business in buying the villa of a defunct soap-boiler in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne. He sold it to M. Ephrussi, the son-in-law of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, at a profit of about £70,000. The other residence in the Avenue Kléber was kept for winter use. To economise, he often, with his still unmarried daughter, went to stay for long sojourns at the Hôtel des Réservoirs, at Versailles, and sometimes remained there for four or five months. The sojourns, as he aged, grew regular and longer, and at last almost permanent. This hotel life released him from the care of looking to household expenses and a large domesticity. A valet, a femme de chambre, a lady to go about with the Princess, and a gentleman, Comte de Riancy, formed the suite at the Réservoirs. The Duc, who was proud in a quiet way, felt at Versailles what a grand thing it was to be a Bourbon. He used to haunt the Trianon and those pictorial galleries illustrative of the conquest of Algeria. To the last he kept the pose acquired in the thirties, and had the air of the beau or dandy of high family of that period. The hair and whiskers were carefully brushed; the bearing, though extremely conventional, was distingué. One almost fancied that he still, as when a young cavalry officer, wore under-straps to hold down his trousers, and a corset to give a smart air to his figure. The illusion of the trousers was due to his legs moving, when he walked, as they did when the knee was kept from bending by the tightly-buckled under-straps. He threw out the leg from the hip, without bringing the knee-joint into play. In riding he kept to the very long stirrup which cavalry officers in his youth affected. The Duc de Nemours seldom went to Chantilly. He and the Duc d'Aumale were not in touch. The Duc remained a "liberal," De Nemours became more and more Legitimist; but never to the degree of accepting the Spanish Bourbons. He was deeply concerned to learn that Prince Henri d'Orléans was to be the heir of the Chantilly uncle. The most charming member of the whole kindred was the Duc d'Alençon. He has his mother's beauty, with open-hearted, friendly manners, and a fine spirit that shows itself in his countenance. D'Alençon is the only really affable member of the Orléans family, save his aunt, the Princess Clémentine. His daughter's marriage to a Bavarian Prince was the cause of a deep yearly drain on the Duc de Nemours's purse.

The Duc de Nemours had a high sense of his personal dignity. His gentleman, Comte de Riancy, a Legitimist, reflected it. The Comte and Comtesse de Riancy's habitation was a poky, dingy flat at Versailles. But their reflected lustre was so great that the Rothschilds were glad to be invited to their aristocratic receptions. There was no setting up to give smart parties. Refreshments were scant and inexpensive. The flat could not hold half the guests, who flowed out on to the stairs, where they remained until the Duc and Princess withdrew. The late Emperor and Empress of Brazil and Crown Princess were sometimes the lions of the De Riancy crushes, about which the papers were silent. But the names of guests were circulated in the monde chic. To go to these crushes was like being in former times presented at Versailles. The company was so carefully chosen that no introduction was needed. This made conversation easy. Guests chatted informally in the old-fashioned French way. The Austrian Embassy used to attend Mme. de Riancy's soirées.

It has been remarked that the Queen addressed condolences to the Duc d'Alençon, passing over the Comte d'Eu, his eldest brother. The Comte d'Alençon, perhaps, was better known to her. He wants to have the birthright of empty ducal titles. His excuse is that D'Eu, in getting naturalised a Brazilian, ceased to be a French Prince. This view is generally adopted by the family. The late Prince Consort was in love with the Duchess de Nemours when he and she were in their teens at Coburg, and ever after he felt an interest in her, arising from son premier amour.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

We are all famous now, dear Lady Betty, especially the infamous. This is the Age of Advertisement. Fix your name upon the minds of the multitude, and the manner by which you do it will quickly be forgotten. You can attain fame through the Divorce Court, through the Criminal Court, through eccentric dressing, through erratic or erotic writing, through singularities and oddities of every kind—through anything, indeed, except through good work contributed steadily and unobtrusively.

Newspaper-made men and women abound on every side, and the number of these great-little people increases so rapidly that attention must be directed to a matter which threatens to develop into a serious evil. The world now knows immeasurably more of its second-rate authors, artists, actors, and petty Colonial officials than it does of the men who rule over it, or of the men and women whose work will make our generation famous in the next.

An entertaining article could be written describing the "Rise of a Reputation." We first hear of Mrs. Oscar Jones through paragraphs which appear in some obscure journal, informing us that her novel, "The Love that Does Not Last," has rendered her famous. Thenceforth her name continually appears in various newspapers either as having been ailing, as having removed to a house by the river, as having attended a public entertainment, as having instituted proceedings for divorce, or as having been present at the funeral of some celebrity. As time wears on her name becomes familiar to us, and though no one can precisely explain how Mrs. Oscar Jones earned fame, we all acknowledge that she is famous. Mrs. Jones is neither more nor less than a newspaper-made woman. The public of to-day requires personalities; the average journalist is only acquainted with mediocrities. He writes, therefore, of the people he knows, and it follows that the mediocrities are thus elevated into celebrities.

Those who have been present at many fights say that each battle is won by some one particular soldier. They say that the puffs of smoke from his gun can be seen advancing from point to point, whilst the other men, who follow, close up in his rear. When the battle is won distinctions and decorations are freely distributed, but seldom are the services rewarded of the particular soldier who gained the victory. So those who are able to read between the lines of newspapers observe the "puffs" of some obscure journalist advancing through the Press, and his followers progressing steadily towards success; yet when the latter have achieved celebrity which of these remembers the writer who won the victory for them?

Though the death of Sir Augustus Harris came as a surprise to the public, he had for some considerable time been a doomed man. One Christmas, a few days before the production of the pantomime, Sir Augustus telegraphed to a well-known doctor to come to him immediately to Drury Lane. Sir Augustus was then told that unless he at once discontinued work his life could not be saved. He found himself unable to obey this order, and immediately after the production of the pantomime he became so seriously ill that his life was with difficulty saved upon that occasion. Since then there has been but little hope entertained that it could be prolonged for any considerable period. A little rest a year or two ago might have spared him from the "long, long sleep" which he is said to have asked for with his last words, and which has unfortunately been granted to him.

A correspondent writes as follows:—

"In South Africa the British settlers treat the native servants, or 'boys,' as they call them, with gross brutality. It is a common occurrence to see the former hitting and beating the latter, but the British always declare that the natives would never either obey them or respect them unless they did this. For obvious reasons I will mention no names here, but I was present when a white man kicked a native so savagely for a comparatively small fault that he killed him. An inquest was held, and though the facts of the case were generally known, the verdict returned was 'Death through natural causes.' Is it to be wondered at, therefore, that the natives should seize the first opportunity to revolt, and that, notwithstanding the serious reverses they have suffered, they prefer to fight to the end rather than face the possibilities of a surrender? I am sure that our fellow-countrymen at home do not suspect how brutally the 'boys' are frequently treated. Such treatment would not be tolerated were the Colony under Government control; but under the control of a Chartered Company many evils are possible which could not otherwise exist. "RHODESIAN."

We English are a good, easy-going people who are horrified at the terrible conduct of our neighbours, but we have so much confidence in the spirit of fairness of our fellow-countrymen that we feel sure that they would never commit brutalities unless they were compelled to. All the same it must not be overlooked that, whatever brilliant destiny may be in store for South Africa, the early settlers there have mostly been those who have failed, or have earned bad reputations, in their own country. They require more looking after than others would, when in a land where the police supervision is not so strict as it is in England. This is the greatest argument against colonisation by Chartered Company.

For several years it has been periodically urged in these columns that railway tickets should be sold by the mile without being restricted to any fixed destination. By this means clerks and others of limited means might gradually acquire the power to travel to a considerable distance during their holidays, and, besides, it would give them greater freedom in their travelling. At last the North-Eastern Railway Company has decided to sell first-class tickets more or less upon this principle. Those who travel first-class need this less than those who travel second or third. Many poor people would save a shilling or two a week to purchase the power of travelling who now spend the money in spirits or tobacco, and by the time that the holidays came round these would possess passes for a sufficient number of miles to enable them and their families to visit the country. The railway companies have a fresh and an important source of income in this direction; but the tickets should be issued for all classes upon every line, and should be available at any time. This, of course, is an improvement which we are bound to obtain; but here again prejudice restricts us. The reason why America has bounded forward so much in advance of Europe is that the Americans have no prejudices—and some of them have few principles.

Those Members who questioned Mr. Akers-Douglas in the House last week about the "Summer Club" in Kensington Gardens, and Mr. Akers-Douglas himself, in his answers, showed little knowledge of the subject. For many years there has been a small refreshment kiosk in Kensington Gardens, and the proprietor of this has always been allowed to place a few chairs and tables around it. Mr. Algernon Bourke obtained permission of the proprietor to share in the use of the kitchen attached to the kiosk; and, presumably, he also secured the sanction of the authorities to encroach upon more of the neighbouring lawn for the purpose of placing seats and tables there. This is to be taken for granted, as he has placed several of these upon a large plot of lawn at some distance from the kiosk, has set up a large tent there, and has even erected a small house. All these conveniences he intended to restrict to the use of the members of the "Summer Club," but now Mr. Akers-Douglas has given orders that any one may use them who wishes, may order the Club waiters to serve him, and may even partake of the dinners cooked by Mr. Algernon Bourke's French cook. This was inevitable. Upon the other hand, Mr. Akers-Douglas will be asked to explain how the encroachment upon public ground came about. Obviously, the proprietor of the kiosk could not give permission for ground to be used over which he had no control, and if Mr. Akers-Douglas, with a full knowledge of the purposes for which it was intended, gave his sanction, why did he give the preference to the "Summer Club," and why has he now practically withdrawn the concession?

It may be convenient here to call the attention of the authorities to another subject connected with Kensington Gardens. The Rotten Row ride used to extend as far as where the Albert Memorial now stands before the Exhibition of 1851. For the purposes of that Exhibition the Ride was cut down to where it now closes, and the buildings were erected along that strip, which formerly was part of Hyde Park. Since the Exhibition this strip has been incorporated into Kensington Gardens, which the Crown claims to be more or less Crown property. By whose authority was a large strip of a public park confiscated to the Crown? That the Crown does virtually claim a kind of possession in Kensington Gardens is proved by the fact that these Gardens are closed at altogether different times from those of the other Parks.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

SPORTING NOTES.

AFTER the Docker had won the Manchester Cup it was announced that he had run his last race, as it would not be possible to train him again. It was, therefore, a considerable surprise to hear of Mr. Buchanan's steed running a good second for the Northumberland Plate. Son o' Mine was a tremendous favourite for this handicap, but he ran very badly indeed, and Lord Durham had better throw this horse up for the season, and let him in future confine his attention to hurdle-racing. The victory of Dare Devil (who won the Chester Cup in 1892 and in 1893) was very satisfactory, as Mr. Perkins is one of the most liberal supporters of the turf in the North, and his colours have been very unlucky on the whole. Palmerston ran a perfect wretch. Nouveau Riche won the North Derby in a canter, and he is a very useful colt, and will probably carry off the Liverpool Summer Cup if he is started for that event. Ortolo, who was regarded early in the spring as likely to turn out a good Derby outsider, is evidently very moderate indeed, as he ran here quite 21 lb. below the winner. I predicted that Fiorini would win the Seaton Delaval Plate for Lord Durham, and he carried off that race, but only after a most desperate finish with Glencally. Fiorini is a beautiful racing-like colt, and capable of much improvement, so it is greatly to be regretted that he has no good engagement. A grievous error was committed when Glencally was allowed to win a trumpery race at Chester, for the penalty which he there incurred has lost him both the Stanley Stakes at Epsom, and the Seaton Delaval Plate.

There must have been some egregious blundering in the recent trial of the Duke of Portland's two-year-olds. Smean, a heavily-engaged daughter of St. Simon and Muirninn, did so well in the gallop that the Duke declared to win the Clarence and Avondale Stakes with her, and she started a great favourite; so there was heavy plunging on her. The result of the race was a crash, for Smean finished last, and her despised stable companion, Lady Frivoles, was the winner. Smean's next appearance in public will be awaited with interest, for two-year-olds often disappoint expectations in their first race. The filly is in the Stud Produce Stakes at Newmarket this afternoon, and she has an engagement at Stockbridge next week.

It is probable that there will be nine or ten starters to-morrow for the Princess of Wales's stakes of £10,000. Troon, who has undergone a special preparation for this race, was galloped last week in the presence of the Duke of Portland over the B.M., and he went very well indeed. Laveno, who runs untried, has also pleased the touts, but his chances of victory do not appear to be bright, considering that he has incurred a 9 lb. penalty, nor is it possible to fancy Kirkconnel. Sir Visto will run on the off chance, and he meets Persimmon at weight for age. The conditions of the race are exceedingly ridiculous. The winner of the Newmarket Stakes, value £3,500, has to carry 12 lb. extra, that event being placed on an equality with the Derby and Leger, but the winner of the Two Thousand or of any of the £10,000 races escapes with 9 lb. Persimmon was sent several fast gallops over this distance last week, and he is evidently in the best possible form, but I do not believe that the Prince of Wales's colt can give 3 lb. to St. Frusquin, and shall expect M. de Rothschild's horse to win this race, if he can beat Regret, to whom he has to give 9 lb.

Raconteur, who has not been seen in public since his defeat in the Derby last year, will probably run to-morrow (Thursday). This horse is looking well, and he goes well, but it is generally thought that he is an arrant rogue. He might, however, astonish the public some day by winning a good T.Y.C. handicap.

Mr. D. Baird has a smart two-year-old in Briseis, a filly by Galopin out of Briar-root, and I learn that she will make her début either in the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park or in the Richmond Stakes at Goodwood. Briseis went very well indeed the other day in a trial over the July course, in which Champfleurie also distinguished herself.

Count Schomberg will win the Ellesmere Stakes on Friday if he runs, and the Duke of Devonshire ought to carry off the Fulbourne Stakes with Minstrel.

I see it has been stated that Ascot discovered a promising Leger outsider in Shaddock. It happens, however, that this colt is not engaged in the Doncaster event, although the Duke of Westminster has seven entries. Shaddock's engagements include the Zetland Plate at the Newmarket Second July meeting, the Knowsley Dinner Stakes at Liverpool, the Gordon Stakes at Goodwood, the Scarborough Stakes at Doncaster, and a couple of races at the Newmarket October Meetings. Shaddock can stay well, and he ought to win several good races before the season is over. The Duke of Westminster's colours, indeed, will be worth following now that the tide has turned, and it will not surprise me if he heads the list of winning owners at the close of the season, for he has some grand two-year-olds in reserve.

One of the papers published the other day some croaking twaddle about the alleged decadence of Goodwood, the writer expressing the opinion that the added money ought to be increased if the meeting is to hold its place. It is a pity that people who are inclined to criticise such matters should not take the very slightest pains to investigate the facts before they commit themselves to print. If the writer of the carping nonsense to which I refer had consulted the last volume of the Racing Calendar, he would doubtless have been surprised to find that at the Goodwood meeting of 1895 there were 188 starters during the four days, whereas at Ascot there were only 183! The idea that increased added money is an infallible specific is utterly chimerical, and can still be entertained only by persons who have been entirely unobservant of the recent course of events on the turf. At Ascot last year there were only twenty-eight starters in seven of the principal races, to which events £9,000 was added! It seems to me that the time has arrived when the Ascot programme ought to be thoroughly revised. There are too many events on precisely the same lines, so that races for which large fields might reasonably be expected get "cut up." The programme requires a rich two-year-old race, and an adequate stake for three-year-olds and upwards. There is a race of £5,000 for two-year-olds at Sandown Park next month, but the value of the New Stakes, the richest event of the kind in the Ascot programme, did not exceed £2,000. The Hardwicke Stakes, with £2,000 added, was all very well when it was started in 1879, but the establishment of the Princess of Wales's Stakes of £10,000 at Newmarket, and of the Eclipse Stakes of £10,000 at Sandown Park, have quite taken the wind out of its sails.

That added money is not everything in attracting owners to subscribe to races is proved by the fact that there are eighty entries for the Stewards' Cup at Goodwood (£300 added), whereas the Royal Hunt Cup, with £2,000 added, obtained only sixty-five, and there were sixty-nine for the Wokingham Handicap, with £500 added. The Stewards' Cup entry is a very good one from every point of view, including as it does all the most speedy horses in training. The Rothschild stable has seven representatives, including Amandier, Mountain Chief, and Grig. Burgonet, a filly belonging to the Duke of Devonshire, is a great tip at Newmarket for this handicap. Several of the late Colonel North's horses (including Red Heart and Hebron) have been nominated by his son, which will increase their sale value. The mysterious Sir Michael's chance will not have been improved by his prominent running at Ascot. Omladina is entered, and the Kingsclere stable is also represented by Attainment, who is nominated by J. Porter. Sir Blundell Maple's lot of four includes Gangway (who won in 1894) and Palaverer. Mr. Basset has Wise Virgin (who won last year) and Clorane. Keelson, who palpably cut it at Ascot, just in the same disgusting fashion as at Epsom and at Doncaster, is exactly the sort of beast to win a race like this by twenty lengths if he takes it into his head to try, in which case the bookmakers would have a fine turn-up. Keelson is sure to distinguish himself in some such fashion whenever he gets well away and makes all the running without ever being fairly tackled. Teufel is the best three-year-old in the list. Raconteur is entered, and so is Troon, the four-year-old, own brother to Ayrshire. There are thirty-five entries for the Chesterfield Cup, including many animals which are also in the short race. Rampion, La Sagesse, and The Lombard are in Friday's event only.

Considering that there are neither penalties nor allowances in the Jockey Club Cup, it is odd that Persimmon should not have been entered, but still more remarkable is the absence of Love Wisely, and certainly the horses of Mr. Bass do not seem to be managed cleverly. This is the most important event still to come in which the winner of the Ascot Cup escapes a heavy penalty, and why Love Wisely was not entered it is impossible to understand. Canterbury Pilgrim, St. Frusquin, Pride, Nouveau Riche, and Jolly Boat are the most notable names in the list. Laodamia, who has been unexpectedly entered for this event, has been one of the public fancies for the Cambridgeshire. I am told that Jolly Boat will be a good thing for the Nassau Stakes at Goodwood if she is then all right.

There will be racing next week at Stockbridge, Carlisle, Pontefract, Nottingham, and Lingfield. The Hampshire meeting is to be attended by the Prince of Wales, so it is tolerably sure to be well patronised; and good sport may be expected at Lingfield. The Hampshire Stakes of £500 for three-year-olds on Tuesday has thirty left in, and the Duke of Westminster may win with Rampion or Conroy. The Champagne Stakes looks well for Eager, and in his absence Pooley Bridge might win. Specific may carry off the Bibury Club Stakes.

The Stockbridge Foal Stakes may be left to Monterey, and the Cup looks well for Omladina or Grig. The entry includes Clorane, Whittier, Wise Virgin, Laodamia, and Canterbury Pilgrim. Mr. Fulton's mare could, no doubt, win this race if fit and well, but she is more likely to be slipped for some big handicap in the autumn. The Duke of Devonshire should win the Hurstbourne Stakes with Minstrel.

I will deal next week with the £1,000 two-year-old race at Lingfield, as between breeding allowances, penalties, and maiden allowances, this event will assume the appearance of a handicap by the time that the weights have been adjusted.

Recent cricket has been extraordinary in many respects. In the test match at Lord's between England and Australia the authorities had made absolutely no attempt to cope with the crowd. This is the second instance of incompetency this season. Twenty-five thousand spectators are all very well at a University match when the majority are contented to wander about and see nothing. But when every man, woman, and child means to see the game, the accommodation is utterly inadequate, and a handful of half-starved police are quite unable to tackle an angry crowd, who, having paid their money, are determined to see the game at all cost. One can quite understand the impotency of the police when one of them said, late in the day, referring to the encroaching crowd, "Well, sir, you would not care about this job if you hadn't had anything to eat since breakfast." It would have been much wiser to have closed the gates. This was done in one of the last matches of the final for the Association Cup which was played at the Oval. That example should have been followed on this occasion. But then at Lord's they seem utterly unable to realise that the crowd wants to see cricket. The match itself is ancient history; but I must say a word about the bowling of Jones. It is certainly, when he is at his fastest, more like throwing than bowling. He started off by literally going for the batsmen's heads, and if he had been playing for Sussex against the M.C.C. no one would have expressed the least pity for him if he had been no-balled; indeed, it would not in the least surprise me if this happened to him before the tour is over unless he materially modifies his style.

The University Cricket Match begins to-day (Thursday) and, as a last request to the ladies, I would ask them to remember that a lot of men want to see the match, and, therefore, if they will take care of their parasols, and not bob up and down in their seats every minute of the day, they will be conferring an inestimable boon on innumerable miserable males. And why does not the M.C.C. start a band right at the nursery end of the ground? It would attract numerous people who do not care one jot or tittle who is in or out. As to the teams, if the Sussex match affords a test, the victory of Cambridge is assured. Of course Mitchell will not have the assistance of Mr. Perkins, the Secretary of the M.C.C., in regulating the Oxford bowling, as he did against the M.C.C. For that gentleman, when a ball from Trott struck Marriott and made him retire, came on the ground, and had Trott taken off, Marriott resumed his innings against all bowlers next day; nevertheless, it was a magnificent achievement, under any circumstances, for a team to go in and score over five hundred and win. Earlier in the week they made a similar total against Sussex, and now that both Druce and Mitchell have made big scores they will no doubt play with more confidence.

Oxford, on the other hand, beat a weak team of Surrey, but after declaring their second innings closed against Sussex, they found the county at the close of time with only ten runs wanted and four wickets to fall. This was due to a magnificent display of batting by Ranjitsinhji, who was well backed by Bean and Killick, who last week did very well with bat and ball, and promises to be a most useful member of the Sussex team. For the University, Leveson-Gower batted excellently, and Bardswell is one of the best slips in the country. His great reach enables him to cover a lot of ground, and he is very quick. In county cricket Surrey failed miserably on a tricky wicket against Hearne and Rawlin, and it seemed impossible that four of that team were in the England Eleven earlier in the week. O'Brien's century was well timed and fine hitting, and he was helped by Lucas when the game was critical. Bromley-Davenport is a much improved bat, and he might be put in earlier. It is sad to see Grace's best efforts wasted for Gloucester. He made a century and carried his bat right through the second innings, but Lancashire won by an innings owing to a huge score by Sugg, who was badly missed more than once. Derby deserve every credit for the brilliant draw they made against Yorkshire. Storer has followed in the footsteps of Grace, Stoddart, and Bean, and scored two centuries in one match. He was only once out, and made exactly a hundred. Brown, the Yorkshire bat, suddenly developed as a bowler. He did the hat trick.

Eton had not as many old choices for their eleven as Winchester, who won the match with great ease. Their fielding was excellent, and Noel is a promising bat, but Rowe, who hits freely all round the wicket, was the pick of the elevens. For Eton, Lubbock batted well, and Bosanquet is likely to be useful. His bowling might have been made more use of. The wicket-keeping of Browning for Eton was perhaps better than that of Reynolds, but both were above the average.

With the Meteor away the other big yachts have been doing some fine sailing. Britannia started on the Clyde by beating Ailsa somewhat easily. But the Imperial yacht will soon stop her list of winning flags. There is no doubt she is the finest yacht ever built in this country.

"The next thing they will be doing will be to get Lehmann to coach them," was the comment of a Cambridge oarsman at Henley, as he and others were discussing the radical changes that Yale have made in their style. They are quite a different crew to what they were ten days ago. After seeing the Hall boat out they at once set to work to alter their style, and ordered a set of English-made oars. Hence the remark of the oarsman aforesaid. They have done one good course. But times are poor tests, and one can scarcely believe that they will be able to shake off their old methods at once, and fall into their new style in the heat and excitement of the race. They have come, they have seen, but I scarcely think they will conquer. If they do there will be no victory more enthusiastically received. It is a very sportsmanlike proceeding on their part to see the fault of their methods, and most plucky to try to remedy them in the short time at their disposal. Of the other crews for the Grand there is none that has come on so well as Leander. Holland is fit, and he is backing up Gold at stroke. New is also very good but Whitworth is inclined to clip the finish. They will run one another very close, and I shall expect Leander to win, if they meet, by a few feet. First Trinity are practically no good, while Hall do not seem to steady down; however, they may come on a good deal. For the Diamonds V. Nickalls is going splendidly. Both the Guinness's have been doing a lot of work, and the younger brother is most promising.

Michael, the Welsh cyclist, has been suspended by the National Cyclist Union. He is a professional, and lives by his riding. It is said he is to be hauled over the coals for his performance in the great chain matches. If the N. C. U. imagines it is to be the Jockey Club of professional bicycling it is grievously mistaken. It is utterly unfit for such a position. It cannot manage amateur cycling, and it has permitted that sport to become almost effete. It now proceeds to mess about with professionalism, which is bound up with trade interests, and so is the N. C. U. Justice is sure to go to the wall when an interested party officiates, and this is the case with this precious Union. It is ridiculous for it to pose as the authority to give and take away a licence on which a man's livelihood depends. A man cannot pull a bicycle as he does a horse, and he is not likely to be engaged if he does not ride up to form. It is marvellous that the professionals should not agree to ignore that body. A proper governing association is required for professionalism, but it has yet to be formed.

It was hinted the other week that the A. A. A. might inquire into the cases of Bradley and Downer, the sprinters, and Bacon, the miler. This has been done, and they are all suspended. They will not appear in the championships at the L. A. C. meeting. Woodyatt ran very well in the sprints, and Davie did good time from scratch in the mile. The Ravensbourne sports were well attended and well managed. The five miles invitation, bicycling, was won by Boston, after a really interesting race. Bredin cannot get fit, and he will not run in the championships. At the Queen's Club the other day there was a sporting match between two members. One man ran a hundred yards while the other walked fifty. Needless to say, the walker won easily.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Business was impeded during the past week by the work connected with the settlement, at which heavy rates were a feature, more especially in Home Rails and in some of the mining sections. Once the carry-over completed, however, prices hardened all round; and at the last the announcement that the Board of the Chartered Company have accepted the resignations of Messrs. Cecil Rhodes, Alfred Beit, and Dr. Rutherfood Harris, had also an invigorating influence upon the Kaffir Circus.

The Position on the Stock Exchange.

There were clear indications at the settlement that speculative purchases of the stocks of the Heavy lines had been overdone, rates going as high as from ½ to 1 per cent. Speculators, however, soon got over the little scare, and there has been a moderate rally, which extended to the other departments, and was assisted by a fresh advance in Consols. In American Rails there has been the old-fashioned sea-saw in quotations, according to the news with regard to the coming Presidential election, followed by a sharp decline owing to the growing probability of the silver men giving further serious trouble. Rumours that the Argentine Senate had passed some kind of unification scheme tended to strengthen Argentine Government stocks, but it remains to be seen what the actual provisions are, and how the Bill will fare in the Chamber of Deputies. Foreigners were temporarily depressed by the approach of the Paris settlement, but the general opinion is that there will be a fresh outburst of activity on the Continental Bourses once this has been got over. The chief interest, however, still centres in the mining market, and it is satisfactory to find that the Transvaal clouds are again lifting to some extent. Not only has President Kruger tried to explain away the interpretation of hostility which had been put upon his cable insisting upon the official inquiry into the Jameson raid, and the trial of Cecil Rhodes and Alfred Beit, which the Boers desire so much, but their actual resignation from the Chartered Board is calculated to smooth matters between the British and Transvaal Governments. We have, therefore, the curious development that this announcement has favourably affected the Kaffir Circus, with the exception chiefly of Chartered shares. This is not surprising however, as the mining industry in the Transvaal is making good progress, and labour is reported plentiful; while on the other hand the troubles besetting the Chartered Company are thickening, as the upheaval in Mashonaland is assuming large proportions, so much so that the Chartered forces are altogether insufficient, and more British troops will be required to quell it. Under the circumstances the very existence of the Company is threatened, and I do not see how a further fall in the shares can be avoided. The West Australian market has displayed a somewhat subdued tendency, high rates of continuation having caused a shake-out of weak holders. That, however is really a blessing in disguise, and will serve to steady the market in future. In fact, in view of the important crushings which will shortly be announced, I look for a distinct rally in this department. New Zealand mining shares are also active and look promising; although there is the danger of promoters overdoing the flotation of new Companies. More industrial Companies are being pushed forward, and it is more than ever necessary to discriminate in view of the very doubtful character of some of these. In the Cycle section there has been a sharp advance in Dunlop Deferred, which has been attributed to "Bear" closing; but is probably the preliminary canter for the flotation of the new French Dunlop Company. With the turn of the half year, money will become cheaper and more plentiful than ever, and the payment of interest and dividends will, no doubt, lead to renewed investment purchases, more especially in Home Rails. By the way, the resignation of Mr. Levien as Secretary of the Stock Exchange should furnish an opportunity for appointing a thoroughly competent and capable man to this important post. He need not necessarily be a member of the Stock Exchange; in fact, new blood is badly wanted. If the Committee could secure the services of one of the heads of the Railway Clearing House for instance, with great experience and organising power, this would appear a very promising choice. The best man ought clearly to be got, and there should be no favouritism. In fact, under the circumstances, members of the Stock Exchange Committee might as well abstain from offering themselves as candidates.

Home Rails Irregular.

As already mentioned, rates in the Home Railway market were heavy, more particularly in the stocks of the Heavy division, and the unusual circumstance has to be reported that the rate on North-Eastern approached 1 per cent., while contangoes of ½ or thereabouts on Midlands, Great Western, and North-Western were also a feature. After a temporary set back, however, prices have hardened again, and with the continuation of satisfactory traffics, and the approach of dividend announcements, this section will probably become more active. Brighton "A" have not altogether maintained the sharp advance which took place when stock was found to be scarce at the settlement. The announcement of the retirement of the respected Chairman of the Company, Mr. Samuel Laing, had no adverse effect, as it had been anticipated for some time. The appointment of Lord Cottesloe as Chairman, and of Sir Arthur Otway as Deputy-Chairman, had also been a foregone conclusion. The accession of Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild on the Board is, moreover, a favourable feature. The great New Court firm has for some time exercised an important influence upon the management of the Brighton Company, and now that one of the firm has become a Director, it may be assumed that the benevolent interest taken by them will continue; while it is a matter of common knowledge that a very considerable amount of stock reposes in their coffers. Dover "A" are distinctly firmer, after the recent shake out, and I should not be surprised to see a sharp improvement as we are getting nearer the dividend period, the South-Eastern doing very well now. Chathams have had a sharp, if exaggerated, set back. The House of Lords' decision is severely criticised by all parties, and must in time give way to a different measure. In the meantime the line is benefiting by its closer association with the South-Eastern, and holders should not throw away their stocks. I have already given in TRUTH of the 11th ultimo my various estimates of the dividends, which will on the whole be such as to encourage further purchases in some of the Heavies, in Brighton "A," and more particularly in Dover "A." Whether the further rise in Metropolitans which has taken place is due merely to improved dividend prospects remains to be seen. The Scotch section has hardened again, and the Deferred stocks of both the leading lines, viz., North British Deferred at 51⅜, and Caledonian Deferred Ordinary (Coras) at 62½, are amongst the best speculative purchases, more especially the former. A good deal of business has been transacted in Central of London Railway shares, and the price of the partly-paid shares has advanced to 2½. It is probable that these shares will become quite popular in time.

THE YANKEE MARKET.

The rally in American Rails has not been maintained, and although there have been considerable fluctuations, quotations are considerably lower for the week. The fact is that politics are still troubling operators, and even the outlook with regard to the Presidential election has become more obscured, as it is discovered that the silver men amongst the Democratic Party are still possessed of considerable influence. It would, therefore, not be surprising if, at the Democratic Convention in Chicago, the gold "plank" were to be severely opposed. The optimists go so far as to suggest that a contest between the Republican Party and the gold "plank" against the Democratic Party with a silver "plank" would prove beneficial, as bringing the direct issue prominently before the country; but I cannot see my way to adopt this view. For the sake of our American cousins themselves I trust, however, that the gold "plank" will prove triumphant in the Presidential struggle, so as to bring the reform of the currency system on a sound basis within sight. We have now mail advices with reference to the utterances of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan on the currency question. He was interviewed by several American contemporaries on his return to New York, and the following is one of the statements attributed to him:—

> The dominating question is the currency problem. If that is settled satisfactorily Europe will buy our securities. If it is not she won't. That is all that there is to be said. By a satisfactory settlement of the currency I mean a decision that this country will maintain the single gold standard. Unless European capitalists know in what money we will pay our debts they will not invest in our securities, and there can be no sound money that is not based on the single gold standard. As I have already said, I have nothing to do with politics, but it is my opinion that if the Republican Party adopts a sound money platform at St. Louis, a platform in which there is no straddle, but which is unmistakably in favour of the single gold standard, and the nominee accepts and stands on that platform, the result will be satisfactory alike to the capitalists of Europe and to the majority of the people of this country who have the country's real and best interests at heart. There should be no straddle, no compromise, but an unmistakable single gold standard money plank in the platform.

It is evident that in Mr. Pierpont Morgan the Americans have a thoroughly sound adviser, and if his counsel should prevail, matters in the United States would greatly improve. In the meantime I must object to the argument indulged in by the Wall Street Daily News, that there is already complete confidence in London as regards the political situation in the States. My contemporary argues that the list of securities taken by Europe during the past month through private negotiations, since Mr. McKinley's nomination had been talked of, proves the falsity of the assertion that Europe is liquidating through fear of McKinley and free silver. The following is the list of bonds which my contemporary has made up, as having been placed abroad during the last month:—

	Dols.
New York City 3½s.	4,000,000
Massachusetts 3s.	4,000,000
P. C. C. & St. Louis R. R. 4s	3,000,000
Northern Pacific 1st 4s	6,500,000
Baltimore & Ohio Receivers Certificates ...	4,000,000
New York State 3s	3,000,000
Anaconda stock	7,000,000
Milwaukee Railway bonds	5,000,000
	36,500,000

While I do not deny that some of these stocks have been negotiated on this side, it would appear that only a certain proportion has found its way into the coffers of the British public, and with some of the stocks the introducing houses are still loaded up. An encouraging feature is the prompt release of Mr. Harrison, the British official who had been captured by the Venezuelans. That looks certainly as if the Venezuelan question, of which so much was made for political purposes by President Cleveland and his clique of office-seekers, were approaching a satisfactory settlement. In the meantime, there is little doubt that the market for active American Railroad stocks will fluctuate to a considerable extent. Purchases on distinct reactions and sales on improvements would probably leave a small profit; but I am not sure that the game would be worth the candle. There is, however, no reason for bonâ-fide holders to part with their stocks at present prices. Canadian-Pacifics have declined to 62½, in sympathy with the American market, the victory of the Liberal Party in Canada also being considered as boding no good to the Company; but Grand Trunks have displayed steadiness, and a material improvement is quite on the cards, the Perpetual Debenture stock more especially deserving attention.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

The Paris Bourse is passing through a state of nervousness in connection with the settlement, but there are indications of a revival during the next account, as shown by a fresh rally in Spanish and Italians. I should not like to buy either stock at present prices, but there are always a number of gamblers in these, and the "Bulls" of Spanish are boasting that Spain will get all the money she wants, while a few victories in Cuba are also again reported. Unfortunately most of these victories eventually turn out virtual defeats. Turks have declined and recovered, and Ottoman Banks have again shown a better tone on recent developments in the Kaffir Circus, this institution being, as my readers are aware, largely interested in Transvaal stocks. The news from Buenos Ayres is conflicting. Dr. Romero's scheme for the unification of the debt was to have been modified, and now it is reported that some kind of scheme has been passed by the Senate and forwarded to the Deputies. The exact provisions of the measure are not et known, and it may be taken for granted that they Senate scheme will require further amendment to make it palatable to the European holders of the bonds. It has been suggested that the conversion should be optional, but that would be an unsatisfactory way of dealing with the question, and it would be better in that case to have no unification of the debt at all. In the meantime, a further decline in the gold premium in Buenos Ayres to 192 is a satisfactory feature. The issue of a new Uruguayan loan has been favourably received by the public. The new bonds bear 5 per cent. interest, and have been issued at 71½ per cent., so that they yield about the same return as the existing bonds. The security is a first charge on 5½ per cent. of the gross receipts of the Custom Houses of the Republic, being part of the 55 per cent. of these receipts which have not been charged for the purpose of the existing consolidated debt. The Customs receipts have been going up by leaps and bounds, and are ample for the purpose. It should also be understood, as explained by Messrs. Bircham & Co., the solicitors to the issue, that both the existing loan and the new loan rank equally, as they are secured on separate and distinct percentages of the Customs, so that neither has any priority over the other, as each is a first charge on its separate per centage. The issue is made under the auspices of leading financial houses, and of Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., who are the agents of the Republic in Europe. Its proceeds are intended for the establishment of a National Bank in Monte Video, and this institution will doubtless benefit the country. Under the circumstances, the new bonds are a promising investment, yielding nearly 7 per cent. per annum. Brazilians and Mexicans have maintained a steady tone, and there is hardly any change in the stocks of other South and Central American Republics. Costa Rica has not so far made any signs with reference to a settlement of the debt. Guatemala bonds are steady at 35, and in Peruvian Corporation stocks there is very little business. Honduras have dropped back to 5¼, which is not surprising considering the hopeless outlook with reference to any effort being made by this dishonest republic to purge itself of default.

A Kaffir Revival in Sight.

Great have been the anxieties and troubles which have beset the Kaffir Circus ever since the 1895 boom came to an untimely end through the preliminary unloading by the financial warriors who subsequently initiated the Jameson raid. Even last week matters again assumed a doubtful aspect through the very strong appeal made by President Kruger to the British Government for the trial of the chief initiators of the invasion of the Transvaal. The form of this communication was not exactly diplomatic, and Oom Paul has since been trying to explain away its unpleasant aspect. This in itself had a favourable effect upon the minds of those who looked for more Boer aggression. But even more promising is the further development which was presumably brought about by the Boer communication. The acceptance by the British Chartered Board of the resignation of Mr. Cecil Rhodes and of his associates from their official connection with the Company, should have a calming effect upon the Boer mind, and help to promote good feeling between the burghers and the Uitlanders. Mr. Chamberlain's reply to the interpellation in the House of Commons concerning the official inquiry also showed that the British Government is acting up to its promises. But is it not time to ask now, also, when the Executive of the Transvaal will initiate the reforms which are so urgently needed in the interest of the further progress of the country and of the mining industry? It is true that native labour is becoming more abundant, and that work is being prosecuted with renewed zeal on the Witwatersrand mines; but the mining industry is still suffering from intolerable duties and monopolies, and no reconciliation between the Dutch and British elements can be complete without reasonable concessions being made in this direction. As regards the June crushings, I should not like to prophesy, but any output below 200,000 oz. would be distinctly discouraging now that the released prisoners are hard at work, and presumably trying to make money for the thousands of shareholders who have been victimised through the ill-fated Jameson raid. The market position is still somewhat involved. Rates were pretty heavy at the settlement, but the chief troubles are those of persons who have most unwisely put their money into Chartered shares and into the countless Rhodesian ventures which have been floated to purchase concessions from the Chartered Company. The outlook in Rhodesia is extremely gloomy. Hardly had matters in Matabeleland assumed a more favourable aspect than Mashonaland is found in a blaze; and the expense of crushing both upheavals must prove a serious burden for the Company. Again, mining operations are altogether suspended, and the country must be thrown back for years. It looks almost like a judgment, that the withdrawal of the men who invaded the Transvaal should have enabled this native rising to assume such large proportions. I do not presume to say whether the Charter will eventually be withdrawn or not, or whether the British Government will take over the territory; but I may claim that by warning my readers to keep aloof from Chartered shares, which have descended from £8 to £3, I have saved them large sums of money. Nearly all other Rhodesian ventures have, of course, fallen to vanishing point, and here I again claim that I have for the last six months impressed upon my readers the desirability of buying sound Transvaal gold mining shares, while leaving Rhodesian ventures alone. The revival in Transvaal shares may not come to-day or to-morrow, but when matters have been adjusted between the two Governments, and the reforms are introduced, as they will be, we shall have a sustained improvement and a sharp upward movement. I, therefore, give to all my readers who are holders of such shares the advice to stick tight to their holdings, and to increase the same in sound undertakings if they can afford to take the shares up. On no account should they allow their speculative account to grow to any extent, as the past history of the Kaffir Circus has shown that those who can hold their shares during troublous times finally not only retrieve their losses, but also reap substantial profits. With reference to gold mining shares to buy, I keep to my old recommendations, in the Barnato group, for instance, of Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, Barnato Banks, New Primrose, Glencairn, Buffelsdoorn, Barnato Consols, and Rietfontein; but I do not mean to imply that other Barnato stocks not mentioned in this little list should be sold. On the contrary, it may be assumed that Mr. B. I. Barnato has made good use of his stay in South Africa to look after the various Barnato interests. He has not been very communicative on this side, even to his partners; but it is the general impression that he is coming home with a pocketful of good things, which should especially benefit his pet children, Johnnies, Barnato Banks, and Barnato Consols. In the Robinson group, too, the outlook is distinctly promising; and although dividends have fallen off temporarily in view of the troubles of the last six months, they are certain to improve again during the second half of the year. This applies more especially to the Langlaagte Estate. A dividend of 15 per cent. on the latter is now announced for the six months. No better distribution could have been anticipated for this period, owing to labour and other troubles; but the former dividends will, no doubt, again be paid during the second half year. The Randfontein bonus in Porges Randfontein shares has been assessed at 5s. per Randfontein share, being at the rate of 25s. for a Porges Randfontein share, presented as a bonus on every five Randfonteins. I maintain my favourable opinion of the Randfontein and of its Sub-Companies. Their need is labour, which is now forthcoming; and as the various mines on this large property are increasing their production, or falling into line as producers, so the Randfontein will increase in value. This also applies to the Langlaagte Star, which will yield better returns when more fully developed. Henderson's Estates and Lydenburg Estates are likely to come to the front again, and so are Modderfontein "B," which should be picked up. One of the most important Witwatersrand mines is

Notice to Connoisseurs of Fine Dry Champagne.—Périnet & Fils' Cuvée Réservée, Extra Sec, is in magnificent condition, at Hotel Cecil, Hotel Savoy, Midland Grand Hotel, Spiers & Pond's Hotels and Buffets, and most leading Hotels & Restaurants.

Knights, which, as I stated the other day, will be crushing with 120 stamps in July, so that the present price of 7¼ is very moderate. No statement has as yet been made with reference to certain important developments respecting the Mozambique Company; but it is well known that, as giving access to Rhodesia, this Company's territory is of the greatest importance, altogether apart from the merits of the many highly auriferous tracts of the country. African Estates have eased off again. The great deal which it had been hoped to conclude with the Ephrussi group has not come off, owing to the adverse turn which affairs in the Kaffir Circus have taken. There is, moreover, a good deal of weakness in Paris as far as South Africans are concerned, and heavy realisations have been forced, so that Paris is rather a broken reed for Mr. Woolan to lean on. In order to look after the interests of the African Gold Properties, two of its Directors have joined the Board of a powerful French Company, the shares of which are well held and command a free market, and are at a handsome premium in Paris. Mr. F. J. Cook, the local representative of the African Gold Properties in Johannesburg, will arrive in England next week, and it is expected that he will be able to give the London Board a highly satisfactory account of the Company's position. I told you last week that Rand Reefs would have an active market in the new account. The price has now advanced to 13s. 9d., but I anticipate a further improvement in view of the issue of the mine manager's report, which is expected during the next week, and which, it is anticipated, will disclose a very prosperous state of things. Mr. F. C. Bell, one of the Directors of the local Board in Johannesburg of the Africander Gold Mining Company, furnishes in a letter to the Press some interesting particulars concerning the mine, which have, strangely enough, so far been kept in the background by the London Board. He says that the Africander Reef has now been developed 2,500 ft. on the strike along four levels, definitely proving that, according to the assays, the reef improves in value at a greater depth. Another reef which is payable and being worked is Green's Reef, and Mr. Bell calculates that the average recovery will be fully equal to 10 dwt. per ton of ore treated. His further calculations show that, barring accidents, a profit of 12s. 6d. per ton may be anticipated, making the total monthly profit £7,500, which would work out to 45 per cent. on the capital of £200,000. If Mr. Bell's estimates are correct, the present price of 1⅞ for Africanders must be very moderate, especially as the life of the mine is estimated at thirty-four years. Woodstock (Transvaal) shares are firmer again at 1¾, and should be picked up. It is likely to prove a very rich mine, and one of the best in the district. Niekerk shares have been steadily dealt in at 1¼, and the report which has just been issued by the secretary, giving extracts from the monthly statement of the manager in South Africa, Mr. Joseph Hassell, M.E., is very favourable. Mr. Hassell cables that the improvement in the mine is most marked, that it has become a very valuable property, and that he believes it will develop into a good steady dividend-payer. The width of the lode in A 1 winze is given by Mr. Hassell as 2 ft., and the assays as 1 oz. 2 dwt. per ton. Development is steadily proceeding, and it will not apparently be long before the mine enters the list of producing properties. Sheba Hill shares have been largely dealt in at about 3s., and I understand that as soon as a further block has been cleared off, the price will be advanced to a considerable extent; so that here is a low-priced mining share which may easily yield a considerable profit on a small gamble. The accounts of the New African Company, showing a large profit, fully bear out the statements which I have at various times made with regard to the promising position of this Company. A new operation, viz., the purchase of the property of the Apex Syndicate, of about 182 claims to the south of the Farm Benoni, by the Anglo-French Exploration Company is announced. I am not quite sure that this is not merely a change from one hand to the other, but no doubt a new Company will be formed at no distant date with a very much higher capital than the purchase price, which is stated at £60,000. Rand Roodepoort shares, which it is attempted to unload, should be avoided; although low-priced, I do not think that this will prove a cheap share. The announcement by the Selukwe Consolidated that they have discharged the miners who were sent out a few months ago, as no mining operations will be possible in Matabeleland for at least another year, is a sign of the times. The Directors add that they have formally notified the Chartered Company that it will be held responsible for all loss and damage caused to the property. With reference to the flotation of the Bantjes Deep, to which I referred last week, I am told that the new Company will hold 448 claims, apparently taking up practically the whole of the southern portion of the Farm Vogelstruisfontein No. 338, which is not already held by the Vogelstruis Consolidated Deep and the Bantjes Consolidated Mines. It is stated that the Freeman Cohen's Consolidated, which has sold most of these claims, will benefit largely by this transaction. The shares in the Goldfields of Lydenburg have come into strong demand up to 3⅞. It will be remembered that this Company was formed a considerable time ago, and the shares ran up to 7½ in the autumn of last year. The Company has expended a large amount on development work, amounting to £200,000, and the results have been satisfactory in every respect, the Sherwell's Main Reef, which is 13 in. wide, having been proved to be worth over 3 oz. to the ton. The prudent policy followed by the Company is illustrated by the fact that they have £200,000 in hand, so that there will be no lack of working capital; while the timber on the estate is estimated to cover the whole of the share capital of £325,000. By the way, a correspondent writes to point out that the prospects of the Klerksdorp Proprietary are really bright, and fully justify the present price, and from the particulars he sends I feel inclined to agree with him. The reason of the recent purchases of De Beers Diamond shares is now evident, as a very satisfactory dividend and bonus have been declared, the shares standing at 31. The New Jagersfontein is also promising, and the shares are quoted at 11⅞. New Bultfontein have recovered to 2⅛-¼, at which they look a good purchase, and there have again been active dealings in Leicester Diamond shares at 3¾-⅞. If, as is generally anticipated, this proves another Jagersfontein mine, the shares will rise to a much higher level. I am told that another new Company has been formed to take up the adjoining claims to the Leicester Diamond Company, in fact all the claims in that district. It is proposed to amalgamate the two Companies into one large Company, which will have a cash working capital of £100,000. This, no doubt, means that Leicester Diamond shares will go considerably higher. Kamfersdam Diamond shares have been steady at ¼ premium, and look like going better. An instance of unblushing impudence is the prospectus of the Rooderand Main Reef Gold Mining Company, the shares in which are being puffed at 30s. The property in question is not on the main reef, yet the vendors—the Kruger Syndicate—have the audacity to quote Mr. C. S. Goldman's remarks on the main reef, and to utilise the reports of several other experts on other properties.

Golden West Australia.

This has been a week of West Australian dinners, and the man who had the courage to attend all the three West Australian functions with the Queensland dinner thrown in is to be admired but not to be envied. I suppose that the various men who were fêted on these occasions are so honoured either as a reward for having made money for the hosts, or as an incentive to make money for them. There was first of all the dinner given to Mr. Zebina Lane by the British Westralia Directors. In this case gratitude for profits made with this well-known engineer's valuable assistance was probably the motive. In the case of the dinners given to Mr. Pritchard Morgan, M.P., and to Mr. N. H. Howitt, M.E., the latter in connection with the Golden Arrow Mine, the benefits have yet to be conferred upon the admirers of these two gentlemen. Three more West Australian dinners, by the way, are coming off this week. The West Australian market unfortunately has not benefited by this outbreak of dinners, although matters West Australian were discussed on these occasions with becoming eloquence. The settlement was, of course, chiefly responsible for the pause in dealings—and for a number of realisations by such holders who were frightened out of heavy contangoes. The account was by no means unwieldy, and the position has become all the sounder. I should think, therefore, that as soon as some of the pending big crushings come to hand a sharp rally and active business will ensue. Thoughout the fit of realisations, however, the group of the West Australian Joint Stock Trust has remained strong. As I anticipated, the Directors have declared a second interim quarterly dividend upon the Ordinary shares of the Trust at the rate of 100 per cent. per annum. The Directors also report very satisfactory progress, and announce the issue of a full interim report at an early date. Such have been the profits of the Trust, that after making provision for a large reserve fund and providing for the claims of the Founders' shares the Directors foreshadow a continuance of these quarterly dividends. No wonder that the Ordinary shares stand at 3½ premium, and the Founders' shares at £60. Amongst other shares of this group Associated Gold Mines have advanced to 3⅝, reacting to 3⅜. Associated Southern to 2, and Nil Desperandum to 1¾. The remarkable success of the Lake View Extended, the latest sub-Company of the Trust, is another feature, this issue having been most favourably received both here and in Adelaide. There has been a lull in the Whitaker Wright group; but the receipt of the Mainland Consols crushing may any day enliven these shares, while the Lake View Company is about to be launched, and will lead to very active movements. In the meantime West Australian Exploring and Finance shares are quoted 3⅞; London and Globe Finance, 3⅞; Austin Friars Syndicate, 2; Mainland Consols, 4; Lake View (old shares), 7¾; Paddington Consols, at 2; Hannan's Golden Group and Hannan's Golden Treasure at 1½. From the latter two mines the news is most favourable, a cablegram stating that large bodies of ore are available for crushing. The Venture Group has been very firm, and the news from several of the sub-Companies is most encouraging, especially that from the Joker, where the lode is described as 50 ft. wide at the 80 ft. level in the south drive, and extremely rich, and from the 90-Mile Proprietary the shares of which stand at ⅜ premium. From the latter mine a cablegram states that fifteen heads of stamps are running on low-grade ore, to be increased to twenty stamps. The first crushing of 90 tons has just been announced, yielding 180 oz., exclusive of tailings, and Mr. Macklin, the Venture Syndicate's representative in Western Australia, is so greatly impressed with the prospects of the mine that he suggests the ordering of thirty more stamps. An important statement cabled is also that the Mount Sir Samuel properties are opening up well and improving at depth, especially the proprietary leases belonging to the West Australian Venture Syndicate. With reference to the Menzies properties referred to by me last week the fact that the Menzies Gold Reefs have just declared their first dividend of 2s. per share is encouraging, as this is the first Menzies Company to enter the dividend list. As already stated, I have a favourable opinion of Menzies Crusoe now at 1½, Menzies Consols at 1 1/16 and Menzies Alpha Leases at 1½. In the Stoneham group West Australian Goldfields are somewhat easier at 10, and Hampton Plains after touching 4⅞ have improved to 5 1/16. This temporary increase must be due to mere temporary market influences as the position of this Company is better than ever. This is also the case with Block 50. Hampton Plains, which are a good purchase at 1 7/16. Hannan's Napier at about par, Miner's Dream at 1⅜, Consuello at 1, Armadale at 1⅛, and Victoria Reefs at ¼ premium are promising shares still at comparatively low prices. Great Boulders are quiet at 7⅜, and Great Boulder South stand at 1⅝, the latter being likely to take a sudden jump one of these days. Challenge at 1⅝, Kurnalpi Development at 1 9/16, and Great Boulder East Extended at 1 7/16, may be expected to have a rise soon. The "Bears" have been badly caught in Royal Sovereign shares, which touched 4¼, and still stick at 4. According to the West Australian Goldfields Courier there are several reefs assaying from 1½ oz. to 2 oz., but portions of the mine are very rich, a parcel of stone from the outcrop sent to Southern Cross yielding 8 oz. per ton, while the quartz in situ near the surface pans out to the tune of 5 or 6 oz. per ton. The Anglo-French Colonial Trust has a considerable interest in Royal Sovereigns, and the shares have advanced to 2. Bradbury World's Drill, also floated by this Trust, are steady at 1⅝. Bird-in-Hand shares are firm at 1 1/16. This mine is on the same line of reef, and favourable developments on the Royal Sovereign would also benefit this mine. Hannan's Mount Ferrum, on the favourable news from the mine, are firm at 2¼. With reference to the Cassidy Hill, I have received a communication from Messrs. J. A. Campbell & Co., of 17, South-street, London, E.C., who propose to bring the shareholders together for the purpose of inquiring into the management. It is quite time that something of the kind should be done, and shareholders should therefore communicate with this firm. New Explorers' Syndicate shares are firm at ⅜-½ premium. The Syndicate has some very lucrative business in hand, such as its De Beers property in the Gibraltar district, where a remarkable formation over 100 ft. in width has been discovered carrying free gold from 10 dwt. at the surface to 2½ oz. at a depth of 73 ft. The Syndicate also owns some cement claims at the 25-Mile, McPhee's Reward at Marble Bar in the Pilbarra fields, a share in the Bradbury Drill rights for Western Australia and the U.S.A., and 108 claims in South Africa picked up cheaply during the depression. Of course, it also benefits greatly by the rise in Burbank's Birthday Gift to 1⅞, of which it has a large holding. Hannan's King (Brownhill) Gold Mining shares have advanced to 1¼-½. The news by mail is to the effect that the quartz leader recently discovered has widened considerably carrying good gold. Princess Royal shares have improved to 7s. 6d. to 8s., and the consulting engineer cables from Coolgardie that 10,000 tons of ore are in sight, mostly high-grade ore, and that prospects are undoubtedly good. Respecting the Yalgoo Battery property, a cablegram has been received from the Manager, Mr. Matthew Wynn, stating that a large body of ore has been opened up, showing gold freely. The Company has also acquired an additional property of about 18 acres, known as the Glad Tidings Seam, and adjoining the mine. I have received several inquiries concerning the Mining Finance Syndicate, which seems to be a small concern started to swell the large number of West Australian Exploring Companies, and that is really all that can be said of it. Some more favourable advices have been received with respect to the King of the West Gold Mining Company. A cablegram has come to hand stating that the average width of the reef was 3 ft. 6 in., and that the estimated value of the stone at grass was from 1 to 2 oz. of gold per ton. The Company has the very small capital of £50,000, and not only has the present working capital of £15,000 been subscribed in cash, but there are a further 10,000 shares in reserve for working capital. The reports of the experts point to this mine proving a very rich property. Mr. Walter Burrell estimates the value of the ore in the reef at from 4 to 5 oz. of gold per ton; and the cablegram above referred to seems to lead to the conclusion that the stone will be much richer at depth. Mr. J. J. East, F.G.S., expresses a similar opinion; and it is probable that the shares, which now stand at 2⅛, will rise to a much higher value. The Company is, moreover, backed up by strong people. From the Bass and Flinders Mine advices are to the effect that the property is opening up very satisfactorily, and that a good flow of water has been struck at 133 ft.; the engineer also reporting that a yield of from 2½ oz. to 3 oz. of gold per ton may be expected when the machinery is got at work. Gladiators are being actively dealt in at from 1⅛ to 1¼. These shares were quoted as high as 2¼ at the end of last year, while the position is in every respect improved. Professor Nicholas cables that eleven shafts have been sunk, varying in depth from 30 ft. to 87 ft., and that there are two reefs on the property which have been proved to a length of 1,000 ft. A large amount of ore is reported to be in sight, and Professor Nicholas adds that it is one of the richest gold mines in the Coolgardie district. With these credentials the shares should rise to a much higher level.

INDIAN, NEW ZEALAND, AND OTHER MINES.

Indian Gold Mines have been temporarily relegated to the background, through no fault of theirs, however, as the news continues very favourable. Fluctuations have, moreover, been slight, and advances are marked in Mysore Gold to 7½, and in Ooregum Prefs. to 4, while slight declines have occurred in Champion Reef, Mysore Wynaad, and Balaghat. Coromandel at 2, and Goldfields of Mysore at 26s., are still the most tempting purchases apart from Kadur Mysore, which are quoted from 7s. to 7s. 6d. In New South Wales mines Aladdin's Lamp have attracted most attention, having advanced to 2 on the declaration of the dividend of 2s., which I had foreshadowed. This brings the dividend declared during the existence of the Company (June, 1892) to 27s., equal to 30 per cent. per annum. With the new machinery just being put up, capable of treating double the quantity of ore hitherto crushed, the dividend should increase even beyond this figure. Another return from the Aladdin's Mine has just come to hand, which states that the yield was 1,537 oz., valued at £5,747. This is a further reason why the shares in this Company should improve. A new Tasmanian mine, the Curtin Davis Proprietary Company, is coming into notice. This is an amalgamation of two Companies, which are working copper and silver lodes, somewhat on the same lines as the Mount Lyell. The capital is £200,000 in £1 shares, but only 50,000 shares have been issued. It may be pointed out that the copper is, as is usual with Tasmanian mines, all above ground. The quality of the ore appears to be very satisfactory, and Mr. H. H. Schlaap, one of the leading mining experts in Melbourne, is of opinion that at depth the permanent ore in the lode may be expected to approximate to an average of 36 oz. of silver and 20 per cent. of copper. The £1 shares have come into demand at 2½, and are likely to go to a higher level. Wentworth Proprietary are dull at 1. From the Croydon goldfields most satisfactory reports are to hand concerning the Croydon Consols. A clean up of 2,094 oz. of gold from 560 tons has been followed by an interim partial clean up of 438 oz. from 180 tons, and the 10 head of stamps are being kept going. It is curious that these shares should not have risen yet beyond 5s. New Zealand Mines have been rather dull, which is not surprising considering the sharp — and in some cases altogether excessive—advances which have taken place. Taitapu have receded to 3½, Waitekauri to 5½, Waihi to 7, Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand to 4¼. This is the penalty paid by this section for the exaggerated rush of new enterprises. United New Zealand Exploration shares have not been affected by the surrounding weakness, and stand at 2½. Komata Reefs are quoted 12s. 6d, and Komata Queens at 4s. 6d. are likely to follow in their wake, also Maoriland Gold Mines now at 3s. 6d. and Preece's Pont at 4s. Anglo-Continental Gold Syndicate shares have come into demand at from 2 5/16 to 2 7/16. This Company has been instrumental in forming the United New Zealand Exploration Company, which has already been so successful, and the shares in which have, as already stated, come into strong demand at a large premium. In the general foreign section Rio Tinto have again braced up, Anaconda following more slowly; Burma Ruby, Montana, and Golden Feather are firmer, and Holcomb are again improving. I am more than ever convinced that my view as to Mines Contract shares being very much under price is correct. Those who buy at the present level should make a very good investment, and it is said that they may look forward to a substantial dividend within the next few weeks. The Mines and Banking Corporation is quietly forging ahead and doing good business. These shares will suit those who want a sound investment, and one which yields a satisfactory rate of interest. I hear that developments on the Malacate Mine are satisfactory, and that the smelting now in progress will initiate large bullion shipments. This property covers an area of over nine square miles, and about £70,000 has been expended in opening up the mine. The Company has, I hear by cable, entered into a favourable contract with neighbouring smelters, who undertake to treat 100 tons per day for the next three years. This will be in addition to the Company's own smelting operations. The ore runs from 60 to 200 oz. of silver per ton, and contains from ¼ to 2 oz. of gold. The Company is presided over by a thoroughly competent Board, the Chairman of which is Mr. F. Muir, who is also Chairman of the De Lamar Mining Company. The shares are quoted 22s. 6d., and are a good mining investment. Holcomb Valley Prefs. are again in the ascendant, being quoted from 1s. 4½d. to 1s. 7½d. I hear that the Company has completed two remunerative transactions in West Australian mines, out of which it will reap considerable profits. In fact, the Holcomb Valley Directors are laying themselves out specially for this exploring and finance business, in addition to the development of its own property. According to latest advices from the latter, they are driving on the reef under the advice of a very competent mining engineer, and hope to get substantial results.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Leamington Cycle Company, Limited.—This Company is formed to take over three established Cycle Companies as going concerns and extensive freehold works at Leamington. The capital is £70,000 in shares of £1 each.

The properties acquired by this Company are situated in various parts of London, and are doing a good ready money trade. The property at Leamington is large, well situated, and capable of turning out 20,000 machines in the year. The capital is moderate considering future possibilities. I notice that Mr. H. L. Tangy and Mr. John Fell, ex-Mayor of Leamington, are on the Board.

Pearks, Gunston, & Tee, Limited.—This Company has been formed with a capital of £200,000 to acquire and amalgamate the businesses carried on by those who give the name to the Company.

This is another amalgamation of several businesses situate in various parts of London, all of which are said to be successful. If so, why should the various owners combine to sell when it could be done individually? The promoters and proprietors will, I think, receive the chief benefit from this venture.

The Endurance Tube and Engineering Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the business established in 1892 by the Endurance Seamless Tube and Vial Company, Limited, at King's Norton. The capital is £190,000 in £1 shares.

This prospectus candidly admits that an attempt was made in May last to float a Company for the same purpose, but that it did not meet with success. The promoters are now trying again without the extensions named in the previous prospectus and with the capital greatly reduced; but whether the fates will be more propitious is doubtful.

The Hampton Cycle and Foundry Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the business of Messrs. J. Hampton & Sons, ironfounders, &c., of West Bromwich, Birmingham. Capital £90,000 in £1 shares.

The valuable patent rights which are alluded to in this prospectus are those of Signor Grelli for an apparatus transforming an ordinary bicycle into one with two seats, in fact, "a bicycle made for two." This invention was recently floated on its own account, but apparently met with no success; and I fail to see where the "valuable" comes in, or that £90,000 should be asked for such a venture.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

Furness, Withy, & Company.—This is an issue of £450,000 4½ per cent. debentures at £100 each at 105, repayable by annual drawings at £110, or by purchase out of a sum of £20,000 per annum to be set apart for that purpose. The capital of the Company is £1,000,000.

New Coolgardie Gold Exploration and Finance Association (W.A.) Limited.—This Company has been formed with the object of entering into the business of gold, land, town-site, water-right, and other concessions in Western Australia. The capital is fixed at £150,000, divided into 300,000 shares of 10s. each.

The Mount Malcolm Proprietary Gold Mines, Limited.—The mining properties to be acquired by this Company comprise an area of about 144 acres in the North Coolgardie goldfields, Western Australia. The capital is £250,000 in £1 shares.

The Southern Cross Gold Mines Development Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed to carry on the usual business of an exploration and development Company in connection with mining properties, &c. The capital is £100,000 in £1 shares.

This is a very "enticing" prospectus for the unguarded. One paragraph is underlined throughout to impress upon investors the fact that the directors have secured an "offer" of gold-bearing properties, and that further negotiations are in progress for acquiring other valuable properties upon terms which will enable a large profit to be made. I think it will be as well to await the completion of the first, and to see the result of the second, of these transactions. By the way, why should the application form be marked "special" and underlined?

The Gloucester Gold Mining Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring two gold-mining properties situate in the Thames District, Hauraki Goldfield, New Zealand. The capital is £120,000, in shares of 2s. 6d.

This property is about 87 acres in extent, and contains several old claims, amongst which is the "Adelaide" and "Last Chance." There are several known lodes upon the property, and well-known mining experts have reported favourably upon the prospects. This appears to be a fair mining venture.

The Simmer and Jack Proprietary Mines, Limited.—The African Banking Company is authorised to receive subscriptions for £500,000 First Debentures of the above Company. The Debentures are of £100 each, and are issued at par, and bear interest of 5½ per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly.

The Simmer and Jack is a most prosperous mine, and this is a welcome opportunity for investors seeking a good return for their money with security.

The New Premier Cycle Company, Limited.—Share capital, £600,000. The Company is formed to acquire, as a going concern, the business of the Premier Cycle Company.

The Joker Proprietary Gold Mines.—Capital £250,000. Issue of 55,000 shares of £1 each. This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and working a group of mining leases in the Yalgoo district, Western Australia.

Hearl & Tonks' Cycle and Components Manufacturing Company, Limited.—Capital £160,000 in £1 shares. The Company is formed to acquire the business of manufacturers of Cycles and Cycle Components now carried on by Messrs. Hearl & Tonks.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

H. N.—Yes, Uruguay Government bonds are a fair investment. There is a pause in Argentines, which is justified owing to the uncertainity with regard to the proposed unification scheme. R. P.—Yes, the new Uruguayan loan is a good investment, yielding nearly 7 per cent. per annum.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Chippendale.—I have so frequently warned people not to have anything to do with the Provident Association of London, or with its offshoot, the Provident Free Home Association of London, that I cannot really assist you in the matter. Why do you not read your Truth more carefully? Avalon.—I am glad to hear that the outside broker in question has settled the account without the pressure of a solicitor; I have not generally had any complaints about him. Agnostic.—On the full share. Yes, a good investment if you do not object to the liability. P.A., Stockwell.—I am afraid that you have not much chance of recovering so large an amount from such a shady outside broker; but I forwarded the name of the solicitors in your envelope as requested. R. N., Bognor.—What you require cannot be had, unless you invest in a somewhat speculative security. W. H. D.—Be careful. Rex.—I do not see how I can help you in recovering the money which you put in the Atlas Contracting Syndicate, Limited, of 31, Lombard-street, E.C. I have never heard of its existence before, and why did you invest in it? Matabele.—1. Yes, respectable. 2. Be careful. Enniskillen.—You should have nothing whatever to do with the circulars of syndicate touts, such as the Guarantee Stock and Share Corporation, late of 25, Broad-street House, E.C., and now Frank Tarrant & Company, 70 and 71, Bishopsgate-street, E.C.: P. A., Clapham (Second communication).—I cannot reply by letter. The firm in question is very doubtful, and does not belong to the better class of outside brokers. You will have to look very sharp, or else you will lose your money. Tarts.—You should not be tempted by the glowing circulars of J. Edwards & Co., syndicate touts, Talbot House, Arundel-street, London, E.C. W. E. P.—These German lotteries are bona-fide enough, but the intermediaries are shady, and the money generally sticks to their fingers. Fiorini.—The bonds are genuine enough, but Cunliffe, Russell & Co. generally charge far above the market price, and if you want to buy these bonds you should do so through a respectable foreign banker in London. Executor.—At present it is impossible to give you an investment yielding from 2½ to 3 per cent., on which there is no reason to fear any depreciation in capital value. There is a regular famine of high-class investment stocks just now, and prices are unduly inflated.

Home Rails.

Chester Road.—Hold North British Deferred, and buy more to average.

American and Foreign Rails.

Clementina.—No reason to sell the Uruguay stocks Nos. 1 and 2 at present, and there is a fair prospect of both improving. Of course, they are not gilt-edged. Income Bond.—The maximum interest is 6 per cent. per annum. Ubique.—1. In sympathy with other American stocks, but these bonds should be held. 2. Yes. Pink.—These Argentine Railway bonds will doubtless go ahead again, the line has had a bad year.

Mining Shares.

Tyke.—1. You should hold for the present, and send the proxy. 2. I am glad you are doing so well in Mainland Consols on my advice, and you should hold for a further rise. Lex.—1. No, I do not advise purchase of London and New Zealand Exploration Company at present price; but you can find various promising Exploration Companies mentioned in my letter. 2. No, you can do better in other New Zealand mines also mentioned in my letter. 3. Impossible to tell yet with reference to the next Johnnies dividend; the amalgamation will no doubt precede any further distributions. 4. Caratals are more promising now. 5. Komata Queens are a good purchase. Castra.—1. Yes, Porges Randfontein are a fair mining risk. 2. At once, now that labour is getting more abundant. 3. Only on account of labour trouble. 4. They are a good purchase. 5. The distribution of Porges Randfontein shares to Randfontein shareholders has now been made. 5. You ought not to sell unless you get a good profit. I do not advise purchase of No. 7 (Golden Plums), No. 8 (Campana Gold), or No. 9 at present prices. Foulard.—Certainly hold No. 1 (Africana), No. 2 (Oceana Lands), No. 3 (Hannan's Props.), and No. 4 (Randfontein) for an advance. I know nothing of the Cycle Company in question, and I do not approve of a purchase of East Rand Extensions; but Rand Reefs are a good speculative purchase. W. J. Y. H.—1. Certainly not; it is S. who is respectable, not the other man. You can find what you require in the way of mines and exploration shares in my letter. Albert Edward.—A. A fair mining risk. B. Do not sell now, they should recover. C. No option but to hold for the present. Maurice Kaminiski.—These low-priced shares are likely to recover again. G. G. G.—1. I am sorry I cannot oblige you. 2. No, a doubtful outside broker. 3. A fair mining risk. Cynicht.—Hold Wealth of Nations for an improvement, I do not recommend the exchange now. E. L.—I think there is a prospect of all your South African mines recovering, and you should hold now. Ibex.—Nos. 1 to 4 are fair mining risks; No. 2 are doubtful; Hannan's Golden Treasure (3) is a first-rate purchase, and likely to go higher. Tarasenesca.—1. A fair mining risk; do not sell now. 2. These are all promising. 3. I do not care for these; you can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter. 4. Yes, good prospects. Tin Tag.—I have not of late recommended purchase of Broken Hill, Montana, or Wentworths, and you have made these purchases entirely on your own responsibility. Neither am I in favour of Sheba Queens. The only fair purchase amongst the lot is No 2. Why do you not read your Truth carefully before making such selections? Gold Reefs.—I do not think well of the shares mentioned by you, and agree with my contemporary. The document is returned. K. B. W.—You are entitled to your opinion, and I to mine. Knock.—Do not sell now, as they are likely to recover. Sapphire.—As you did not say that you sold the Randfonteins without the rights, you are bound to deliver the Porges Randfontein shares. Randfontein were quoted ex rights on June 17. 1. I do not care for Great Fingall Reefs, but you had better hold now. Also keep Nos. 2 to 7 for the present, as a recovery is probable. L. C. G.—Yes, Niekerk are a good purchase, as you will see from the favourable news which has been received with regard to this property. Shahjehan.—Amongst the mining shares mentioned by you I like Nos. 1 and 2 (Thames Hauraki) best. No. 3 is a fair mining risk, and Nos. 4 and 5 are also fair purchases; but I do not care for No. 6 (Dorics). Observer.—1. A fair investment. 2. No catch, but you had better hold for the present. 3. Promising. I do not advise purchase of Sheba Queens, but of Sheba Hills, which are more promising; and instead of the other West Australian shares, you will do better by making your selection from my letter under "Golden West Australia." F. G., Glasgow.—Great Boulder East (1) and Great Boulder Perseverance (2) are promising mines. A., Birmingham.—No option but to hold Nos. 1 and 2, but do not buy any more. Lisbon-Berlyn (3) should be sold on an improvement. I do not advise purchase of Rand Explorations, you can do better by making your selection from my letter. James.—City of London Gold Mines are a good purchase. I do not like the Indian gold mines mentioned by you, and prefer Goldfields of Mysore and Coromandel. Tune.—Do not buy any more Ejndina, but Golden Cement should be bought to average. Swansea.—This New Zealand mine is a fair purchase, but you can do better in those mentioned in my letter, more especially in West Australians. Too many mines playing on the name of Hauraki are coming out now; be careful. Spes.—No option but to hold Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement, which is probable. United Australian Exploration (6) is a promising Company. O. S.—The Lake View Mine is the important mine which is now being converted into an English Company. Airdrie.—I can only repeat that I do not like Sam's Wealth of Nations. Amongst the shares mentioned by you I like Hannan's Golden Group (3) and Hannan's Golden Treasure (4) best. Brown, Forfar.—I do not care for any of the shares mentioned by you, Nos. 1 to 4, and should certainly not advise you to buy more. Sell when you can get out without a loss. Rob Roy.—As far as I can learn there is nothing seriously the matter with the mine, and the shares are likely to recover. Pangbourne.—Your shares, Nos. 1 to 4, are well selected, and you should certainly average No. 1 (Buffelsdoorn). Kerry.—I do not recommend purchase of these Charters Towers mines, they are out of fashion; you had better stick to West Australians or South Africans. Correspondent, Rome.—Nothing is known here about the syndicate mentioned at present; it seems to be a silent one. Sierra Leone.—1. Recent events in South Africa have depressed this mine, but it should go ahead again. 2. I prefer Knights to the Deep Level shares. Taffy.—I should certainly advise you to hold the various Hannan's properties mentioned. B. Boss.—1. For no particular reason. 2. They should recover. 3. Impossible to tell yet. 4. Trees do not grow into the skies, and I should not advise you to hold Aladdins until they reach 6. With reference to the Loyal Gold Mining Company, capital 1,300,000 francs, which has been puffed in the French provincial press, I know nothing of this concern, and should certainly not advise any one to put money into it. Please adopt another nom de plume. Thitz.—Amongst low-priced New Zealand shares, Maoriland Gold shares are a good purchase, and should be held. The same applies to Irene (Hauraki), on which you already have a profit. J. M.—With reference to the "Gold Consols," I cannot give you the information you require; but the secretary ought to supply it. As the list closed on March 6, and presumably the allotment followed soon after, a meeting should soon be held, more especially as the money is being called up so rapidly. On the face of it I do not like this concern. St. Briac.—1. I do not like Rooderand Main Reefs, if that is what you mean. Porges Randfontein (2) and Waterfall Estates (3) should be held. W. H. T.—I must again mention that I cannot reply by letter, but I have returned the document in your envelope. I do not recommend Hannan's Pride. Florence.—Certainly hold Central Boulder (1). The Langlaagte Estate and Building Company has been affected by the disturbed state of the Transvaal; but matters are improving, and prospects, I am told, are very good. Alexander.—I cannot trace any documents with reference to the New Australian Goldfields; at all events I do not like it. D. A.—You are quite right, Croydon Consols (2) are most promising; but I do not care for No. 1, and should advise you to rather buy some other West Australian mine, such as 90-Mile Proprietary or Joker Proprietary. Edzell.—The news from the property is favourable, and you had better write to the Secretary for further information. Kauri.—1. I do not like Rand Roodepoort. The recommendation was doubtless inspired. 2. In due time these should go ahead again. 3. No option but to hold; do not average yet. 4. I do not like Kauri Freehold. Sawbones.—1. No, it is a different mine. 2. This is quite correct, and the shares should be held for an improvement. W. E. T., Ebbw Vale.—1. No, I do not like Campana. 2. Randfontein will go much better in the course of this year, but I cannot tell what price they will reach. 3. Yes, hold Buffelsdoorn Estates. Springfield.—No option but to hold the South African shares Nos 1 to 4, all of which should recover again. Thurlow.—A fair New Zealand mine, but no catch at present price. L. E. W.—1. You might put the money into Langlaagte Estate, Randfontein, or Barnato Consols, in the matter of South Africans; and into 90-Mile Proprietary and Associated Southern as regards West Australians. 2. Fair mines on the Rand. Q. E. D.—The prospects of the West Australian mine in question are fair, but you got in too high. I daresay that Orions will go ahead again, but you also got too high into these. Ottery.—I cannot myself understand the weakness of these shares; some large blocks seem to have been unloaded. Chrysanthemum.—You ought to join the other shareholders who are now agitating with reference to the African Gold Concessions, and in the meantime refuse to pay the call. Take a fair profit in De Beers. West End.—With regard to the African Gold Concessions, see preceding reply. Cornered.—No option but to hold all your shares, Nos. 1 to 7, although I do not like the last-mentioned; the others should improve again. P. C. L.—No reason that I can discover at present. Freights.—Nigels should be held. H. J. A.—You cannot call the mining concern in question a perfectly safe investment. Why not buy Langlaagte Estate, which will yield you good and steady dividends? Plen.—1. No, they will not be distributed so. 2. Claim the rights from your broker, if there should be any. 3. The Porges Randfontein shares, as a bonus to the Randfontein shareholders, will probably be distributed within a month or so. 4. I do not advise purchase at present. 5. Possibly, but still doubtful. 6. Yes, a fair mining risk. W. S. W.—No catch. Manager.—1. I certainly would not advise you to deal with these outside brokers; you had better obtain the address of a member of the London Stock Exchange through your bankers. 2. You will find what you require in my letter under "Golden West Australia." 3. I certainly do not advise a purchase of Chartered. I cannot reply by letter. Verniew.—I do not recommend purchase of Rand Roodepoort. No option but to hold the low-priced West Australian shares; and Associated Gold Mines are likely to go still higher. The other shares are not at all promising. Lancastrian.—I have no favourable opinion of Nos. 1 and 2; but No. 3 is a fair mining risk. Yet you can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Cantab, Manchester.—Yes, I still hold a favourable opinion of Golden Cement Claims. With reference to the General Development Syndicate (which has been formed to obtain money for the purpose of acquiring the "Hannan's Pride," and forming same into a Company with a capital of £150,000), and which is being pushed by private circulars, I advise you to be extremely careful. Yeomanry.—Hold Knights for a further rise. It is a very promising Witwatersrand mine. E. H.—A very fair Company, which is sure to go ahead again. The address of the Caratal Company is 57, Moorgate-street, E.C. Rock House.—1. No option but to hold; they should recover again. 2. I should prefer Croydon Consols. Spero.—No option but to hold all your shares A to R for an improvement, which is probable in many of them. Nil Desperandum.—The position has apparently changed; but you have no option than to hold.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

E. F. G.—I do not like the Great Horseless Carriage Company recently floated, but I do not see how you can get out of the payment of the calls once having subscribed. John Thomas.—This is a local brewery concern, about which no information is available here. J. A. S.—Sell when you can get out without a loss. Do not place implicit confidence in brokers' advice, which is very often bad. Osborn.—Have nothing to do with these Stores. As regards the new process, I will refer to it when the Company is issued. Box, Leeds.—I do not advise purchase of Van den Bergh's Margarine shares. Vorwarts.—No; I do not advise purchase of Simpson's Lever Chains, and am surprised that you should ask this question, as I have repeatedly expressed an unfavourable opinion of same. You do not appear to read your TRUTH carefully enough. Beeston.—No, I do not consider such a purchase advisable. Investor.—I quite agree with you that it is not correct that Field-Marshal Lord Roberts should be on the Board of public Companies such as the Consolidated Tea and Lands Company; but, on the other hand, I think you are correct that there is no authority for the rumour that the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Wolseley, not to be outdone, has become a Director of the Mazzawattee Tea Company. That would be altogether out of the question. Stutters.—I have repeatedly stated that I do not like New Beeston Cycles as an investment. Anxious.—I have already stated that I do not like the Great Horseless Carriage Company as being far too speculative. J. R., Newry.—I do not like the Artificial Silk Company at all. Oleum.—The publication in question is of no importance whatever, and you should pay no heed to its remarks. Garge.—1. I have already stated that this Company is over-capitalised. 2. A fair investment. 3. I do not know enough of this concern to be able to advise you. A. C. W. R.—Cycle Manufacturers' Tube shares should be held for an improvement. The statutory meeting took place on June 30. H. A. B.—No option but to hold these American Brewery shares for a recovery. C. H. ST.—I cannot trace this Company, but it seems to have been born privately, and has apparently blushed unseen.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Dolphin.—1. Yes, hold New Crœsus and buy more to average. 2. I do not think much of the Tramway Stock. 3. No particular temptation to buy just yet. Tipperary.—1. These should recover again. 2. Do not sell in a panic, although I do not think well of this concern. 3. London and Globe Finance are likely to go higher. Why not take your splendid profit in Paddington Consols, no one was ever ruined by taking profits; all the same I fancy they will go better. 4. I do not recommend a purchase of either Achilles or Lisbon-Berlyn, you will find much better shares recommended in my letter. 6. Yes. Shan Van Vocht.—It would be advisable in future to number your inquiries, as this simplifies matters very much. You had better keep your present investments in the hope of a further improvement. I do not think much of any of the shares mentioned, and should think that for a small investment Chester Lion Brewery Four-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Debentures at about 105 would be preferable. No reason to sell Buenos Ayres Great Southern at present. Your broker's advice does not seem satisfactory at all. W. H. D.—1. Dunlop Ordinary are likely to improve. 2. Ditto Deferred have already risen to $\frac{7}{8}$ premium, but you must take your own course. I do not think much of No. 3. Nos. 4 and 5 are fair mining risks. 6. I have not a favourable opinion of the Claremont Cycle Manufacturing Company. Ophir.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you, you should certainly hold Hampton Plains, Menzies Crusoe, and Hannan's Main Reef for a further advance. The other stocks are fair investments, but no catch. Mandlins.—1. You ought not to take any notice of such trash. I should advise you to hold Johnnies and Barnato Banks for an improvement. 2. Do not average, but hold for a recovery, and then sell. 3. Keep them for the present; but Hampton Plains and Randfontein are distinctly more promising. Scarecrow.—A. You must tell me in what class of stocks you would invest the £5,000 so as to obtain an average yield of from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 per cent. Would American Railroad bonds do? B. Very fair investments, especially Nos. 2 and 3. C. If you answer my question as regards A in the affirmative, I will give you a list of American Railroad Gold bonds. Junior Carlton.—1. Sell whenever you can realise a fair profit. 2. Yes, when African Estates reach that price you should sell. H. L.—1. Sell on a rise. I do not like Raleigh Cycles (2), and the investments Nos. 3 to 7 are more or less speculative. Strathairlie.—The Company was, in my opinion, over-capitalised, and this I stated at the time. If you can get out without a loss, you might as well do so. Hold the West Australian shares for an improvement. H. H.—1. After the important advance I think it would be advisable to await further developments. 2. I do not recommend a purchase of Richmond Mines; there are many others mentioned in my letter which are more promising. Colliery.—This Transvaal Colliery Company should in time yield good results; in the present dulness of the market the shares should be held. Ontario are a fair purchase, and Chathams should be held. Harlesden.—Some of the shares Nos. 1 to 3 leave you a good profit, why not take it? Sunlight Incandescent (4) are likely to further improve. You might take your profit on No. 5 (Hotel Cecil). I do not think much of No. 6 (Mazzawattee). No. 7 is a fair mining risk. No. 8 is high enough. You can find the gold mining shares you require mentioned in my letter. S. J.—You ought to obtain the information from the London agency of the West Rand Mine at 15, George-street, Mansion House, and should insist upon obtaining the same. The Preference shares mentioned by you are a fair investment, but by no means gilt-edged. Cantab., Salisbury.—1. All your West Australian shares should be held; but you should take a good profit when you can get it. 2. A fair purchase, but no catch. Seaside.—1. I do not like the United Alkali Company. 2. Neither do I like these. 3. Of these I have repeatedly spoken unfavourably. 4. You must tell me what kind of investment you seek, and what yield you require. Heather. — All your American bonds should be held; their time will come again. Urugnay bonds, and especially the new Loan, are a good purchase, and preferable to some of the Industrial shares mentioned by you. Sooner or later the Langlaagte Estate will, no doubt, distribute a bonus. Barima. — Hold your shares Nos. 1 to 7 for an improvement. Ignorant, Co. Down. — 1. Hainaults are high enough. 2. No catch. 3. They are now at 15s. premium. 4. Cycle Manufacturers' Tube shares should certainly be held. The statutory meeting was held on June 30. D. Fell.—1. The document is returned, I have not much of an opinion of this West Australian mine. 2. A fair mining risk. 3. I have already referred to this Company; but take a moderate profit. 4. I do not like this new Assurance Corporation. Goatherd.—1. I understand that the prospects of this mine are favourable. 2. Do not buy yet, although there is no doubt that eventually they will see higher prices. 3. A fair speculative industrial investment. 4. Yes. 5. An improvement is probable when the new Lake View Company comes out. Medicus, Dublin.—1. The Debentures of this Brewery Company are a fair speculation; but I do not care for the shares. Nux Vom.—Hold all your shares Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement, which is probable. I do not think much of Nos. 6 and 7, your broker should, however, be able to dispose of these shares.

Various Investments.

Consols have braced up again, and as purchases for the Government cannot be indefinitely put off, it is not improbable that there will be a further, if only temporary, advance on the present quotation of $113\frac{1}{4}$, more especially as surplus funds, available in the Money Market, will be again increased this month. Silver is $\frac{1}{8}$ better at $31\frac{1}{2}$d., the silver party in the States having taken fresh courage, while the tenders invited by the French Government for a supply of the white metal this week also are calculated to help the quotation. Rupee Paper, after advancing to $64\frac{7}{8}$, has dropped to $64\frac{5}{8}$, but the Chinese silver loan remains at $119\frac{1}{2}$. In Home Brewery shares Allsopp are firmer at about 180 for the Ordinary, while Guinness's are quoted 670. Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust shares are finding ready buyers at 6, at which they yield upwards of 5 per cent., with every prospect of an increase in capital value. Chester Lion Brewery Debentures at 105 return $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., and are amongst the cheapest and best secured of this class of investment. In American Breweries St. Louis Ordinary are firmer at $5\frac{7}{8}$ x.d., the Preference at $10\frac{5}{8}$; but I consider the Milwaukee & Chicago Brewing Prefs. at $8\frac{1}{4}$-$\frac{1}{2}$ (ex. 8s. on account of arrears), and especially the Ordinary at $3\frac{1}{2}$, more promising in view of the progress which this Company has been making since the close of the beer war. In Nitrate Rails dealings have been restricted, and the price has relapsed to $7\frac{1}{2}$, while Nitrate Producing shares have been altogether stagnant. In Cycle shares a firmer tendency has prevailed, Dunlop Deferred more especially advancing to $\frac{7}{8}$ premium. There has also been some recovery in Components to $4\frac{3}{4}$. Preparations are being made for the issue of the French Dunlop conversion under the same auspices as the Dunlop Pneumatic. The Coventry Machinists' Company will also be a claimant for public favour, but I have not yet been able to form a judgment of its merits. So much, of course, will depend upon the capitalisation. The purchase of the Trafford Park Estate near Manchester has also been much discussed of late. I also hear that amalgamation of the well-known firms of decorators and furnishers, Laverton & Co., of Bristol, and Lewis & Lewis, of Cardiff and Newport, is one of the coming new Companies. J. Edwards & Co., Stock and Share Dealers, of Talbot House, Arundel-street, W.C., are again to the front with a circular headed "Still more Profits," in which they boast of having closed an operation in Metropolitans at a net profit of $75\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., and they now are inviting participation in a syndicate in New York Central. I need hardly say that, notwithstanding the splendid profits which Edwards & Co. are mentioning in their circular, I advise my readers to keep their money in their pockets. The same advice I give to recipients of circulars from Mr. Claude Audain, an outside broker, of 107, London-wall, who is hawking about First Mortgage Debentures in the Isle of Wight Brewery Company, Limited, at £195 for ten debentures of £20 each, and twenty-five Six per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures of £10 each in the Kentish Fruit Preserving Company at £240. These are not gilt-edged, and not even silver-edged, investments. On the contrary, there is too much brass about them. By the way, we are living in strange times when Field-Marshals become tea dealers—I beg pardon, Directors. But is it right that Field-Marshal Lord Roberts should accept a post on the Board of the Consolidated Tea and Lands Company? What next? I have received the "Mining Manual" for 1896, by Walter R. Skinner. It is a huge volume, the increased size of which illustrates the enormous number of new mining companies which have come into existence during the past year. The present issue contains 1,356 pages, and gives particulars relating to 2,712 companies, no less than 655 of which were brought out during the past twelve months. The great increase of new matter has caused an addition of 600 pages to the book, which is as carefully edited as it has always been. "Kindell's African Market Manual," published by F. C. Mathieson & Sons, 16, Copthall-avenue, E.C., is a neat little volume, giving much valuable information concerning Transvaal and Rhodesian Companies in a pithy form.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY;

LOVE AT LORD'S.

I CONSIGNED my sister, Minnie, to Jericho. I cursed the evil day when I had persuaded the mater to bring her up for the Eights. If only I could have foreseen! But how was that possible? It was not as if Minnie was an attractive girl. Quite the reverse. I do not like crying down my own family; but candour compels me to admit that Minnie was very plain indeed. And not merely that. Some plain girls are awfully bewitching in their conversation, don't you know, and awfully beguiling in their manner, and you find their company so jolly pleasant that you forget all about their looks. But Minnie was not that sort. She could hardly be said to have any conversation. I don't mean to say that she was a silent girl. She was infernally talkative. Often she would jabber by the hour together, and never give me the chance of interposing a remark. It made me quite sad to hear a rational being monopolising the conversation with such utter twaddle as she frequently did. She reminded me of a bad bowler, at the nets, who, when he gets the ball, will stick to it all the afternoon. You know the fellow, what a nuisance he is; and how obtuse to any hints on the subject of relinquishing his ball. Minnie, in her way, was just the same.

Well, to come back to the point, how was it possible, I say, for me to foresee that Freddy Perkins would fall in love with Minnie? Freddy had never shown any signs of being a spoony chap. In fact, he had always struck me as being particularly free from that kind of nonsense. Hitherto, his heart and soul, as well as his body, had been entirely devoted to cricket, at which game he was a notable performer. He was one of the few men I have known who always and under all circumstances played with a straight bat. His wicket was as difficult a one to get as any in England. He was a steady and consistent scorer, and the man on whom we always relied to make runs for us when others failed. "We" were the Oxford 'Varsity Eleven, of whom I was captain in that year, and Perkins was the shining light. I was proud of captaining a team that contained Freddy Perkins. You don't get a man like Perkins in a 'Varsity team once in a decade.

All the early part of that season Perkins' performances with the bat had been phenomenal. He had left his mark on the bowling of three first-class counties; he had treated the trundlers of a strong M.C.C. Eleven with simple contempt. But after that M.C.C. match came the change. In our ensuing encounter with the Gentlemen, Perkins actually bagged a brace. It seemed almost incredible; but so it was. And what seemed still more incredible was that he did not care. He treated his disgraceful failure with the utmost indifference. That was a very grave symptom. I had much rather see a man throw his bat across the pavilion, damn cricket for a rotten game, and vow that he'll take up golf to-morrow. Childish as such an exhibition is, it nevertheless leaves ground for hopes about that cricketer. But indifference points to a desperate state of affairs; and only some desperate ailment can satisfactorily explain it.

Freddy Perkins' ailment was desperate. There are many things that play the deuce with a man's cricket. Late hours; the wine-cup; over-smoking; liver. But one thing plays a more deuced deuce with it than all these put together; and that one thing is—love. I am bound to say that I have no patience with a fellow who falls in love in the cricket season. To my mind it is dishonourable and unsportsmanlike; as much so, as to smoke in training, or to shoot a pheasant in September. I should have given Perkins a very strong piece of my mind on the subject, only, you see, I was placed in a rather awkward position. In a certain indirect sense the fault lay with me. If I had not persuaded the Mater to bring up Minnie for the Eights, the contretemps would never have occurred. I could not, therefore, pitch it very strong into Perkins. But there was one person whom I had every right to rebuke severely—Minnie herself. I pointed out to her, in plain terms, the disastrous consequences which she had occasioned. Here was I, her brother, captain of the Oxford Eleven, my whole happiness, to say nothing of my honour, involved in the success of the team; and she, my own sister (having no regard for anything except the gratification of a girlish vanity), had literally ruined my best batsman; that, too, with the Cambridge match just coming on—at a time when, even if she must needs disregard her obligations as a sister, she might, at least, have regulated her conduct by the elementary principles of "form."

The question was—had she a spark of proper feeling in her? Would she do the one thing that, even now, might repair the consequences of her misbehaviour. Well, what was that one thing? What was it? Why, to give Perkins his congé, of course; to put a summary end to this silly spooning! I am afraid that Minnie is even more selfish than I had thought. She declined, half indignant (which was foolish), half laughing (which was outrageous). She actually said that while Mr. Perkins had hopes of winning her, he would be stimulated thereby to fresh exertions on the cricket field. Whereas, if she were to chuck him over, he would be so miserable that all the heart would be taken out of him for cricket or anything else. Pretty cheeky thing for a girl like Minnie to say—wasn't it? I told her so, candidly. I explained that, as for being miserable, it wasn't the least likely; that if he had his congé, he might, perhaps, be a trifle mopish for a day or two; but that the first four he hit in the ensuing match would put him all right. Would she really refuse me this trifling service? You might hardly believe it; but she did. She refused point-blank. Then it was that I consigned her to Jericho, and cursed the evil day on which I had persuaded the Mater to bring her up for the Eights.

The worst of it was that the Mater wouldn't help me in this affair either. I suppose you can't expect patriotism from women. At least, you never get it. Their ideas are all taken up with small, selfish, personal aims. The Mater had found out that Perkins was the eldest son of a rich old Manchester juggins; and I believe her one thought was to secure him for Minnie. How strangely trivial, in face of the far weightier matters at stake! I expostulated with her; but she turned a deaf ear. I urged the obligations which she, as a mother, owed to me, as her first-born. She remained perfectly obdurate. At last, I gave up pleading, with a heavy heart. The conclusion was forced on me that a fellow in my position ought to be an only orphan; that, however desirable from other standpoints, from that of a 'Varsity captain, mothers and sisters were a mistake.

Thus baffled in my patriotic endeavours by the Mater and Minnie, I went back to Perkins, and gave him a good talking to. I told him not to be an ass. I impressed on him that, by his silly, lackadaisical state, and his lovelorn demeanour, he was making himself a laughing-stock to the whole 'Varsity. I said that Minnie was a very good sort of girl (of course, a fellow can't give his own sister away, however selfish she may be); but that she was distinctly not worth losing the Cambridge match for. No girl was. Perkins groaned out something to this effect: "What was the Cambridge match compared with a life's happiness?" I could hardly refrain from laughing aloud at that. A life's happiness—with Minnie! Poor deluded idiot! If the little affair ever came off, how jolly well mistaken he would find himself! But, of course, I could not tell him that. She was my own sister; and if she had forgotten her obligations to me, I would not forget mine to her. No one can say that I have not always done my duty by Minnie.

It was useless to appeal any further to Perkins' patriotism. I therefore took another line. I knew that Perkins had not yet declared himself; at least, not in so many words. I suddenly put down my foot as Minnie's natural protector. This sort of thing musn't be. By hanging about all this time and yet never proposing, he not only compromised that confiding angel (Heaven forgive my applying such a term to Minnie!) but he proved himself altogether unworthy of the inestimable treasure of her affections. After such base conduct, I absolutely refused to recognise him as a prospective brother-in-law. No, no! It was useless his arguing. I was umpire in this matter, and I unhesitatingly gave him "out." It was only a forlorn hope—a desperate endeavour, like the donkey-drop which one tosses up to a stonewaller, on the chance of tempting him to hit. Eight times out of nine your transparent little dodge fails ignominiously, but on the ninth occasion you succeed in getting him caught. Then your surprise is great and your joy holy. So with me now. My donkey-drop succeeded beyond all expectation. I was fairly astounded at the effect which my feeble little dodge produced upon Perkins. He covered his face with his hands. He groaned aloud. He said I was right; that in—in—the circumstances he had no right to linger even on the threshold of the paradise in which that serene and lovely angel dwelt. He would not sully her further with his ignoble presence. He would away to the outer darkness, which was now his destined—perhaps his deserved—portion. My hard words were, after all, the truest kindness. God bless Minnie! He would not see her again until—until——

Then, without completing his sentence, he wrung my hand and hurried from the room.

As I have said, I was fairly astounded at the success of my forlorn hope, and at first I congratulated myself upon it not a little. But soon I had reason to modify my opinion about it. In the first place—though this was a minor matter—I had a regular bad time of it with the Mater and Minnie. Minnie took the injured, resigned, martyred line. You know how odious a sister can make herself when she goes upon that tack. She gave up eating, got hollow under the eyes, started an irritating cough, and generally behaved in the most obnoxious manner. The Mater, on the other hand, did not go in for resigned martyrdom. She put herself in a frightful rage. She said that I had wrecked Minnie's happiness, and marred her life by my abominable interference. She called me all sorts of hard names, and levelled against me every kind of exasperating accusation. I bore it patiently. I never think it worth while to put myself out over trifles. And this, as I have said, was only a minor matter.

But in the second place—and this was where the shoe really pinched—the effect upon Freddy Perkins was only to make his play worse than before. If you recollect, I had told my sister Minnie that he might be made mopish for a day or two; but the first four he hit would put him all right. I have no reason to suppose that my prophecy was incorrect, but it never had a chance of fulfilment. Perkins never hit that four! He never even got a three but once, and that was by a mistake. That one three, too, represented his entire score for five innings. Freddy Perkins with an average of three-fifths of a run! And then he missed catches, threw overthrows, and ran me out twice. It was really heartrending. Our committee "sat" upon Freddy Perkins, and debated the question of turning him out. Yet we could not quite make up our minds to that. Freddy Perkins was still a name to conjure with. Besides, we felt awfully sorry for him. He looked so dejected and melancholy. I half thought myself that the question of playing him against Cambridge would be settled for us by the doctors, and that, instead of coming up to Lord's, poor Perkins would be conveyed, before then, to the lunatic asylum at Littlemore. I was really at my wit's end. At last I decided to consult some of Freddy Perkins' relations.

I ought to explain that he had an aunt and cousins living a few miles from Oxford, with whom I had some slight acquaintance; for when Perkins went over there he had sometimes taken me with him. His case was now so serious that I decided to confide the exact state of it to them. Not to all of them, of course. In fact, only to one of them. Freddy's eldest cousin, Maud Minniver, was a most sensible and discreet girl. She also, I knew, had great influence with my friend. I would tell everything to her, and ask her advice and assistance. With that end in view, I rode over there one afternoon, and having found the ladies at home, took the opportunity of a stroll round the garden with Mau—Miss Minniver to broach to her the momentous subject.

She heard all that I had to say in silence. She never interrupted me once—so different from my sister Minnie, who, in a like case, would simply have maddened me with irrelevant interpolations. I put the case strongly. I painted Freddy's condition in the blackest colours. I dwelt upon the almost certain prospect of our losing the Cambridge match at Lord's. It was a queer thing. I had expected her to be awfully gloomy over it, as I was; but she was nothing of the kind. As I went on talking, her face kept growing brighter and brighter. At the end it was quite beaming. She had an awfully taking smile. She—however, it was only the end of June then. Cricket didn't shut up till September. (I played for my county, you know, after the 'Varsity season.) It struck me, therefore, that I had better leave beaming smiles and that sort of thing for the shooting season. So I looked away, and tried to think of hitting a four to leg.

"Oh, Mr. Trotter," she exclaimed, clasping her hands, "I am so glad that you have come to me about this."

"I felt it my duty," I said. "And, besides, I was so confident of your influence over Freddy."

"Were you indeed, now?" she said, smiling again (upon my word that smile of hers was uncommonly arch; even the thought of hitting a four to leg could not quite make me impervious to it). "Well, I should not wonder if you will find your confidence justified. I think I shall be able to reason Freddy out of his foolishly morbid state. You leave him to me, Mr. Trotter."

"Miss Minniver," I replied, warmly, "if you can reason Freddy into such a frame of mind that he will be able to do himself justice on Thursday week and the two following days, you will earn not only my gratitude, but that of the whole University of Oxford."

She smiled again, more brightly than before. Those eyes of hers did sparkle in the most brilliant manner when she smiled. I increased my four into a six, and imagined it pitching right out of Lord's into the St. John's Wood-road. This proved something of an antidote. Still I could not help realising what a far cry it was to September and the partridges.

"I know I am safe in leaving the matter in your hands," I told her, after we had conversed together a little longer.

"I am only human," she replied (nothing but the thought of that six into the St. John's Wood-road prevented my making an immediate allusion to "divinity" and "angels.") "But I will do my best, and I think I shall succeed."

She gave me her hand with the most engaging simplicity, as a ratification of her promise. She had the softest and pleasantest hand to shake of any I had ever felt. Certainly, September and the partridges were a very, very long way off.

* * * * *

I shall not in a hurry forget that 'Varsity match at Lord's. The Minnivers were there, of course. So were the Mater and Minnie; though I did my best to persuade them, under the circumstances, not to come. However, they would. And if women will, why there's an end of it. Any fellow who has a Mater or sisters will quite understand that.

We had a two days' match with the M.C.C. on the Monday and Tuesday. Freddy Perkins again failed to score, and was more gloomy and lackadaisical than ever. I was afraid that Maud Minniver's efforts had failed; and I looked forward to the Cambridge match with the gravest forebodings. But when I ran up against Freddy in the pavilion at Lord's on the morning of the eventful Thursday, I was at once struck by the extraordinary change in his demeanour. His erstwhile long face had suddenly become as round as a baby's; his melancholy stare had given place to a jovial, smiling look; and he was humming a popular air with all the blitheness of a skylark.

"By the piper, old chap," he greeted me. "Won't we give them beans!" And then, after executing an irregular but energetic hornpipe, he inquired of me, casually—

"Are your people here, old man?"

"Yes," I told him. "I have just left them in their seats."

"They are here in good time," he said, looking at the clock. "It still wants forty minutes to the start. Heigh-ho! Beastly dull place this pavilion. I think I'll take a stroll round!"

I was lucky that year. I won the spin. The wicket was in grand condition. Of course, we took first knock. I sent in Freddy and our stone-waller to open the innings. By Jove! That was a grand experience. I sat in the pavilion and felt really happy. To see Freddy walking into the Cambridge bowling was a treat. The stone-waller kept up his end and Freddy hit. Change after change was tried. All the bowlers came alike to him. He despatched their deliveries, one after another, to the boundary with perfect impartiality. I need not describe it farther. The innings is historic. If you just look at the statistics which the evening papers publish on the first day of the 'Varsity match you will find the following score against Freddy Perkins' name—235*. A glance at the footnotes will tell you that the * implies "not out."

In the interval after luncheon—Freddy had already completed his first century—I took Maud Minniver for a stroll over the turf, and after thanking her warmly for the wonderful change she had effected in Freddy, made bold to ask how she had accomplished such a miracle.

"Well, you see," she explained, "when Freddy and I were little more than children, and neither of us really knew our own minds, we were foolish enough to become secretly engaged. He was too honourable to let me see that—that—he had changed his mind, and I—well, supposing that he was still in love with me—I—I did not like to tell him that—that—I had changed mine. But yesterday—I waited, purposely, till then—I gave him his freedom, and—and—the impression I have formed from a conversation which I had an hour ago with your sister—(by the way, what a lovely girl she is! I don't wonder at Freddy preferring her to me)—is that he has already taken advantage of it."

I saw it all. My heart throbbed with gratitude. I—I—before I knew where I was I was telling her that I did wonder at Freddy preferring any one to her; and then, realising what a very long way off September was, and that, after all, county cricket was only a minor matter, I did not even try to conjure up the vision of a four to leg, but let my feelings overpower me without resistance. Before I went in to bat, I was an engaged man.

MUSIC.

HARRIS AND AFTER AT THE OPERA.

WHEN last week, writing, I may be allowed to confess, only two hours after the death of Sir Augustus Harris, I remarked that Opera in London had received a stunning blow, it is obvious that I did not exaggerate. From all sides have come warnings that the very existence of Opera is threatened. It is perfectly certain that Lady Harris will not risk her modest fortune upon such a speculation, upon which also (apart from any express orders in the will) no executor would be rash enough to embark. The will, by the way, I believe, appoints Lady Harris, Mr. Rendle, and Mr. Hoile executors, with power to continue enterprises or to realise for Lady Harris and her only child, who, under certain ordinary restrictions, inherit all the deceased manager was worth. I agree that an estate of this character will not be an easy one to wind up. But apart from express directions, the first obvious duty will be to lighten the ship. "The Little Genius" will probably be the earliest to go. The last time I saw him I told "Druriolanus" the perfectly patent fact that he must have been infatuated to attempt to bring out an expensively-mounted and cast comic opera (or musical drama) in early July, and he freely admitted he regretted it was not four months earlier. But Harris never was wise in comic opera; as "La Fille de Madame Angot," in 1880, and "Frivoli," some years later, will testify. The executors can, nevertheless, not be expected to share Sir Augustus's views, and the production will, therefore, either be postponed till September, or will be handed over to other members of the syndicate. The autumn drama is well cared for, and despite absurd reports that other managers have been "approached"—by whom, in all conscience?—Lady Harris will probably direct Drury Lane, of which the executors hold a five and half years' lease. As to Covent Garden, the present season is quite provided for; while in the autumn the house will probably be let, either for English Opera or Promenade Concerts, and in the winter there are the Fancy Dress Balls which Mr. Forsyth will look after.

It is the future of Covent Garden after Easter which is the special point. On the first news of Harris's death there was some talk of giving the old managers another chance. But Mr. Faber, who has succeeded Mr. Montagu as ground landlord, has more than one card up his sleeve. Doubtless, he would like to retain Covent Garden as the premier opera house of the world. But Lady Harris certainly will not take it on her own account, and Mr. Faber is far too wise to let it to any man who cannot give Society the opera it demands, or who has not personal capital, the Harris copyright repertory, and the confidence of the subscribers. Rather than imperil the glory of Covent Garden, Mr. Faber has always the alternative of relinquishing the lease at a fair price to the Duke of Bedford, who could profitably use the Opera House, as he has already utilised the Floral Hall, as a market for potatoes and oranges. Personally, I expect during the next few months to read a half a hundred "exclusive" statements that this or that manager has taken the Opera House. If, however, I may venture to prophesy, I should say that nothing at all will take place until the end of the autumn; and that then a good deal will depend upon the views of Mr. Faber, Mr. Higgins, and Lady de Grey. And I further venture to predict that unless the new direction is satisfactory to Harris's artists and his splendid list of subscribers, Covent Garden may within the twelvemonth be given up to neglected agriculture, and the wealthiest city in the universe will be without an opera house at all.

There were several unrecorded incidents connected with Sir Augustus Harris's death. Mr. Collins, who was temporarily in charge last Monday week at Covent Garden, after good-naturedly sending me the latest bulletin at half-past nine, found himself played out by overwork, and, taking a sleeping draught which his physician had given him, went to bed. Some simpleton, without warning, woke him from his narcotic rest at 4 a.m. with the laconic telegram, "Meet the body at Charing Cross at 8.46." This was the first intimation he had received of the death of his chief. The Folkestone Post Office closes at 10 p.m., but Mr. Forsyth, the acting manager, who, by the way, under very trying circumstances, has developed an old head on young shoulders, took the precaution to keep the wires open. It is Mr. Forsyth, in association with Mr. Higgins and Signor Mancinelli, who is responsible for the very vigorous operatic management since Harris's decease. Mr. Higgins' position is a curious repetition of operatic history. He is understood to be a lawyer in large practice. So, also, was Mr. Benjamin Lumley, when, exactly sixty years ago—then, oddly enough, a pupil in the law of Mr. Basil Montagu—he was called upon to assist Laporte (the successor of Ebers, himself the predecessor, as a librarian, of the well-known house of Lacon & Ollier) in operatic management. Before very long, Lumley, the solicitor, was, owing to the sudden death of his client, compelled, with many promises of aristocratic and financial support, to direct the opera himself. It is not quite impossible that Mr. Higgins, before many months are over, may be subjected to a similar temptation.

The principal operatic event last week was the performance in German of "Tristan und Isolde" with the De Reszkes, who for the first time sang this music here. To say that Wagner's most advanced tragic opera would delight an after-dinner audience would imply that there must be a Wagnerian public for the Alhambra or Olympia. The late Sir Augustus Harris, in point of fact, catered for many kinds of audiences, and the truth that Covent Garden, despite increased prices, was crammed from half-past seven o'clock on Friday, and that the gallery at long past midnight refrained, contrary to their custom, from singing "We wont go home till morning," undoubtedly indicated that the devotees of Wagner are willing to spend their time and money in worship of their deity. I am also bound to say that the music of the love duet has never been sung more beautifully than by M. Jean de Reszke and Madame Albani. Of course, we had to make believe a little. To suppose that a comfortable couple like this were of the kind which threw wisdom and fears of rheumatism to the winds, is to suppose a great deal. And when brother Edouard appeared and gently chided the swain, whose outspread coat-skirt barely concealed half of Mme. Albani's head-dress, there was an inevitable suggestion of amused surprise that "people of your age," and so forth. Both, however, sang well, and if only the stand-off tenor and the skittish soprano had been a quarter of a century younger, we should probably have had a perfect performance. As to Mme. Melba, she has drawn certain audiences for the hackneyed repertory. She has sung Marguerite very well, and I hope she will sing Desdemona before the season is over.

There was a splendid performance of "Elijah" at the Crystal Palace on Saturday before an audience of 23,000 people. Madame Albani and Mr. Lloyd were here at their best, while Miss Clara Butt, who on the Continent seems to have developed the wobble, was the contralto, Mr. Santley was in very fine form, but the chief feature of the performance was, of course, the choir, who sang the Baal and other choruses grandly. Among them was a veteran, Mr. Pountney, who came from and returned to Birmingham the same day, and who sang as bass in the choir at the first performance under Mendelssohn in 1846.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

My dear Mr. Wyndham,—I am delighted to see an old favourite of my youth, "Johnson's Lives" (1), re-appearing in a handsome edition under competent editorship. Johnson seems to me to be as little out of date to-day as a breath of fresh air is out of date in a chamber sickly with incense. I take up, for instance, Mr. Richard Le Gallienne's "Retrospective Reviews, A Literary Log" (2), and come upon a set of epigrams formally ranged, spaced and numbered as a kind of staccato overture to suggest the idea of the character of the work it opens, and the first of these in place and also in importance is:—"Criticism is the art of praise." A little farther on I find this expanded into the illogical and confused dictum:—"Praise is more important than judgment. It is only at agricultural societies that men dare sit in judgment upon the rose." As though there were not roses and roses, and as though the ideal judge at a flower-show was the gushing girl who exclaims unceasingly and unvaryingly "Oh, how awfully sweet!" The competitors themselves and floriculture itself would be the worst losers by such ungraduated and indiscriminate eulogy. Having struck the key-note in these epigrams, Mr. Le Gallienne reprints five years' critical contributions to the newspapers, without weeding out the hasty, crude, and perfunctory notices from those written considerately and con amore. At the same time, I must admit that some of these criticisms are admirable of their kind, and confess that it is to the kind chiefly that I object. For they are cloyingly sweet—too sweet to be wholesome, too sweet to escape the obvious cynical play upon their title, "A Literary Log-roller." What a change to Johnson's breezy and robust criticism! No doubt Johnson's sight was as short mentally as physically; but as short-sighted men see with singular clearness what is within the range of their vision, so Johnson was sound and shrewd in such judgments as lay within the purview of his mind. Certainly he would sometimes weigh ethereal essences in grocer's scales, and sometimes would let his personal or political prejudice against a man colour his judgment of his poetry. He hated Gray, and the effect of his hatred is seen in such fatuous Tupperian stuff as this:—"He that forsakes the probable, may always find the marvellous"; or such ineptitudes as this:—"The ode might have been concluded with an action of better example; but suicide is always to be had without expense of thought. I do not see that the 'Bard' promotes any truth moral or political." As though a primrose by a river's brim was to be valued only, as Disraeli only valued it, for flavouring a salad. Apropos of Gray and of Johnson, I find in a book which is a thing of beauty, and also a treasury of wit and humour, "The Quarto" (3) a happy parallel between the "Elegy" and Fitzgerald's heart-shaking "Omar Khayyam," and a criticism of Professor Cowell's—characteristically professorial—which recalls old Sam at his worst. Every one knows that Fitzgerald in all his translations, and most of all in his "Omar," followed the rule which is best expressed by Sir John Denham:—

> It is a translator's business not alone to translate language into language, but poesie into poesie; and poesie is of so subtle a spirit that in pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate if a new spirit be not added in the translation.

This every one knew, and none better than Professor Cowell, who had opened to "Old Fitz" the Persian mine. Yet hear the Professor's comment on the grandest verse—the "Prometheus Vinctus" verse—in "Omar":—

> O Thou, who man of baser Earth didst make,
> And even with Paradise devise the snake;
> For all the Sin wherewith the Face of Man
> Is blackened, Man's forgiveness give—and take!

On this last Titanic line Cowell comments thus:—"Fitzgerald mistook the meaning of giving and accepting as used here, and so invented his last line out of his own mistake." When you see professors mounted—and it is their favourite mount—on Don Quixote's wooden horse, Clavileno, you always feel inclined to play the Duke's trick, and blow the steed sky-high with squibs. Mr. Edmund Gosse in his suggestive "Critical Kit-Kats" (4) gives you the original opening verse of "Omar," which all the contemporary critics objected to as too literally and fantastically Persian, whereas every word of it was "Old Fitz's" own! Nevertheless the critics were substantially right, in my judgment, as the imagery seems to me almost grotesquely far-fetched:—

> "Awake! for morning in the bowl of night,
> Has flung the stone that puts the stars to flight;
> And lo! the hunter of the East has caught
> The Sultan's turret in a noose of light."

Mr. Gosse, however, prefers it to the present opening. The weakest of these "Kit-Kat" papers is the most ambitious — the address delivered on the occasion of the unveiling of the American monument at Hampstead to Keats. Surely the orator hardly rose to the level of the occasion in his references to "the brisk and shapely lady whose fascination was to make the cup of Keats' sorrow to overflow;" or in such commonplaces as this:—"Keats' fame rests upon no privilege of birth, no 'stake in the country,' as we say; it is fostered by no alliance of powerful friends, or wide circle of personal influences." Oratory of this cheap kind recalls Mr. Chadband on poor little Jo: "I say this brother present here among us is devoid of parents, devoid of relations, devoid of flocks and herds, devoid of gold, of silver, and of precious stones." Mr. Chadband was as indisputably right about poor Jo as is Mr. Gosse about Keats, but in both cases to tell you "why day is day, night night, and time is time, is nothing but to waste night, day, and time." By the way, both Mr. Gosse and Mr. Le Gallienne hold Keats to be one of the very greatest poets that the modern world has seen; while Tennyson was often heard to assert that had the boy bard's life been prolonged he "would have been our greatest poet since Milton." This true and growing estimation of the poet is consistent with Mr. Bridges' judgment in his introduction to the exquisite "Muses' Library" edition of Keats (5): "the best of Keats' work is of the highest excellence, but the mass of it is disappointing"—which is only to say, that Keats died in boyhood. Mr. Bridges' criticism of Keats in this introduction is the sanest and soundest I have yet met; though I find it hard to forgive him the perverse order in which he ranks the immortal odes.

What comes from the lips of princes, whether words or cherry-stones, are so precious to their worshippers as to be preserved as heirlooms. In "The Paget Papers" (6), for instance, you come upon startling specimens of English as she was spoke in those days, and wonder, as at flies in amber, "how the devil they got there," until you reach the signature of the First Gentleman in Europe. We should like to have asked his Royal Highness, or, better still, the obsequious Archbishop of Canterbury of that day, to parse the following sentence from the Prince's letter to Sir Arthur:—

> Since that day the old girl has never ceased being tipsy twice a day—first at dinner and on—but after supper—for she always makes a regular supper first—and a couple of bottles of iced champagne, after a couple of quarts of small beer, which she calls, you know, a swig of beer, has completed about six in the morning the old gentlewoman since she has been with us here.

The Prince's affectionate letters to his "dearest Arthur," are, however, creditable to his heart, if not to his head, and are much taken up with a vain attempt to bring about a marriage between his young friend and the Dowager Duchess of Rutland. Sir Arthur, on his part, made an effort, no less vain, to save the Prince from his disastrous marriage to Caroline of Brunswick, "for she wor a bad 'un, she" notoriously even in those days. As Sir Arthur was usually transferred to the post to which the centre of political interest had shifted in the breathless days of Napoleon's triumphs, his despatches and letters are naturally and intensely interesting. Apropos of Napoleon, I took up a novel with the taking title, "The Vanished Emperor" (7), in the expectation of finding this Titanic figure, who pervades at present the literature of two continents, but was surprised, not altogether agreeably, to recognise in its hero the very last Prince who would be likely to efface himself for a moment, the Emperor William II. of Germany. Nevertheless, the very clever author of this tour de force represents the insuppressible young man disappearing voluntarily into space for a month, without the inevitable result of the dissolution of the universe—which is absurd. Even more absurd is the assumption that the Emperor himself had not the faintest suspicion of the effect of the disappearance of the political sun from its system. He descends, like Jove, from his throne to make love in a seclusion so absolute that not a murmur of the political convulsion caused by his evanescence reaches him. He is discovered and brought back at last by a wily English diplomatist, but only just in time. In another day—

> Lo! thy dread Empire, Chaos, is restored,
> Thy hand, great Anarch, lets the curtain fall,
> And universal darkness buries all!

So at least thinks the author, who believes in the Emperor—to whom he dedicates the novel—as implicitly as his Majesty believes in himself. Here is a daring venture—to persuade us that a living Emperor, who is always and obtrusively in evidence, disappeared for a month into space, to bring back from his Utopia an unknown girl as his Empress! That we should read such a story to the end with the deepest interest is a triumph of cleverness. Yet more clever, even brilliant, is "Her Ladyship's Income" (8), a novel by a new writer, but certainly not by a young hand. It must have taken some years and much experience to draw such characters as its Mayor, its Duke, his son, the Mayor's daughter, Lady Jingle, Neal, the mill manager, and the labour champion, Goodale. The story, too, moves easily and swiftly without dragging or wandering, while the conversations are at once natural and bright—not a usual combination. Here, for instance, is an admirable exposition by the labour champion of what women can and cannot do:—

> Woman, with her infinite tenderness and sympathy, may help a suffering man or woman; but she fails when she tries to devise a plan which shall prevent others from falling into the same suffering. Woman can deal with individual cases, but when she comes to systems, she lacks the patience, the capacity for compromise, the ability to give and take. Woman should be to man what equity is to law. She should be content to relieve the individual sufferers from the hardships of a system.

If I told you of a novel in which a foundling is fortuitously given a Christian and a surname—"Dorothy Maitland"—which turn out in the end to be her real names, you would, after your manner, calculate the mathematical chances against such a coincidence, and decline even to open a story that asked you to admit such impossibilities. Yet "A Cornish Maid" (9) has but to be opened to be read with eager interest from the first page to the last. The maid herself is a charming creation, brought up by the sea and on the sea, among simple, and kindly, and devout Cornish fisher folk—an Undine with a soul. The plot is most ingenious, if somewhat old-fashioned in its coincidences; and old-fashioned also, and fortunately, are the personages, not one of whom leave a bitter, decadent taste in your mouth. Old-fashioned, too, in the best sense, is an exquisitely written volume of short stories, "Doris and I" (10), which it is a delight to read for the style alone. The style, indeed, is so tender, and the tales so pathetic, that the effect is like that of moonlight upon ruins, or of moonlight shining through the painted windows described in one of these idylls. "The saintly figures in the windows seemed to awake and to listen in quaint attitudes to the old organ; the Virgin gazed more tenderly on her child; the centurion's visage softened as he looked on the kneeling woman; a benigner peace was in the face of the dead Christ. It was but the moon, slow-rising and shining softly through the many-hued figures."—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, very sincerely yours,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

P.S.—In literature, no less than in politics, it is always a wise rule to "verify your references," and a good dictionary of quotations (derided though such compilations are by some) is often useful in correcting the tricks and lapses of a fallible memory. The latest and most up-to-date work of this sort has been compiled by Lieut.-Colonel Dalbiac, M.P. Of course, some things are omitted from this "Dictionary of Quotations" (11) that one would have included, and some included that one would have omitted; that is inevitable in such a volume. On the whole, however, the quotations have been selected with excellent judgment; and, so far as I have observed, they are given with remarkable accuracy—indeed, in all respects the book is the best of the kind that I have seen.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—London has had a remarkably lively week. There were scores of fashionable functions every afternoon—dinners, balls, and dances by the dozen every evening. I should fancy that there must have been quite a scarcity of awnings on one or two days in particular.

The Society of Women Journalists had a very brilliant birthday party at Stafford House on Wednesday evening. It was very sweet of the Duchess to lend the magnificent reception-rooms to her humble and hard-working sisters. It was a pleasure merely to be in such wonderful rooms. Buckingham Palace has nothing like them. The great hall, with its wide marble staircase, is of grand dimensions, and one feels like a midge or a minnow when ascending. The Long Gallery, however, is the apartment that arouses the imagination. It runs the whole width of the mansion, and is lighted by about a dozen high windows. The walls are hung with fine pictures, lighted in such a way as to bring their best points into prominence. Many of them illustrate Scriptural incidents. There are several immense chandeliers, on which the electric light runs up the centre of dozens of simulated candles. Opaque white shades give it a soft effect.

The decorations are white and gold, and the ceiling, like that of all the other reception-rooms, is white and gold—handsome without being heavy, as is the case when the gold is insufficiently relieved with white. On a daïs in the centre of the room were given the entertainments, several clever and popular people having kindly given their services to the Sisters of the Pen. The attendance was enormous. The Duchess herself looked in for a while, accompanied by Princess Henry of Pless and Mr. Arthur Balfour. Both ladies were looking lovely. The Duchess was in a bright rose-pink silk ball dress with chiffon sleeves of the same colour, and wore a very light and graceful ornament of diamonds in her fair hair. We had the opportunity of comparing her as she lived and moved with her portrait by Mr. Ellis Roberts. I fancy it was exhibited in the New Gallery about a year ago. It is an excellent likeness, and conveys almost the sweetness of her beautiful eyes and the smiling look that covers their lurking sadness. Princess Henry of Pless was pretty as ever in a white silk sewn in wavy lines with bright green sequins laid half over each other. In her hair were bright pink roses and green leaves, fastened in with pins made of large pearls set in diamonds.

The pre-eminent youth, grace, and beauty of these ladies were made the more conspicuous by their tall stature. The Duchess is only 28, having been married on her seventeenth birthday. The Princess Henry of Pless is just 23. Among the gentlemen who accompanied them was Earl Crewe; and Lord Rosebery came in later in the evening. Lady Angela Forbes joined her sister for a few moments, and I fancy I saw Lady Westmorland in white, with a long green sash fastened rather to the left at the back. Mrs. Asquith mounted a chair, steadying herself by a light touch on her husband's shoulder, in order to be able to have a good view of Miss Rosina Brandram and Mr. Passmore in a scene from "The Mikado." Mrs. Asquith was in white, with a glitter of sequins about the waist, and a long green sash. She wore a diamond tiara. Sir John Robinson, Sir Wemyss Reid, Mr. Oswald Crawford, Sir William Marriott, M.P., with Lady Marriott and Mrs. Eliot James, Lord Ronald Gower, Mr. Oscar Browning, Miss Mathilde Blind, Mme. Sarah Grand, Mr. William Black, Mr. David Murray, A.R.A., Mr. Marcus Stone, R.A., Mr. J. Sant, R.A., and Mr. Zangwill were among those whom we recognised.

It was interesting to look down from the top of the great staircase and watch the arrivals. Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes), President of the Society, received the guests, assisted by several ladies of the Council, among whom I noticed Mrs. Arthur a'Beckett, and Mrs. Jack Johnson, the Hon. Sec. It fell to the lot of these ladies to "receive" the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland in their own house—an amusing involution of circumstance.

The entertainments were interesting, and attracted a great crowd round the daïs. M. Johannes Wolff made his violin sing to us most sweetly in a "Romance" of his own composition. He looks so romantic himself, with his picturesque and abundant black hair thrown back from a broad white brow, under which shine a velvety pair of great black eyes, that his aspect intensifies the effect of his music. Mr. Arthur Roberts made everybody laugh with his droll facial gymnastics in "A sort of a kind of a" song. Miss Letty Lind, looking charming in a white or very pale-tinted gown, with pink roses for shoulder-straps, sang the Something Parrot—was it the Perplexed or the Pettish? I cannot remember. The memory of her graceful movements as she danced after each verse has just recalled to me that her dress was white satin sewn with silver sequins.

The sisters of the pen who were members of the Society had been requested to wear a white quill pen and a black bow on their dress. One or two had introduced these insignia successfully into their coiffures. Others wore it on the shoulders, and others at the waist.

The Rose Show at Queen's Hall was a delight to eye and nose. But hardly any one looked at the glorious roses. They were shown in the first gallery, exquisite specimens in every colour, from the greenish-white Niphetos down to the almost black of the deep crimson rose. Some magnificent pink ones, as large as an afternoon tea-saucer, were called "Her Majesty," and deserved the distinction. The new rose, a cultivated briar, did not very highly appeal to me. It is like a single dahlia. The petals are very large and of a beautiful deep pink; but I prefer the wild rose in its natural state. Its delicious pink, when it first awakes, is, to my thinking, unrivalled for delicacy, softness, and blushing brilliancy. All too soon the sun kisses the petals into pallor, but even then they are prettier than the latest effort of the horticulturist can make them.

There was a seething crowd downstairs among the stalls where kindly folk were selling for the benefit of the North Eastern Hospital for Children. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught opened the bazaar on the first day. Lord Frederick Fitzroy made a statement about the needs of the hospital, and the Duke of Connaught replied in a neat speech. He speaks without any of the German accent of his elder brothers, and enunciates very deliberately and carefully. He laughed heartily at some of the small children, who presented purses to the Duchess, and who forgot to give them up, so flurried were they by the business. The hat of one little girl fell off just as she reached the Duchess, so she sped along, clutching at it as it hung down her back by the elastic, and had to be headed back by the Duke to give up her purse of money.

The next day we went on purpose to see the Duchess of Marlborough open the Show. It was our first glimpse of her American Grace, whom we found to be very girlish, simple, and ingenuous-looking. Her great height is very well carried off, and she will have a very fine figure when she is a few years older. It is rather a trying thing, you know, to stand on a platform and see hundreds of eyes fixed on you wherever you look, but the young Duchess stood it remarkably well, received her bouquet with a pretty smile and a few words of thanks, and every now and then referred to her husband, the Duke, who stood next her, in a gentle, submissive, questioning way. She is quite Spanish in style, with olive complexion, deepening to a pretty rose-pink on the cheeks, and magnificent dark eyes with very marked eyebrows. Her dark hair is very abundant. She wore a shot red and brown silk and a large hat with a much too tall plume of black feathers. A piece of green velvet round her neck looked irrelevant to the rest of her toilette, but it suited her colouring, and was, therefore, forgivable. Her voice is very soft and musical, a great charm always, but more especially when one so often hears the strident tones adopted by smart women and girls who seem to think it the correct thing to speak as loud as possible and occasionally very much through the nose.

The Duke of Teck's garden party at the Botanic was a very pretty one. There had been heavy rain on the previous day and on that morning, but the afternoon was bright and sunny, and the grounds were looking their loveliest. The Duke appeared at about four o'clock with the Duchess and their daughter, accompanied by a large party of ladies and gentlemen, who all took their seats on a daïs facing the grand walk, the Duchess of York occupy-

MADAM HAYWARD begs to announce her Summer Sale. The most extensive and select stock of Paris Models in London. Morning, Promenade, Racing, Garden Party, Dinner, and Evening Gowns, Evening Cloaks, Capes, Jackets, Millinery, Tea Gowns, Lingerie, at prices below half cost.—64, New Bond-street.

OBESITY.—The happy knack of forming a symmetrical contour and a perfect foundation for a well-setting gown is the especial art of Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London, W. ing a central position. She was looking extremely well, and her figure looked its best in a very sweet frock. It was white silk chiné with cornflowers strewn over it. A belt of cornflower-blue velvet rose very high at the back, where it was set into a yoke of cream-coloured guipure. Lines of white silk muslin began in the centre of the collar at the back, and were drawn straight down to the waist under the arms, leaving the blue velvet visible between. The front was of the draped silk with a narrower band of the blue velvet, a lovely shade. Her bonnet was a delicious mixture of blush roses and white feathers. She looked very nice indeed. The Duchess of Teck was in one of her favourite shot silks, and she, too, looked remarkably well. Many of the guests were presented to the Duchess of York by her father, and we noticed that she always rose to greet those who were elderly, remaining seated while the younger ones passed, and giving them a pleasant little bow. A very shy young man, with whom H.R.H. shook hands, blushed rosily, and dropped her hand as if it had stung him. The Duchess smiled, and her mother looked intensely amused.

In sending me the following cutting, Ginevra very aptly remarks:—

Don't you think that the Maltese ladies are making a mistake in mounting the lovely lace on a blue parasol? What a pity they are not aware that the yellow rays of the sun through a blue parasol give a green hue to the complexion, which, I am sure the charming Duchess who is to be the recipient will not appreciate. Have you remarked how seldom one sees a blue parasol carried?

"The Ladies Union of the Maltese Nobility are about to present to her Royal Highness the Duchess of York a magnificent parasol. The cover is of pure white thread lace in the style of the old Maltese point, and mounted on blue silk, which effectively shows up the tasteful design in which the Royal Crown and Maltese Cross are introduced, interspersed with the rose, shamrock, and mayblossom. This fine piece of workmanship was carried out entirely by two sisters, and took nearly nine months to complete. The stick is of ivory and gold, the handle being of repoussé gold with monograms and other appropriate designs."

The Summer Show of Needlework in connection with the Ladies' Work Society at 185, High-street, Kensington, W., takes place in a week or two. The varieties of work executed include high-class art needlework, ecclesiastical embroidery, Mountmellick, point lace, Limerick lace, smocking, drawn linen, Clare embroidery, Shetland goods, leather work, samplers, marking, and plain work. Sales of work are held during the year in various parts of England. The society is self-supporting, and the annual subscription is 10s.

Princess Christian was looking a little tired at the Summer Sale at the Royal School of Art Needlework. Small wonder. She had only come from Balmoral on the previous day. The Princess worked really hard at the sale, and took in a lot of money. She is not nearly so stout as she used to be, and looked very nice in her well-made black frock. The Countess of Yarborough was most energetic in selling, and looked very pretty in a white and pink silk. Mrs. Alfred Morrison wore one of her characteristic skirts and capes, this time in pale green, the cape embroidered round the edge with very small, fine silk flowers in soft tones of rose and pink. Some lovely old lace bordered the cape. You know, Mrs. Morrison's collection of lace is exceptionally fine. The Duchess of Devonshire bought some things of the Princess, and I saw, among others, Viscountess Galway and Lady William Cecil. There was a great crowd. The tea-room was beautifully cool, and seemed the more so for the white calico that covered the walls, hung with sprays of ivy.

The Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund has benefited by an order in connection with Princess Maud's trousseau. The ladies are embroidering and marking for her some very fine cambric handkerchiefs, and making a large and beautiful lace collar.

Cowes Regatta.—A Redfern Gown being essentially a part of the wardrobe of every yachtswoman, Messrs. Redfern invite inspection of their 1896 display.—Now on view at 26, Conduit-street, London, W.

All the "clearance" sales are on. They grow earlier every season, and if they go on like this they will very soon defeat their own end, for people will wait to make their purchases until the prospect of bargains begins. The sales used to begin about the third week in July, but they have been backing steadily until now, when the first of them takes place at Midsummer. The fact is, each house is so anxious to be first in the field that they will end by over-reaching themselves. It would be much fairer if all were to start on the same day—say July 12 or so. That would give the country cousins a chance.

With hats and bonnets it is different. They are supplied with a view to the season, and when it is over are apt to hang on hand. But we want table linen, house linen, gloves, umbrellas, cretonnes, blankets, carpets, shoes, and chair-backs all the year round—do we not? They could well wait till mid-July.

Rex, of Sloane-street, is selling off his smart toques and hats at very low prices. You should come up and secure a couple, for his millinery is so well up-to-date and so chic that you need have no fear of its going out of fashion, as the man had who ran all the way home with the new bonnet he had bought his wife, for fear the fashion should change before he could give it her.

I have just seen an ingenious invention for stowing away a bicycle or two in the hall or morning-room. It is the invention of a quite young girl, and consists of a piece of furniture combining a home for the bike, with a hat-rail and umbrella-stand, also a place for golf implements and tennis rackets.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—In the height of your "season," whilst hurrying along in the rush of town life, which feeling animates you—pity or envy for those who are buried in the quiet depths of the country? From the loftier levels of a superior humanity do you look on them as entities, partly belonging to the vegetable kingdom—just more than cabbages but decidedly less than human? Or do you, perhaps, in your heart of hearts, think that they have chosen—or been thrust into, as the case may be—the better part? With the thermometer at nearly ninety in the shade—a locality just now discoverable only by the thermometer—one cannot but think that there is a good deal to be said on the country mouse's side of the old controversy. Clothes functions are so particularly unsuitable to a temperature where comfort would seem alone possible through carrying out Sydney Smith's (is it not his?) suggestion of sitting in one's bones. When even one's own clothes and flesh and blood are too much, still more ought the crowds and the clothing of others to be superfluous for us. How can one be interested in the frills, furbelows, and all the extras of full dress, when the mere thought of them is heating, and toilets are transformed from the condition of being the glory and joy of life into mere necessary evils! And then what an irritating effect great heat has on nerves—on those of others, of course, more than on one's own. Friction is so easy, and the slightest contact draws forth such an abnormal amount of electric sparks from humanity. Believe me, there are "points" about ruralising in a hot June. It cannot have been in such a month that Jaques got the imprint of melancholy under the greenwood trees in the forest of Ardennes.

Lord Cadogan at the meeting for promoting touring in Ireland took somewhat the part of the sign-post, pointing out the way, but not going it himself. A Lord Lieutenant could do a great deal to lead the tide of fashion to sea-side or picturesque resorts in Ireland, by leading the way and showing a practical example worth columns of precept and floods of oratorical advocacy. It is customary to say that Sir Walter Scott made Scotland, but I fancy that the living Queen had a great deal more to do with its making than the dead literary lion. Her neglect of Ireland has been far more suppressive of the Irish tourist industry than the want of a Sir Walter Scott. And her Viceroys have never made up for it by taking any personal interest in the natural beauty of the country. Apropos of an Irish Sir Walter Scott, what a fallacy to think him possible. An Irishman, with equal gifts to the great Scotchman's, writing of his own country and people with the same truth and national feeling, would probably never find a publisher, and certainly never reach a second edition in England. An old Tory does not read the Liberal papers, and the average Englishman will accept none but the stage Irishman, who was long ago created for the English market. The real Ireland and the real Irishman are too unlike what the Englishman thinks they ought to be ever to be popular with him. Sickly sentimentality in treating of it is also the bane of the country. Because of its supposed poetry every one treats it poetically; apparently on the principle that "who drives fat oxen should himself be fat." Even Cook advertises tours to the "Emerald Isle," or "Erin," and travellers are assured that they will receive a hearty welcome from the "natives." One wonders where and why the natives come in. The ordinary tourist in Switzerland, Scotland, &c., expects no Swiss or Scotch reception but a comfortable one at his hotel. Let the traveller look for that in Ireland, and the Irish see that he gets it; let common-sense and prose prevail over poetry, and the tourist industry will have its best chance. Above all, self-help is the secret of success all over the world, a fact which our people here recognise more fully in any other country than their own. If only you had seen Killarney, Wicklow, or any picturesque part of the country during the last two months, you would wonder why every one who could do so does not take a look round the Island!—Yours, ever,

CLARE.

Here are a couple of nice little recipes for you. Chaudfroid de Poulet:—

Cut a nice plump chicken into joints. Put them into a stew-pan with an onion stuck with two cloves, six whole peppercorns, a blade of mace, a bouquet of herbs, and a slice of lean bacon. Cover with light-coloured bone stock, and simmer them for an hour. Remove them to get partially cold in the liquor, then drain the pieces of chicken on a cloth, strain the stock, and reduce it by boiling to half its original quantity. Use this to make about half a pint of white sauce, adding half a gill of thick cream and half a gill of aspic jelly. Work the sauce with a wooden spoon on the ice until on the point of setting; then coat the pieces of chicken smoothly with it, and decorate them tastefully with tarragon leaves and thin pieces of cut truffle. Dish them in a pyramid, place circular pieces of red tongue in the crevices, crown with a few sprigs of chervil, and garnish the base with chopped jelly and tufts of parsley.

This is another nice way of using cold chicken:—

Line some cutlet-shaped moulds with jelly, allow it to set, and nearly fill them with pounded chicken passed through a wire sieve, seasoned with salt and pepper and mixed with a third part of cold liquid aspic; fill up the moulds with dissolved aspic, and place them aside to get firm. Dish them alternately, with cutlet-shaped pieces of cold ox tongue on a border of aspic; put a border of chopped jelly around, and garnish the centre with tomato salad.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

P.S.—The wedding of Lady Sophie Cadogan with Sir Samuel Scott, Bart., on Monday, was a very brilliant one. The church of Holy Trinity, Sloane-street, was crowded with the friends of the young couple. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their unmarried daughters, and the Duke and Duchess of York were present. The Primate of Ireland married them, and the music was delicious, a boy who sang "O Perfect Life" possessing an enchanting voice. I counted six Duchesses from where I sat, and had a glimpse of the Marchioness of Londonderry, looking beautiful in a most becoming toque, the Marchioness of Ormonde and her lovely daughter, Lady Beatrice Butler, Princess Henry of Pless, Lady Algernon Gordon Lennox, Countess Howe, Lady Féo Sturt, Lady Magdalen Bulkeley, Lady Angela Forbes, the Duchess of Manchester's lovely young daughter, Lady Chelsea, Lady Lurgan, and many other high-born dames, whose garments were of the most festive description. I only wish I had space to tell you more about them.

EGYPT UNDER THE BRITISH. By H. F. WOOD. Crown 8vo, 4s.

The Times says: "Mr. Wood's book will be read with interest and profit by all who desire to understand the actual situation in Egypt. . . . It enjoys the advantage of appearing several years later and of recording in many cases more mature results than had been attained under British tutelage at the time when Sir Alfred Milner wrote."

NAPOLEON. By T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Ready.

Mr. O'Connor takes the Conqueror, Statesman, and Emperor chiefly in his social and domestic aspects, and regards him from the several points of view of friends, critics, and enemies, weighing all the evidence, and balancing each separate judgment with critical tolerance.

MOKO; or Maori Tattooing. By Major-General ROBLEY. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Demy 4to, 42s.

The present book is divided into two sections. The first treats of the beautiful lines and curves used in tattooing by the Maori. The second section of the book is entitled "Moko-Makai," and deals with the preserved heads of the Maoris. The book is one which owes its character to the completeness with which the subject is illustrated. The illustrations number over one hundred and fifty.

THE VEIL LIFTED: A New Light on the World's History. By H. MARTYN KENNARD. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s.

"The author has various theories, which he supports with much argumentative force."—People.

LONDON & NORTH WESTERN AND CALEDONIAN RAILWAYS.

WEST COAST ROYAL MAIL ROUTE TO AND FROM SCOTLAND.

TRAIN ARRANGEMENTS FOR JULY, AUGUST, AND SEPTEMBER, 1896.

The Day Express leaving London (Euston) at 10.0 a.m. will convey Passengers for Edinburgh (Princes-st.), Glasgow (Central), Greenock, Gourock, and Wemyss Bay, and other Watering Places on the Firth of Clyde, Stirling, Callander, Crieff, Perth, Blair Athol, Dundee, and Aberdeen. This Train is restricted to the conveyance of Passengers holding Tickets from England to Carlisle and Scotch Stations. Twenty minutes are allowed at Preston, and hot luncheons are provided at 2s. 6d. each.

The 11.30 a.m. from Birmingham will be extended to Carlisle, Edinburgh (Princes-street), and Glasgow (Central), in advance of the 10.0 a.m. from Euston. A New Express will leave Bristol at 9.0 a.m., via Severn Tunnel, for Crewe, with Through Carriages for Edinburgh (Princes-street), and Glasgow (Central), which will be attached to the 11.30 a.m. from Birmingham at Crewe. The Mid-day Trains from Liverpool and Manchester to join the 11.30 a.m. from Birmingham at Preston for Edinburgh and Glasgow will be:—Liverpool (L. & Y.), Exchange, depart 1.15 p.m.; Manchester (L. & Y.), Victoria depart 1.10 p.m.

11.30 a.m. Corridor and Luncheon Car Express, Euston to Edinburgh and Glasgow.—A New Scotch Express, composed of Corridor Carriages, will leave London (Euston) at 11.30 a.m., arriving at Edinburgh (Princes-street) at 7.55 p.m., and Glasgow (Central) at 8.0 p.m. Attendants will accompany the Corridor Carriages and serve Luncheons, Tea, and other Refreshments en route, as per daily bill of fare.

2.0 p.m. Corridor Train with Refreshment and Dining Cars for 1st and 3rd Class Passengers to Scotland.—This Train, leaving Euston at 2.0 p.m., conveys Passengers for Edinburgh (Princes-street), Glasgow (Central), Greenock, Gourock, Larbert, Stirling, Dunblane, Callander, Oban, Perth, Dundee, Forfar, Aberdeen, Inverness, and the Great North of Scotland and Highland Lines, and is due to arrive Glasgow (Central) at 10.30 p.m., and Edinburgh (Princes-street) at 10.30 p.m.

Trains in connection with the Corridor Train at Crewe leave Birmingham (New-street) at 3.40 p.m., Bristol at 12.30 noon, and Cardiff at 12.30 noon.

A Corridor Express Train, with Refreshment and Dining Car for Glasgow, also leaves Liverpool (Lime-street) at 5.35 p.m. Corridor Vehicles leave Manchester (Exchange) at 5.45 p.m. to join the Liverpool Train at Preston, and the united Train is due to arrive Edinburgh (Princes-street) 10.45 p.m., and Glasgow (Central) at 10.50 p.m.

Horse and Carriage Train, Euston to Scotland.—A Special Train will leave Euston, Saturdays and Sundays excepted, at 6.20 p.m., and will run from Monday, July 6th, until Monday, August 10th, for the conveyance of Horses and Private Carriages to all parts of Scotland. A Special Carriage for the conveyance of Dogs will be attached.

8.0 p.m. Highland Express from Euston.—This Train will run every night including Sunday night, but excepting Saturday nights, conveying Passengers for Stranraer, Stirling, Callander, Oban, Fort William, Crieff, Comrie, Perth, Forfar, Arbroath, Brechin, Montrose, Aberdeen, Inverness, and the Highland and Great North of Scotland Lines. A direct connection will also be given by this Train to Ballachulish and Fort William by Steamer from Oban.

Ballater and Braemar.—The 8.0 p.m. Highland Express from Euston, arriving at Aberdeen at 6.25 a.m., will connect with the Great North of Scotland Train leaving at 6.45 a.m., for Elgin, and with the Deeside Train leaving Aberdeen for Ballater at 7.10 a.m., giving ample time for breakfast at the Refreshment Rooms, or at the Great North of Scotland Railway Company's Palace Hotel (adjoining the Station), before proceeding by the second Train at 9.30 a.m. for Elgin and the Deeside. Coaches leave Ballater for Braemar in connection with the 7.10 a.m., 9.30 a.m., and 12.25 noon Trains from Aberdeen during the Summer.

8.50 p.m. from Euston to Scotland.—This Train conveys Passengers for Edinburgh, Glasgow, Greenock, Gourock, Stirling, Perth, Callander, Oban, Crieff, and Dundee.

10.15 p.m. Special Night Express, Euston to Aberdeen.—A Special Express for Passengers from London only will leave Euston at 10.15 p.m. from Monday, July 13th, until Tuesday, August 11th (Saturdays and Sundays excepted), reaching Perth 6.55 a.m., and Aberdeen at 8.50 a.m. The only stoppages made by this Train will be at Crewe, Carlisle, and Perth, and Passengers will thus be enabled to obtain an undisturbed night journey, reaching Aberdeen in time to connect with the Great North of Scotland Trains at 9.25 and 9.30 a.m. for the Deeside, Elgin, &c. A Sleeping Saloon will be run from Euston to Aberdeen by this Train.

11.50 p.m. Sleeping Saloon Express from Euston to Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen.—This Train is due to arrive Glasgow (Central) 7.50 a.m., Edinburgh (Princes-st.) 7.50 a.m., Perth 9.10 a.m., and Aberdeen 11.25 a.m. The only stoppages made by the Train between London (Euston) and Glasgow are at Crewe and Carlisle, the object being to ensure an uninterrupted and comfortable night journey at a uniform rate of speed.

Passengers for Stations on the Highland Line at which the 8.0 p.m. from Euston does not call, will find this the most convenient night Train from London.

The Up Day Express leaving Edinburgh (Princes-street) at 10.15 a.m., and Glasgow (Central) at 10.0 a.m., arriving London (Euston) at 6.45 p.m., will cease calling at Crewe. Passengers for Crewe, West of England, South Wales, and Birmingham, will leave Preston by a separate Train at 2.30 p.m., following the London Express; this Train will be due at Birmingham at 5.0 p.m.

The Night Express, with Sleeping Saloons attached, leaving Glasgow (Central) at 10.45 p.m., and Edinburgh (Princes-street) at 10.50 p.m. will be due to reach London (Euston) at 7.10 a.m. The only stoppages made by this Train are at Carstairs, Carlisle, Crewe, and Willesden Junction.

The 7.30 p.m. Express from Aberdeen, with Sleeping Saloons attached, will leave at 8.0 p.m. instead, and arrive London (Euston) at 8.0 a.m. as now. The Train will afford a connection at Stirling from Fort William and Oban.

FACILITIES FOR BREAK OF JOURNEY TO AND FROM SCOTLAND.

Passengers with Through Tickets to and from Stations in Scotland can break their journey at Carlisle, Dumfries, Moffat, or any intermediate Station on the direct line of route between Carlisle and their destination in Scotland.

Passengers from London to Scotland can also break their journey at Bletchley (for Oxford and Cambridge), Blisworth (for Stratford-on-Avon), Northampton, Rugby, Leamington, Kenilworth, Birmingham, Lichfield, Crewe, Warrington, Wigan, Preston, Lancaster (for Morecambe), Carnforth, Oxenholme (for Windermere), Shap, and Penrith (for Keswick).

Passengers from Stations in England to Glasgow (Central Station) and Stations west and north thereof, may travel viâ Edinburgh (Princes-street) and break the journey there, either going or returning, in addition to breaking it at any Station on the direct route north of Carlisle.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.

For the Reception and Treatment of Sufferers from Infections Fevers.

Each patient pays a fee equal to about a fourth of his cost, the balance falling upon the funds of the Institution.

Subscribers of a guinea and upwards for more than one year are Governors as long as they continue to subscribe. Donors of 10gs. or more in one sum are Governors for life.

Domestic servants of Governors and certain employés of firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of charge.

22 000 patients have been treated here in the last 25 years.

154 sufferers, nearly all with scarlet fever, were refused admission for want of room last year.

The Committee earnestly ask for ADDITIONAL HELP to enable them to provide accommodation for all who desire admission.

Donations and annual subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Secretary at the Hospital. Major W. CHRISTIE.

Bankers—Prescott & Co.

CANCER WARDS of the MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—35 beds devoted to Hopeless Incurable Cases.

A FUND of £12,000 is being raised for the purpose of erecting a separate BUILDING for the accommodation of the FEMALE CANCER PATIENTS hitherto located in the hospital, an improvement which is urgently demanded on the ground of the health, comfort, and convenience of the patients. Towards the cost of the new building the sum of £9,000 has been paid or promised, and an URGENT APPEAL is now made for the balance of £3,000 still required. Patients are admitted without letters or any recommendation, save that of necessity, and are permitted to remain until "relieved by art or released by death."—F. CLARE MELHADO, Secretary-Superintendent.

"Thoroughly good property." "Strongly recommend." "Can confirm statements by Fearby and Chewings."—ARCHIBALD.
The full Reports accompany the Prospectus.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Mining Pro perties to be acquired by the Company comprise an area of about 144 acres in the North Coolgardie Goldfields (known as the Menzies District), Western Australia, being situate near Mount Malcolm, and within 1½ mile from "The Princess Alix," and it is stated that "they must lie on or near to the main road or rail line that will eventually connect Coolgardie with Cue."

The properties, which are held under lease from the Government of Western Australia, comprise the following:—"The Juliet North Extended," 3 788, 24; "The Juliet," 984E, 24; "The Juliet No. 1," 3,310, 24; "The Juliet No. 2," 3,311, 24; "The Little Man Friday," 3,320, 10; "The Little Man Friday Extended,"—, 14; "The Eureka," 3,097, 12; "The Eureka Extended," 3,684, 12. Total area in acres, about 144.

DEVELOPMENTS.—Shaft No. 1 is down 60 ft. on the main Juliet reef, which is from 3 ft. to 10 ft. wide. An average sample taken at 60 ft. returned 4 oz. 15 dwt. per ton.

Shaft No. 2 is down 50 ft. on another (the western) reef, which is there 4 ft. wide. A large sample taken from all parts of this shaft and from the dump returned 11 oz. 12 dwt. 21 gr. per ton.

Shaft No. 3 is down 70 ft. on another (the eastern) reef, a general sample of which is stated to have returned 4 oz. 15 dwt. per ton.

Shaft No. 4 is down 90 ft. on the eastern reef all the way. The reef is stated to be strong and well defined, and a bulk sample of 6 cwt. taken from all parts, and roughly dollied, gave a return of 6 oz. or 20 oz. to the ton, the stone being stated to resemble very much that of Charters Towers.

Besides the above there are various small shafts and costeens.

The gold is represented in the reports as being well and evenly distributed throughout, and "does not occur in the Juliet line of reef in lump, or what is known as 'specimens,' but is rather fine as a rule. The stone carries gold right through and dollies well," it being considered "right good battery stone," and "that the mine will prove highly payable and permanent."

It will be seen from the reports that there is a considerable amount of stone at grass, and a very large amount in sight. It is also stated that there is no doubt about the reefs "living" as depth is attained.

There is a fairly good supply of timber for mining purposes in the neighbourhood, and plenty of water to be obtained, it being stated that "on the adjoining holding to the southward a fair supply of water is met with at 110 ft."

The properties have been examined on behalf of the original owners by
C. Chewings, Ph.D., F.G.S., F.R.G.S.,
G. R. P. Fearby, M.E.

The special attention of intending subscribers is directed to their Reports, which are particularly exhaustive; and, in order that the fullest information in the possession of the Directors may be afforded, the complete Reports, together with the sketch plan prepared by Dr. Chewings, accompany the Prospectus.

The following independent Reports on the properties (obtained at the instance of the British and Colonial Agency, Limited) have also been received by cable, dated Coolgardie, 23rd April, 1896, from
J. WILSON ARCHIBALD, M.A.I.M.E.

"JULIET LEASES.—The property comprises 120 acres, Mount Malcolm. 3,788 ('Juliet North Extended'); the reefs on the property amount in number to two; the outcrop is strong, assaying 13 oz. per ton. 984 ('Juliet') adjacent location S.E. Reef outcrops through claims in width 5 ft., 2 costeens; main shaft is down 60 ft. North costeen: an average sample assaying 8 oz. per ton; an average sample 60 ft. assaying 4 oz. 15 dwt. per ton; very strong reef. West reef opened by shaft; ore in sight averages about 3 oz. 15 dwt. per ton, other reef outcrops through claims, unopened. 3,310 ('Juliet No. 1.') east and west; reef outcrops through claims. The gold-bearing vein can be traced for a long distance. 3,311 ('Juliet No. 2.') east; reef proved to a depth of 70 ft., 5 ft.; average assay value of ore in the mine is 3 oz. 5 dwt. per ton, free gold. The ore contains arsenical pyrites, very rich in gold. West reef not visible at surface. 3,320 ('Little Man Friday') is about 2 miles from the mine N.E. Juliet. Several small reefs opened by costeens showing high-grade ore. Plenty of water to be obtained. Thoroughly good property. I strongly recommend the investment. I can confirm statements by Fearby and Chewings; full report is sent by mail; also plans."

"EUREKA.—Near Malcolm, adjoining 'Juliet,' south side. The property covers an area of 24 acres—3,684 ('Eureka Extended') reef—continuation east reef 'Juliet.' Reef outcrops through claims. Incline shaft sunk on the vein 80 ft. Drive south 40 ft., dip S.E. The width of reef is 3 ft., encasing rocks soft greenstone—an average sample 7 oz. per ton free gold. An average sample from the 80 ft. level 10 oz. per ton free gold—2 per cent. arsenical pyrites, estimated value 150 to 160 oz. per ton. Several small reefs on property unopened. 3,097 ('Eureka') covers southern extension of reef. The gold occurs in outcrop. The property is a good one. I strongly recommend. Can confirm Fearby's report. Have sent full particulars by letter."

The statements made in the Prospectus are based on the reports of the above-named experts.

For contracts see full Prospectus.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form accompanying the prospectus or the form given below, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers or Brokers, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, Brokers, and Secretary of the Company.

This form can be cut out and sent with 2s. 6d. per Share applied for, to the Secretary of the Company, 71 and 72, King William-street, London, E.C.; or to the National Provincial Bank of England, Limited, 112, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., 209, Piccadilly, W., or other branches.

PROSPECTUS:

THIS COMPANY is formed to take over the following Cycle Businesses as going concerns, namely, the business carried on by:

(1) Messrs. Shave & Lawman, at their depot and works, New Kent-road London:
(2) The Freehold Cycle Works and Business carried on by Clarke Brothers Cycle Company, Limited, Forest Gate, London;
(3) The business of the Cycle Fittings Company, carried on by Mr. G. Baker, of 9, Farringdon-road, London, E.C.;

Also the extensive Freehold Works, situated at Bedford-street, Leamington.

The Leamington works have been secured to manufacture cycles and cycle fittings to meet the demand which the above firms have for their goods but are unable to supply.

These extensive freehold premises are situated in the centre of Leamington, and in the very heart of the cycle industry, where labour is cheap and abundant. The factory is about the same size as some of the largest at Coventry, such as Humber's, the workshops are well lighted and airy. There is an unusually large open paved yard, with a crane, also engine and boiler of the best class. From this factory over 20,000 machines can be turned out per year.

Two of the before-mentioned firms have large shops or depots, and do a good ready-money trade over the counter in cycle fittings supplied to cycle makers, and this is a trade built up over the past five or six years, and with the Leamington works to supply these fittings, the business can be greatly extended.

The Cycle businesses and large manufactories have been created by practical men from small beginnings, almost without an exception. The businesses taken over by this Company have good connections and unusually good cash trade in the London Depôts, and all that is needed is a large works and cheap labour to turn out the volume of business to meet the urgent demand of their customers, and the Capital asked for by this issue will provide this.

The "Winner" Bicycle is a popular machine, and special efforts will be made to turn out a large number from the Leamington Works; the London Works are unable to meet the demand for them.

WHAT THE "WINNER" HAS DONE IN GAINING PRIZES.

One good man, well trained, riding one machine, can do great things. But "Winners" are ridden by Club men with success on Road and Path in every corner of England.

The customers of the firms are numerous and cover a wide area. A list of names can be seen at the offices.

In addition to the home trade one of the firms has a shipping trade for the cheaper grade machine, and when the pressure of the home trade will admit of these machines being made, they can be shipped to foreign parts to an extent almost without a limit.

BENEFIT TO THE TOWN OF LEAMINGTON.

Leamington will benefit by having this industry introduced on a large scale, and the Company will gain by at once obtaining good class labour at a reasonable rate, and the local trade, as there is an important visiting and floating population of the better class.

The Company will receive substantial support by many in Leamington in the interest of the town. Mr. John Fell, J.P., ex-Mayor of Leamington, joins the Board of Directors. His knowledge of managing a large staff of men and his interest in the well-being of the town will be an important factor in the successful working of the Company, particularly as to output from the works at Leamington. Mr. Fell has given the Directors a letter as to the Labour Market in Leamington, from which the following is an extract: "From my knowledge of the working men, and the Labour Market in Leamington, I can safely state that an abundant number of smiths and workers at the lathe and vice, and other workmen, suitable for your business, can be readily obtained. House rent, too, for the working classes is lower in Leamington than in Coventry or Birmingham." The value of shares should be equal to any shares in the trade, which now stand so high, as the same number of machines will be turned out as are turned out by the firms whose capitals are vastly in excess of this Company's issue, and the Shareholders will have the advantage in securing the shares at par.

A valuation of the freehold properties, and the businesses, stock, and goodwill, as going concerns has been made by Messrs. Tilley & Ward, and their report is given herewith.

36, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., June 1, 1896.

To the Directors of
THE LEAMINGTON CYCLE COMPANY, LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—

We have made a careful survey and inspection of the following Properties and Businesses:—

(1) Freehold Factory, Bedford-street, Leamington;
(2) Freehold Cycle Works, Goodwill and Stock of Messrs. Clark Bros. Cycle Company, Limited, Dames-road, Forest Gate, London, E.;
(3) The Leasehold Cycle Works, Depot, Goodwill, and Stock of Messrs. Shave & Lawman, 141 and 143, New Kent-road, London, S.E.;
(4) The Cycle Business and Depot of Mr. J. Baker, of 9, Farringdon-road, London, E.C.

And dealing first with the London businesses, we find that the works are overcrowded, every available space being utilised; and having been built up from small beginnings into sound trades, the premises and works in each instance not being large enough to meet the demands of the rapidly increasing trade.

We have also been over the whole of the Leamington Works which you are taking over with the object of manufacturing cycles and cycle parts, the latter for which you have a special sale at your London depots.

We consider that as a whole the union of these depots and factories with the large manufactory at Leamington is a wise one, and must lead to an important, sound, and prosperous business.

We speak from personal knowledge of this class of business, having valued several of the most prosperous cycle businesses at Coventry.

We have read your Prospectus, which is signed by us, and note the terms of purchase, and we are of opinion that the purchase price, £65,000, as mentioned therein is a reasonable one and most favourable to the Company.

We are, Gentlemen, your obedient servants,
TILLEY & WARD.

Taking the net profits at only 30s. per machine on 12,500 machines, which is much less than the capacity of the works, and a low estimate of profit, will yield £18,750, and taking this amount as being divisible for dividend purposes, the result is as follows:—

Profits		£18,750
Deduct Interest on £15,000, Debentures, 6 per cent. ..	£900
Dividend on £60,000 shares at 15 per cent.	£9,000
Leaving the large surplus of..		£8,850

The purchase price is fixed by the Vendor as follows: £20,000 payable in Cash and £45,000 payable in Shares. The last sum may be payable partly in Cash and Shares, but the Vendor stipulates that he shall have at least £20,000 in Shares, as he desires an interest in the Company, and part of this amount is required by the managers and late owners of the works, as they sold on condition that they should have an interest in the business. The Vendor undertakes to accept Debentures in lieu of Shares if called upon, but receives any bonus raised on this issue.

The Directors reserve, out of this issue, £20,000 for working capital, £10,000 in cash, £10,000 Shares, to be issued if wanted at a premium or at a par, and £5,000 Debentures are reserved, which they deem ample for the purpose, as much of the business is cash trade.

The Company has arranged with the Vendor to fit up, at his own expense, the Leamington Works with all machinery, including shafting, lathes, and vices sufficient to turn out 250 cycles per week, as per specification. The machinery is ordered, and will be delivered in fourteen days. The Vendor has also to do all alterations required to the building, as per specification. All this is in addition to the above valuation. The Company will therefore start with working capital intact, and will not have the usual heavy expenditure on plant and buildings and the consequent delay.

It is hoped that there will be a good dividend the first half-year, as the Company starts with all the works equipped, and with a demand for their goods.

The Directors by the contract with the Vendor have only engaged to pay cash to the amount of £20,000, the rest of the purchase-money may be payable in shares, though the freehold properties and businesses taken over are valued at £65,000.

The following contracts have been entered into, namely: (1) Contract for sale, dated 25th of June, 1896, Commendador Brady of the one part, and the Company of the other part; (2), (3), (4), and (5) Contracts dated respectively the 27th of May, 1896; 2nd of June, 1896, 3rd of June, 1896, and 3rd of June, 1896, the last four being the contracts under which the said Commendador Brady agreed to purchase the four cycle businesses referred to on page 1 hereof, from the then owners thereof.

All costs, charges, and expenses, incidental to the formation of the Company up to the first allotment of shares will be borne by the Vendors.

There are also subsisting trade engagements incident to the business which this Company will take over, as well as arrangements made by the Vendor with reference to certain premiums to be paid to the Underwriters of some of the Shares, and for securing the subscription of the Company's Share Capital. Applicants for Shares shall be deemed to have notice of all such Contracts and arrangements, and to have agreed with the Company to waive the specification in the Prospectus of the dates and the names of the parties thereto, as required by Section 38 of the Companies' Act, 1867, add all claims under that Section or otherwise, and applications for Shares will only be received upon this understanding.

The Contract for Sale, the Valuer's Report and the Memorandum of Association can be inspected at the Office of the Company's Solicitors, Messrs. Martin & Co.

Applications for Shares and Debentures should be made on the form accompanying the prospectus, and sent with the deposit direct to the Company's Bankers, if by cheque, then to the order of the Bankers. In any case where no Allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full, and where the number of Shares allotted is less than the number applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the amount payable on Allotment.

Copies of the Prospectus and Forms of Applications for Shares and Debentures may be had from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and at the Offices of the Company.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The GLOUCESTER GOLD MINING COMPANY, Limited, has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and further developing two Gold Mining properties, situate in the Thames District, Hauraki Goldfield, New Zealand, formerly known as the Auckland and Enterprise Mines, but more recently as The Gloucester.

The property comprises about eighty-seven acres, and contains, either wholly or in part, the following old claims (vide Mr. Bowler's Report), viz.:—Lucky Hit; Conqueror: Star of Fermanagh; Mary Ellen; Adelaide; Greenstone; Hong-Kong; Excelsior; Enterprise; and it also includes the Last Chance claim, which has been acquired and added to the property by the present vendors.

The properties have been worked at various periods, and are stated by Mr. Adams, in his cable report, to contain ten reefs, varying in width from six inches to three feet, from which very rich ore was obtained when the mines were previously in active operation.

The properties were reported on in September last year by Mr. John Bowler, a well-known mining manager for twenty years at the Thames, and in April of the present year by Captain Argall and Mr. T. H. Dalby, Mining Engineer, whose reports, printed in full, are enclosed with prospectus. A cable report on the property made by Mr. E. F. Adams, Government Surveyor, under date April 20, 1896, has also been obtained. The following is a copy of such cable report:—

"13th day of April, 1896, Gloucester Gold Mining property, located two miles from the Thames at a level of 250 to 500 yards above sea level. The property covers 87 acres. The acquisition of the Little Willie and Last Chance properties very desirable. There are ten known lodes which vary in width from 6 inches to 3 feet; very rich ore was obtained in the old workings. There is a great extent of country rock most favourable for gold. The workings are of a very limited extent, and very much scattered; the Mine is practically undeveloped. With acquisition as already suggested I consider it a valuable property, and very desirable acquisition."

The following are extracts from the MS. reports:—

CAPTAIN ARGALL says:—

"Apparently there are two systems of reefs prevailing, viz., the main ones, having a bearing of N.E. and S.W., whilst others are running almost at right angles.

"These reefs vary in width from a few inches to 3½ ft. in many instances, carrying well-defined walls.

"The property itself can be economically worked, and, with a working capital of, say, about £20,000, there is every reason to believe that, if worked in a miner-like manner and under efficient management, would turn out to be very remunerative to the shareholders."

Mr. John Bowler, Mining Manager, says:—

"I have been connected with the district ever since 1867. The position of your ground is excellent, and it is indisputably on the strike of one of the best gold-bearing belts of strata ever opened on the Thames Goldfields.

"Your property is surrounded on all sides by notable mining properties. I have no hesitation in stating that if sufficient capital is subscribed, this, together with judicious expenditure in the right channel of country, there is no better investment at the present time under offer to the public than this."

The Wardens Report for 1895 on the New Zealand Goldfields also contains valuable evidence as to the richness of this district, as will be seen by a perusal of the following extracts, showing work done on properties to be acquired by this Company and on adjacent properties:—

"ADELAIDE."—This mine has again been worked on tribute; 102 tons were crushed for 106 oz. 10 dwt. of gold.

"CAMBRIA."—490 tons of quartz yielded 788 oz. 6 dwt.

"FAME AND FORTUNE."—570 tons of quartz yielded 239 oz. 3 dwt., and tributers crushed 67 tons for 109 oz. 2 dwt.

The intention of the present Company is to carry out the developments necessary for working the mines upon a much larger scale and in a far more efficient manner than has hitherto been attempted. It is proposed to erect a suitable battery of the most modern type, together with the latest gold-saving appliances, as there is every reason to believe that so soon as the existing drives are cleared and re-timbered the Company can at once set to work and obtain large quantities of ore, which, judging from the reports, should be of a highly payable character.

The Vendor to the Company, who pays all expenses attending the formation of the Company up to allotment, has fixed the price to be paid for the property at eighty thousand pounds (£80,000) payable, as to ten thousand pounds in cash, and the balance in fully-paid Shares, thus leaving forty thousand pounds (£40,000) available for working capital.

Contracts have been entered into between William Philip Gutheridge, by his attorney, Allan Schofield Caine, and the Mining Transport and General Finance Company, Limited, dated the 14th day of May, 1896, and between the Mining Transport and General Finance Company, Limited, and John Richardson, dated the 25th June, 1896. Copies of such contracts, as well as the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and the original written and cabled reports above quoted, may be seen at the offices of the Solicitor of the Company until the first allotment of Shares.

Agreements and other arrangements have been or may be entered into relating to the property sold, or the purchase thereof, and for the payment of the charges and expenses attending the formation and registration of the Company, and also underwriting, brokerage, commission, and other expenses attending the issue of the Company's Capital, to none of which Agreements or arrangements is the Company a party, though they may technically be Contracts within the meaning of Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. Applicants for Shares shall be deemed to have notice thereof, and to waive their rights (if any) to any further particulars as to the dates and names of the parties thereto or otherwise, and shall accept this as a sufficient compliance with the said Section, and to have agreed with the Company (as Trustees for the Directors and other persons liable) to waive all claims (if any) against them for not more fully complying with the requirements of the said Section, and Allotments will only be made on this express condition.

Applications for Shares must be made on the Form accompanying Prospectus, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application. In cases where no allotment is made, the amount deposited on application will be returned in full. If the number of Shares allotted be less than applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the amount due on allotment, so far as necessary, and any balance will be returned.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers and Brokers, and at the Offices of the Company.

London, June, 1896.

This form may be cut out and sent entire with the Deposit to the Bankers of the Company, THE CITY BANK, Ludgate Hill Branch, London, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company was incorporated on the 16th of September, 1891, for the purpose of amalgamating the business of Sir Christopher Furness including the well-known "Furness Line" of Steamers, and the business of Edward Withy & Co., Iron and Steel Shipbuilders and Repairers. The Share Capital of £700,000 was not offered for public subscription, it being allotted as fully-paid to the partners in the respective firms as the purchase money of their businesses as going concerns, or since taken up by them. Since the incorporation of the Company £300,000 of 5 per cent. Cumulative Preference Shares of £10 each have been created, but are reserved for future issue. The Ordinary Shares are held by the Chairman and Directors and their friends, which affords assurance that the control and management of the business will continue as hitherto in the hands of Sir Christopher Furness and his Co-Directors.

This Company has now the opportunity of acquiring a controlling interest in the important Marine Engine Works at Middlesbrough which are now being formed into a Limited Liability Company, and which will take over the business of the well-known firm of Westgarth, English & Co., and the Marine Engine Department of the Tees Side Engine Works, Company. The addition of the manufacture of Marine Engines was originally contemplated by the Directors of Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., and the proposed investment will give the Company control of the manufacture of the marine engines which it requires, and thus afford an important and valuable adjunct to the Shipbuilding and Repairing Department.

The Debentures now offered will form a first charge, by way of floating security only, over the whole of the Ships, Assets, Property, and undertaking of the Company, which is not at liberty to create any Mortgage or Charge upon any part of its property in priority to these Debentures.

In order to further increase and develop the shipbuilding and repairing business, the Company has recently constructed and completed a spacious dry dock, equipped with all the latest appliances for docking and undocking vessels of large tonnage, and is extending the shipyard by erecting additional machinery, including a complete installation of lighting and driving by electricity, which will enable the Company to construct and deal with steamers of the largest tonnage. The cost of carrying out these extensions and improvements are estimated at about £60,000.

During the past nine years the number and tonnage of steamers built at the ship yard were as follows, viz.:—

1887	9 Steamers	19,877 tons.		1892	7 Steamers	18,143 tons.
1888	9 ,,	20,146 ,,		1893	7 ,,	19,199 ,,
1889	9 ,,	21,082 ,,		1894	9 ,,	23,259 ,,
1890	10 ,,	23,063 ,,		1895	9 ,,	25,206 ,,
1891	10 ,,	25,481 ,,

It is anticipated that, when the above-mentioned extensions and improvements are completed, the Company, in addition to dealing with a large amount of docking and repairing work, will be in a position to construct new tonnage of about 40,000 tons per annum. The Ship Yard is at present well occupied both with building and repairing work.

The number of steamers owned and partly owned by the Company is 62, the Company's ownership in the steamers representing a gross register tonnage of 89,891 tons, and a cargo-carrying capacity of 127,300 tons.

The "Furness Line" consists of the following services:—London and Boston, weekly each way (jointly with the Leyland Line); London, Halifax (Nova Scotia), and St. John (New Brunswick) fortnightly, under Subsidy Contract with Canadian Government; West Hartlepool and London, weekly; London and Antwerp, weekly; Tyne and New York, fortnightly; Montreal to United Kingdom or Continent during the season.

In addition to the above large fleet, the Company is a considerable Shareholder in the following Companies:—

The Chesapeake and Ohio Steamship Company, Limited;
Frederick Leyland & Company, Limited;
The Atlantic and Eastern Steamship Company, Limited.

Owing to the increase of the various trades of the "Furness Line," the Company has contracted for and is building two large steamers of a combined measurement cargo capacity of about 18,350 tons, which vessels will be fitted up with all the latest improvements for the conveyance of live stock across the Atlantic, and will add materially to the earning power of the Line.

It is confidently believed that, with the addition of the new Steamers, Graving Dock, and the acquisition of the interest in the Marine Engineering Works, the profits of the Company will be very largely augmented.

The Company possesses an extensive and remunerative business as Steamship Managers, Charterers, Ship and Insurance Brokers, and Commission and Forwarding Agents, carried on at West Hartlepool, London, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, with Branch Offices at New York, Boston, Baltimore, Newport News, and Chicago, U.S.A., and at Halifax (Nova Scotia), and St. John (New Brunswick), to which last-named ports the Company runs a regular line of steamers, carrying the mails from London under subsidy from the Dominion Government as above mentioned.

The Assets of the Company stood in the books at the 30th April last as follows:—

The following Certificate of profits has been given by the Company's Auditors:—

West Hartlepool,
22nd June, 1896.

To the Directors of Messrs. FURNESS, WITHY, & CO., Ltd.

Gentlemen,

Having been Auditors of your Company since its incorporation, we certify that the result of the trading has been as follows:—

For the year ended 30th April, 1894, a profit of	£85,959	12	8
,, ,, 1895, ,,	85,476	4	2
	£271,385	11	11

Out of these profits the Company has paid:—Debenture Interest and Expenses, Directors' Fees, Income Tax, and an Annual Dividend of 5 per cent. upon the Ordinary Share Capital of £700,000; and has set aside a further sum of £90,000 to Reserve for Depreciation Fund, which at the 30th April last stood at £135,000, and a further sum of £15,000 as provision for Contingent Loss on bad and doubtful debts, thus raising such provision to £25,000, leaving at 30th April last an unappropriated balance of £8,046 7s. 3d. standing to the credit of Profit and Loss.

We are, yours faithfully,
MONKHOUSE, GODDARD, & CO.,
Chartered Accountants.

From the above Certificate it will be seen that with its present fleet and shipyard the Company has earned an average of upwards of £90,000 per annum. It is confidently anticipated by the Directors that, with the addition of the dry dock, the two large steamers, and the investment in the marine engine works, an annual profit of at least £125,000 may be relied upon.

The amount required for the annual interest on the Debentures is £20,250, which will be reduced each year as the Debentures are redeemed by the operation of the Redemption Fund.

It is not proposed to pay a higher dividend than 5 per cent. per annum on the Ordinary Share Capital of £700,000 until the amount of the reserve fund has reached the amount of the outstanding Debentures.

The existing 5 per cent. Debentures were issued in 1893, and it is proposed to exercise the right of purchasing at £105 such as are not exchanged for Debentures of the present issue. As will be seen from the Auditors' Certificate, since those Debentures were issued the Company has paid annual dividends at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the Ordinary Shares of £700,000, and there stands to the credit of Reserve for Depreciation the sum of £135,000, and to the credit of Provision for bad and doubtful debts £25,000.

The Debentures will be registered in the names of the holders at the Registered Offices of the Company. The half-yearly payments of interest will be remitted by the Company to the holders of the Debentures, the first payment being on the 31st day of October next, and the second on the 30th day of April next, for interest on the amount paid up.

Applications in the form issued with the Prospectus must be accompanied by a deposit of £15 per cent. on the amount of Debentures applied for, and be forwarded to the Bankers of the Company.

If the full amount applied for by any applicant be not allotted, the surplus amount due on deposit will be appropriated to the sum due on allotment.

Application for the new Debentures in exchange for existing 5 per cent. Debentures at £105 will be received on any day up to and including the 3rd of July, upon the following conditions:—

Such applications must be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus and will receive allotment in full.

The Debentures must be deposited with the Form of Application.

Cheques for the difference of interest up to the 30th April, 1897, will, upon allotment, be forwarded to the applicants.

Application for a settlement and quotation will be made in due course to the London Stock Exchange.

Copy of the Subsidy Contract with the Canadian Government, Form of the Proposed Trust Deed and Debenture, a print of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and the original or duplicate Certificate of the Auditors may be inspected at the offices of the respective Solicitors.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and of the Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and working a Group of Mining Leases or Blocks, situated in the district of Yalgoo, Western Australia, comprising an area of about 165 acres, and known as the Joker Group of Leases, the property of the West Australian Venture Syndicate, Limited, and the Exploration Companies with which it is connected.

The property comprises the following Leases or Blocks, namely:—

Joker Block	Lease No.	111,	about 12	acres.
The Ace	,,	142,	,, 15	,,
Right Bower	,,	112,	,, 12	,,
Lady Elgron	,,	113,	,, 12	,,
Australian United	,,	121,	,, 12	,,
Star of Bilhertha	,,	188,	,, 24	,,
King of Diamonds	,,	169,	,, 12	,,
Queen of Diamonds (not yet registered)			,, 18	,,
Full Hand	,,	,,	,, 12	,,
Royal Flush	,,	,,	,, 12	,,

The above leases or blocks adjoin the property of the Joker (Yalgoo) Gold Mines, Limited, as shown in the sketch plan accompanying this Prospectus.

Mr. FOWLER, M.E., in his Report to the West Australian Venture Syndicate, Limited, dated April 25, 1896, states as follows:—

"The Joker lode passes right through and beyond the Right Bower, No. 112, Lady Elgron, No. 113, Australian United, No. 121, Star of Bilbertha, and two other leases, the last of which is No. 188, and may easily be traced for a considerable distance northward of these properties. To the south the lode does not appear in the low ground of plain, and, so far as I know, no ground has been taken up in that direction.

"The Joker Reef appears to be the main reef, but there is another very powerful one running through the Queen of Hearts, No. 143, Joker Block, No. 111, and the Ace, No. 142. Very little work has been done on this lode, which, at the narrowest point, was 18 ft. in width in the Ace, and in the Joker Block was at least 60 ft., which was exposed in a costeen.

"The adjacent country rock on the footwall side appears to be a felsitic porphyry, but the main or principal geological rock in this district is a micaceous slate.

"The lode that runs through the Miner's Right, No. 75, which belongs to the Joker Company, is also of great size. A sample taken across the lode formation, which is a decomposed talcose schist, exposed by a costeen for at least 15 ft. without either wall appearing, gave a good show on panning.

"I think that most of the gold is carried by the thin iron veins (very numerous) which run through the formation. The lode here appears to be the same as that in the Left Bower, and the same characteristics occur, and the direction corresponds to the ground in the King of Diamonds, where the lode is of very great size, and where a shaft is being sunk to cut it.

"There is also a lode coming into the Lady Elgron, from the north-east, on which, however, no work has been done.

"In view of the extraordinary find on the Joker Mine, the lode of which is traceable through the first-mentioned properties, I can strongly recommend them as a most promising speculation, and would also suggest that you secure all the properties above-mentioned, and work them, if possible, under one management, as there are several points along the reefs from which they could be attacked simultaneously from the sides of the hill without the expenditure of either much money or time, and I think there is every likelihood of good gold shoots being found at several points.

"The developments going on at the Joker will be a most valuable guide in mining operations on these properties, and as I learn that the works on the Joker are going to be proceeded with in an energetic manner, both as to mining and water supply, you have a distinct advantage.

"I do not think there will be any doubt as to water being met with sufficient for battery and other purposes."

A copy only of the above report is in the possession of the Directors, the original having been retained by the Agent of the West Australian Venture Syndicate, Limited, at Perth.

On June 8, 1896, the following telegram was received by the Directors of the Joker (Yalgoo) Gold Mines, Limited (whose property adjoins the properties to be acquired as shown in the plan), from Mr. Bowes Scott, M.E., and Mr. Pridham, M.E. The telegram refers to the property of the Joker (Yalgoo) Gold Mines, Limited.

"Joker—We are of opinion that the mine is phenomenal, and if it continues to open as in past, it will prove one of the greatest in the country. The indications clearly point to such continuations. Sufficient water can be procured to run 500 head of stamps, which should be required."

The plan accompanying prospectus is a copy of a sketch plan forwarded to London by the Managing Director of the West Australian Venture Syndicate, Limited, it shows the position of the several properties to be acquired by the Company, and their position as regards the run of the Joker and other lodes traversing the property.

The West Australian Venture Syndicate, Limited, and the other Exploration Companies allied with it, who are the Vendors, have undertaken to pay all the expenses of forming and floating the Company up to allotment, except fees and duties on registration and transfer, and have fixed the price to be paid for the properties at £200,000, payable as to £195,000 in fully-paid Shares and as to £5,000 in cash.

The whole of the present issue having been privately subscribed, no further applications for Shares will be received, this Prospectus being published for public information only.

The following contract has been entered into in regard to the property, viz.:—

An agreement, dated June 29, 1896, and made between the West Australian Venture Syndicate, Limited, on behalf of itself and the Exploration Companies with which it is connected, of the one part and the Company of the other part.

Certain other contracts and arrangements have been entered into by or on behalf of the Vendors as to the acquisition of the properties, the promotion of the Company, the subscription of its Capital and otherwise, to none of which the Company is a party, and applicants for Shares will be deemed to have had notice of the contents of same, and to have waived their right, if any, to particulars thereof, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

Some of the Directors are Directors of or Shareholders in the West Australian Venture Syndicate, and the Exploration Companies with which it is connected, namely:—The West Australian Mines Development Syndicate, Limited; the Anglo German Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited; the Anglo-French Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited; the Anglo-American Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited; the Anglo-Netherland Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited; the Anglo-Scandinavian Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited; the Anglo-Belgian Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited; the Anglo-Austrian Exploration Company of Western Australia, Limited.

London, June 29, 1896.

The Subscription List will OPEN on Thursday, the 2nd July, 1896, and CLOSE on or before Saturday, the 4th July, 1896, for Town, and on or before Monday, the 6th July, 1896, for the Country.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire as a going concern the business of the Premier Cycle Company, Limited (virtually a private Company), carrying on its business at the Premier Works, Coventry, Nuremberg (Germany), and Eger (Austria), with the depots at 19 and 20, Holborn Viaduct, 32 and 34, Shaftesbury Avenue, and 133, Hammersmith Road, London, at 23, Boulevard Poissonnière, and Levallois Perret, Paris, and at Alexanderstrasse, Berlin, together with the fixed plant, machinery, tools, stock in trade, book debts, patents, patent rights, registered designs and trade marks, freehold and leasehold land and buildings, goodwill, and the benefit of all existing contracts.

The business was established by Messrs. Hillman & Herbert in the year 1876, and has been developed very considerably until it is now one of the largest, best equipped, and most successful in the cycle trade, turning out upwards of 1,000 cycles a week. The Premier Cycle Company are the owners of a number of valuable patents, including the "Helical Tube," which has great practical advantages over the weldless tube, both of which are used in the manufacture.

The Works at Coventry are freehold, and cover an area of nearly two and a-half acres. They were erected in 1877, and have since been enlarged from time to time to meet the requirements of increasing trade. The plant and machinery, including valuable labour-saving and automatic appliances, are in excellent condition.

The Works not only produce complete Bicycles, but manufacture the helical tubing, and nearly all the component parts, thus standing in a unique position in the trade.

Owing to the protective duty and transport charges on machines entering Germany and Austria, extensive factories were established some years since at Nuremberg, in Germany, and more recently at Eger, in Austria. Up to the present time, the demand has far exceeded the output of the factories. The Freeholds on which these two Works are situate are about six acres in extent. The Helical Tube, which constitutes the most important item in the construction of Premier Cycles, is made at the works at Coventry for all three Factories.

The "Premier" machines are of the highest class, as testified by the following honours gained at home and abroad:—

Gold Medal (Highest), International Inventions Exhibition, London, 1885.
Silver Medal, Highest Award, Nuremberg Exhibition, 1885.
Highest Award, Calcutta Exhibition, 1884.
Highest Award, Ontario, Canada, 1884.
Diploma of Merit, Royal Military Exhibition, London, 1890.
Diploma and Silver Medal, International Exhibition, Edinburgh, 1890.
Diploma and Gold Medal, International Sports Exhibition, Scheveningen, Holland, 1892.
Diploma of Merit, Milan, 1894; while at the World's Fair, Chicago, 1893, they gained the highest awards, the Premier Company being the only firm of English Cycle Manufacturers who obtained three distinct awards—Bicycles, Tricycles, and Helical Tubes. The Premier machines have been for many years entirely independent of the support of the racing element, an item of considerable expense to many other companies.

Considerable alterations and additions have been made to both the Coventry and the Nuremberg Works during the past few months, which has enabled the output to be raised from 800 to 1,000 machines per week, and on the completion of the additions, which are now nearly finished, the capacity will be brought up to an output of 1,200 Cycles per week.

Mr. Wm. Henry Herbert, one of the original founders of the business, has agreed to act as Managing Director for a period of at least three years, while Mr. Alexander Rotherham and Mr. G. F. Twist, who have also been associated as Directors with the management for many years, join the Board as Directors.

The Company proposes to take over the services of the Works Superintendents and others of the chief employés at Coventry, and to retain the services of the Sales Managers at the London and Paris Depots, also the Managers of the Works at Nuremberg and Eger, thus ensuring a continuance of the successful management by which the business has attained its present position. The firm employs over 1,100 workpeople in the different works and depots.

The books of the Premier Cycle Company have been audited for many years by Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, Bishop, & Clarke, and Messrs. Thomas Wilshere & Sons, who have given the following Certificate of Profits:—

To the Directors of THE NEW PREMIER CYCLE COMPANY, LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—Having acted as Auditors of the Premier Cycle Company, Limited, for some years past, we beg to report that we have examined the books in Coventry and London, and certified accounts supplied by the German, Austrian, and French branches.

The profits shown for the undermentioned periods, before charging interest on debentures, Managing Directors' salaries, or income tax, but after making, in our opinion, ample allowance for depreciation of plant, are as under:—

For the eleven months ending 31st August, 1894	£35,187	5	0
For the year ending 31st August, 1895	41,253	18	0

We are, Gentlemen, your obedient servants,

TURQUAND, YOUNGS, BISHOP, & CLARKE.
THOS. WILSHERE & SONS.

26th June, 1896.

While the following Certificate by Messrs. Thomas Wilshere & Sons deals with the profits made since the 31st August, 1895:—

To the Directors of the New Premier Cycle Company, Ltd.

Gentlemen,—It is impossible to give a Certificate for the trading for the nine months ending 31st May, 1896, owing to the difficulty of taking stock before the 31st August. We have, however, examined the English Books, and the Statement of Sales, &c., from Germany and Austria, and we find that the business done shows a marked advance over previous years, whilst the profits have proportionately increased.

At some of the establishments we have been able to ascertain the actual results, but where this has not been possible we have assumed the profit to be maintained at the same percentage as last year, and have not taken into account any increased rate of profit.

We are of opinion that it will be safe to estimate that net profit of over £45,000 have been made during the nine months under review, or at the rate of £60,000 per annum.

The Directors of The Premier Cycle Company are sanguine that the profit for the year will largely exceed this figure, and we have no reason to doubt that from their practical knowledge their estimate will prove correct. Yours faithfully,

THOS. WILSHERE & SONS,
1, Welford Road, Leicester, 23rd June, 1896.

Attention is drawn to the value of the Six per cent. Preference Shares as an investment, as for the past two and three-quarter years the profits, after payment of Debenture interest, have been nearly sufficient to pay the Preference dividend twice over in each year, while the profits of the present year are also sufficient to pay substantial dividends on the Ordinary Shares and to form reserve funds.

The Company will take over the business from 31st August, 1895, with the profits accrued from that date (which the Directors of the Premier Cycle Company, Limited, estimate will have amounted to at least £55,000), less the sum of £19,140 already drawn out on account of profits.

As the Company will acquire the undertaking with the stock, book debts, reserves, &c., as they stood at 31st August last, after payment of current accounts and dividends, together with the benefit of the trading since that date (less £19,140 profits divided previous to the 31st May last), the new Company will start with cash assets consisting of stock, book debts and cash, amounting to over £100,000, which is sufficient not only for present requirements, but also for a considerable extension of the business, either in Cycles or Motor Cars, should it hereafter be advisable to undertake that branch of the trade.

The purchase price to be paid by the Company for the freebold works and business premises at Coventry, Nuremberg, and Eger, and for the leasehold depots at Holborn Viaduct, Shaftesbury Avenue, and Hammersmith Road, London, Paris, and Berlin, together with all the plant, machinery, tools, stock, book debts, and other assets, and including the valuable patents already referred to, has been fixed by the vendors, who are the promoters of the Company at £700,000, of which £100,000 will be paid by the allotment of one-third of the Ordinary Share Capital and the balance in cash, but the shareholders of the Premier Cycle Company have applied at par, on the terms of this prospectus, for one-third of the Debentures, and one-third of the Preference shares.

The following Contracts have been entered into:—Contract dated 27th June, 1896, and made between the Premier Cycle Company, Limited (Hillman, Herbert, & Cooper), of the one part, and the City of London Contract Corporation, Limited, of the other part, being a Contract for the purchase of the above property by the Corporation. Contract dated 29th June, 1896, between the City of London Contract Corporation, Limited, of the one part, and this Company of the other part, for the re-sale to this Company, at a profit, out of which the Corporation has undertaken to pay the costs, charges, and expenses in connection with the incorporation of this Company, and the issuing and guaranteeing the subscription of the Debentures and Shares offered for subscription.

In relation to this Contract the said Corporation has entered into various arrangements which may constitute contracts within the meaning of the 38th Section of the Companies Act, 1867. There are also various Trade Contracts. Applicants must be deemed to waive the insertion of dates and names of the parties to any such arrangements or contracts, and in order to prevent any question must accept the foregoing as a sufficient compliance with Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, the Accountants' Certificates, and the above-mentioned Agreements, can be inspected by intending investors at the Offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

Applications for Debentures and Shares should be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and should be forwarded to the Company's Bankers, accompanied by a remittance for the amount of the deposit, and if paid by cheque then payable to the order of such Bank. If the whole amount applied for by the applicant be not allotted, the surplus amount paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the sum due on allotment. When no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of the Company, or at the offices of its Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors, or at 19 and 20, Holborn Viaduct, 32 and 34, Shaftesbury-avenue, and 133, Hammersmith road, London.

To see dear Trilby of the neat, sweet feet;
To hear her most delightful cry, "Maïe aïe!"
Or that first sound of "Milk below," so slow.
Let's see Svengali, who with leer, jeer, sneer,
Will wreck poor little Billee's joy (coy boy);
He, who with power to hypnotise wise eyes,
Casts on his victim all the while vile smile.
And Taffy, "man of blood," who wrought, thought, fought,
And did in friendship all he could, would, should.
Let's see the Laird, with generous hand, stand bland,
When he, by Madame Vinard caught, bought aught
That good old times to him recalls—balls! walls!
With his aside so droll, "Je prong," long, strong.
Poor, faithful Gecko, Dodor, Zouzou, too,
We'll see them all, and then to deep sleep creep. Nurse.

It may be interesting to add that the following competitors sent contributions which are considered worthy of special commendation:—Rex, Logic, Bob Ridley, Malignant, Marplot, Almaviva, Rewop, La Plata, Bel Demonio, Testudo Fidelis, Esperanza, J. McGrigor Allan, Toucan, Janet, and Sclanidge.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 910.

The time of the Yearling Sales having come round again, it is proposed to repeat a Competition that has for several years in succession proved exceptionally popular. That is to say, the usual prize of Two Guineas is offered to that competitor who best succeeds in

11. A Black Filly	Endurance	Play Away
12. A Chestnut Filly	Retreat	New Magdalen

Competitors should not suggest more than one name for each yearling. They must be careful, also, not to include in their suggestions any name already borne by horses now in training. All answers must reach me at the latest by the morning of Monday, July 13.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name with the address of "THE OLD MOLE" is Reginald Pearse, Esq., Marigola, San Terenzo, Gulf of Spezia, Italy.

SNIBOR.—Thanks for your letter.

REX.—I had already noted this misprint of "notes" for "note" in your lines.

ESPERANZA.—And so, too, the word printed "real" in your second line should have been "great."

DROMEDERY.—I am sorry that you interpreted my stipulation so literally. I did not mean that the words "Tsar" and "Coronation" need actually be introduced.

TREENE.—Thanks for your card. The omission was duly noted before the award was made.

LA PLATA AND DAMI.—In each case I looked up the original "copy" of your lines, and read them as there written.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 907.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

ORIGINAL SUGGESTIONS OF NOVEL FEATURES FOR BAZAARS OR FANCY FAIRS.

Sell articles which are of some use.—Zetæta.

A decorated bicycle competition, an entrance fee being charged for competitors and admission fee for others. Prizes of cycle accessories could be obtained free or at reduced prices from various firms as advertisements. Space permitting, tests of skilful riding might be added.—Gold Vase.

I suggest fruit competitions: A small entrance fee, say 1d. each, and a prize given to the one who shells a pint of peas or nibs a pint of gooseberries in the shortest time. This to be repeated at intervals during the bazaar, and the fruit afterwards sold.—Chee.

A beauty competition, consisting of a certificate given to the handsomest lady present at a specified hour, entitling her to choose an article of the value of, say, a guinea from any of the stalls.—Almaviva.

All the ladies who will assist at the stalls, at the bazaar, to be clad in Quakeress (old-time) costumes; in the grey satin dresses, net kerchiefs, and caps of soft tulle. These latter put on, even with the hair done as it is in these times.—Sphinx.

1. A bachelor's needlework stall, each gentleman to sew on a button, threading his own needle; small prize for the neatest and best. 2. Cinderella competition—a very smart pair of shoes to be offered as prize to the lady who is able to wear them, each lady to pay an entrance fee.—Tiger Jess.

The "Cinématographe" or "Theatrograph" for exhibiting kinetoscope pictures on a screen. The show is decidedly attractive and very remunerative, a charge being made for each scene represented. The latter apparatus can be fitted to any lime-light or electric lantern, and takes any kinetoscope film. —Tea-pot.

Arrange with the Electrophone Company, Gerrard-street, to supply the bazaar with an occasional morceau from the opera, drama, concert-room, or other attraction within its scope.—Baritone.

A maze to be made. In the middle a stall. Sixpence or a shilling to be paid on entering the maze, any one successful in reaching the stall to choose an article from it. The maze can be made of calico stretched on poles stuck in the ground or of sheep-hurdles placed on end. If there is not room for a really good maze, there must be a fixed time for people to reach the stall.—Bonus.

1. That each stall should represent a colour and all the articles on it be of that colour; the lady, of course, dressed in a dress of her colour. 2. That each stall should represent a country, that the articles should be the make, or pretend to be the make, of that country; the lady, of course, would wear the costume of the country. 3. That each stall should be superintended by ladies wearing the uniform of a regiment.—Tony.

1. Costermongers' barrows and street. 2. A Russian fair.—Bo-peep.

I would suggest an astronomical bazaar, consisting in all of twelve stalls, draped in pale blue muslin, on which should be pasted golden or silver suns, moons, stars, constellations, &c. Each stall should be dedicated to one of the signs of the Zodiac, and over each should be placed its own sign, such as a large crab (Cancer), a cradle containing two wax dolls (Gemini), a couple of fish (Pisces). I would further suggest that the objects for sale should be arranged as follows:—On the Ram, the Bull, the Crab, the Lion, the Scorpion stalls, fancy articles; on the Twins, children's clothes; on the Virgin, flowers; at the Balance, fortune-telling; on the Archer, toys; on the Goat, dairy produce; on the Waterbearer, refreshments; on the Fishes, art productions. Those serving at the stalls should all be in Greek dresses, braided with gold or silver round the hem in the design of the stall at which they serve. If space and expense permit, a pretty finishing touch would be to have the ceiling lightly festooned in pale blue, with a large golden sun in the centre, surrounded by silver moons and stars.—Chum.

As our modern fancy fairs are so hackneyed and cost so much for decorations and attractions, don't you think it would be an excellent innovation if one could, for the good of the cause, prevail upon eligible young men to be stall-holders? What a saving of expense it would prove. No decorations, &c., would be needful then, and what crowds of enlightened females would push their mites into the coffers of these pious young men. If it were only practicable, I am certain the bazaar would pay.—Beginner.

A room or place should be set aside for a light supper, with an entertainment consisting of music, singing, and recitations, with programmes, charging so much per head. The time should be arranged so as to give about an hour after supper to again look round the bazaar. People generally after such an event are more inclined to be generous and dig deeper in the pocket.—Snibor.

Cooking lessons are fashionable now. Let three or four young ladies—well known in the neighbourhood—show their skill in the art by the making and baking of various cakes and patisserie. A charge should be made to see the process, and the girls must be attired in becoming white cooking aprons and caps. It might be arranged that the cakes could be sold at 1d. or 2d. each, and they might also be tasted and tea made at the same place. It need not interfere with the usual refreshment stall. A gas-stove for baking would probably be lent by any manufacturer for the sake of advertisement, and a man must be sent to manage it.—Dove.

1. Cycling Competition.—A very novel feature in connection with a fancy fair or bazaar would be cycling races for ladies. An entrance-fee would be charged to the competitors, and also admission fees to the field or ground in which the races were held; all of which, after a certain amount for prizes had been deducted, would be added to the funds of the bazaar. 2. Art Competition.—A Competition Committee should be appointed, who would offer prizes for such things as hand-painted menu cards, paintings, drawings, or pen-and-ink sketches. 3. Cooking Competition. — Competition Committee should offer prizes for the best cakes, sweets, &c., all made by the competitors themselves, and which could be sold for the benefit of the refreshment stall. 4. Photographic Competition.—Competition Committee should offer prizes for photography (amateur), to be sold for the benefit of the bazaar. 5. Doll Competition. — Competition Committee should offer prizes for the best dressed dolls, all of which would be sold for the benefit of the bazaar. 6. Needlework Competition. — Competition Committee should offer prizes for fancy and plain needlework, to be sold for the benefit of the bazaar. —Austell.

The stall-holders at the bazaar to impersonate the Butterflies' Ball and the Grasshoppers' Feast; wearing costumes to represent in some measure the most gorgeous insects—fireflies, butterflies, glow-worms, dragon-flies, &c. The stalls to be banked with ferns and flowers. A reprint of the book was lately published by Griffith, Farran, & Co. for a few pence.—Alastor.

I do not know if any one has tried competitions. Being so much to the front just now, I should say they would be a great success, and bring in plenty of grist to the mill and plenty of impromptu talent out. To give an example, I would announce a competition for the best pencil sketch of a wheelwoman, a racehorse, or a caricature of some well-known public character. Time allowed, ten minutes; entrance-fee, 1s. each; number limited to ten persons. Cards and pencils provided, and when handed in the judge to award a card prettily decorated, with name and date filled in, and the prize sketch to be sold by auction. Of course, every lady should first press into her especial service those who excel in such-like art. A flower competition might be started on similar lines of the floral stall, the making of miniature butterfly and shower bouquets; and at the cigar stall one for the quickest and neatest way of rolling up cigarettes. A very cute hand at bazaars told me only very lately that the real success of a bazaar is achieved before it is opened, and I quite believe it. So many persons load their stalls with shoals of plain and fancy work, begging contributions for wares—and that is all. The real secret is to enlist as many persons as possible to come and buy, and amuse the public, and each person invited should, "snowball-like," hand on the invitations to other friends. Any novelty, even at a high price, sells well, and half the stall's contents should be actually sold before displayed. People will canvass the length and breadth of the land to get a child into an orphan asylum, or an adult into the Incurable Hospital—were half the zeal bestowed on a bazaar, and the public given real worth for their money instead of much trash, the trade would be a far better one. Were I starting one I would sentence all my best friends to "three months' hard labour."—Arten.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire as a going concern, and to extend the business of Manufacturers of Cycles and Cycle Components now carried on by Messrs. Hearl and Tonks, at the Imperial Works, in Upper Trinity-street, Bordesley, Birmingham, and at the Victoria and Albert Works, Sampson-road North, Birmingham, and also at their wholesale depot, Cromford-court, Market-street, Manchester.

The business was commenced in 1891 on a very small scale, without capital, but the mechanical skill, energy and perseverance of the partners have been such that the output in 1896 has been the large average number of 523 completed machines per week, apart from an extensive weekly output of Cycle Components. The business has grown continuously until it has attained its present position as the largest Cycle Manufacturing Business in Birmingham, employing about 500 hands, and it is believed to be only in its infancy, altogether apart from the additional work which may be reasonably expected from the development of Motor Cycles, Cars, and other Vehicles.

The two Factories have been working overtime for months past, and if they could have turned out 1,000 machines per week the demand was such that they could have been readily sold. As a fact during this period large orders have had to be declined by Messrs. Hearl & Tonks. This in itself is a proof of the quality of the articles made by them. Messrs. Hearl & Tonks have received offers from regular customers for their entire output at the existing rate for the next two years, but in view of the growing demand for Cycles it has been deemed wise to only accept contracts for such a quantity as will keep the works fully employed for a considerable period.

Another feature which distinguishes Messrs. Hearl & Tonks favourably is that they not only build Cycles, but are also extensive manufacturers of Cycle Components. It is intended to enlarge this branch of the business to a considerable extent, and the profit to accrue from this source may be inferred from the market prices of the Shares on the 17th instant in the following Companies:—

	Paid Up.	Present Quotation.
Birmingham Small Arms...	£5	£22 10 0
Perry & Co., Limited	£10	£35 0 0
Cycle Components Co.	£1	£4 4 6

In addition to the Home markets Messrs. Hearl and Tonks have a considerable export trade. The orders from the Continent and the British Colonies are large and constantly increasing.

The books and accounts of the business have been examined on behalf of the Directors by Messrs. Abbot, Deeley, Hill & Co., Chartered Accountants of London and Birmingham, who certify as follows:

Sun Chambers,
9, Bennett's Hill, Birmingham.

To the Directors of
HEARL AND TONKS CYCLE AND COMPONENTS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, LIMITED.

GENTLEMEN,

As requested we have attended at the office of Messrs. Hearl and Tonks, Cycle and Components Manufacturers, of Sampson-road North, and Upper Trinity-street, Birmingham, and have compiled a Profit and Loss Account for the eight months ended 31st May, 1896.

During the earlier part of this period, the trading was practically at a standstill owing to arrangements for extending the business and fitting up the new premises at Sampson Road North.

In our Profit and Loss Account, we have charged the Stock at the 30th September, 1895, as then ascertained by the firm and have adopted the firm's guaranteed estimate of Eighteen thousand pounds as the value of the Stock at the 31st May, 1896.

During the past six months a great many tools have been made for the new factory in Sampson-road North and paid for through the wages. We have credited the Profit and Loss Account with £3,000 for this outlay.

We certify that the profits for the eight months ended May 31st, 1896, ascertained on the basis detailed above, after provision has been made for bad debts, but without charging interest on capital, depreciation (if any), and partners' salaries for management, amount to £13,798 12s. 4d., and the profits for the last five months of this period, during which time the works were in full swing, calculated on the basis of the turnover, amount to £13,410.

Yours faithfully,
June 15th, 1896. (Signed) ABBOTT, DEELEY, HILL, & CO.

It will be seen from the above certificate that the profits on the above basis for the five months ending May 31st last amounted to £13,410. Assuming the output to be the same for the remaining months of the year, the profits would be at the rate of £32,184 per annum.

With the additional working capital provided for in this issue the Directors are advised by Messrs. Hearl and Tonks that the capacity of the business can be made equal to an output of 1,000 machines per week, and the profits proportionately increased.

The machinery and plant have been valued and reported upon by Messrs. Frank Smith and Wilson, of Birmingham, Valuers, in conjunction with Mr. Charles Fletcher Wilkes, of Birmingham, Machinist, who report as follows:

37, Cannon-street, Birmingham,
23rd May, 1896.

To the Directors of
HEARL AND TONKS CYCLE AND COMPONENTS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, LIMITED.

GENTLEMEN,

In accordance with instructions received we have attended at the Cycle Manufactories of Messrs. Hearl & Tonks, situate in Sampson-road, North, and Upper Trinity-street, Birmingham, and (in conjunction with Mr. Charles Fletcher Wilkes, Machinist, of Aston-street) we have inspected and valued the Fixed Machinery, Gas Engines, Loose Tools, Fixtures, Fittings and Effects, at the Victoria and Albert Works, Sampson-road North, and the Imperial Works, Upper Trinity-street.

The Plant is modern and in excellent order, and has been laid down throughout with a view to economise labour. We have seldom inspected works where greater care and judgment have been shewn in the general arrangement and fixing of machinery.

In our opinion the same is worth, for the purposes of the trade as a going concern, the sum of Twenty-three Thousand Six Hundred and Fifty-two Pounds Fifteen Shillings and Sixpence (£23,652. 15s. 6d.).

Yours faithfully,

The Imperial Works, Upper Trinity-street, are held for an unexpired period of 93 years at a ground rent of £25 per annum, and have been valued by Messrs. Frank Smith and Wilson, at the sum of £2,950. The Victoria and Albert Works, Sampson-road North, are held for a term of seven years from 29th September, 1890, at a rental of £250 per annum, with an option to the Lessees to renew for 7, 14, or 21 years at the same rent.

The business, including the properties, machinery, plant, tools, stock-in-trade, patents and contracts will be taken over by the Company as a going concern as from 6th June, 1896, and the Company will have the benefit of all profits from that date. Messrs. Hearl and Tonks will discharge all the liabilities of the business up to that date.

It is proposed to continue the business upon the lines which have proved so successful in the past. Mr. Edward Henry Hearl, Mr. William Walter Tonks, and Mr. Henry James Tonks, the present partners, have agreed to act as Managing Directors and Managers for a period of seven years, and they have a large holding in the Capital of the Company. They have contracted to give the whole of their time to the practical management and development of the business.

The machinery is of the most modern type, and has been specially selected by Messrs. Hearl & Tonks with a view to the saving of labour in every department, and economy of production. The Company will therefore, be in a position to carry on the business under the most advantageous conditions.

The working Capital of the Company will be as follows:—

Stock-in-Trade (guaranteed by Messrs. Hearl & Tonks) ...	£18,000
Present issue of 25,000 Shares for Working Capital	25,000
(of which the Subscription of £10,000 is guaranteed by the Vendor)	£43,000

The working Capital of the Company as above shown should, in the opinion of the Directors, be adequate for all purposes, including extensions of several departments which are now in contemplation. Plans for the new buildings for the purposes of these extensions have already been prepared.

The purchase price of the property has been fixed by the Vendor at £135,000, payable as to £80,000 in cash and £30,000 in fully paid Shares of the Company, and as to the balance either in cash or fully paid Shares, or partly in cash and partly in fully paid Shares, as provided by the contract for sale to the Company.

The Promoter has agreed to pay all the expenses of the promotion and formation of the Company up to and inclusive of the first general allotment of shares, including the legal expenses and fees of and incidental to the registration of the Company.

The following Contracts have been entered into, viz.:—(1) An Agreement dated 9th June, 1896, made between Edward Henry Hearl, William Walter Tonks, and Henry James Tonks (trading as Hearl & Tonks), of the one part, and Peter Coulson Bunn, of the other part. (2) An Agreement dated 9th June, 1896, made between Edward Henry Hearl, William Walter Tonks, and Henry James Tonks, of the one part, and Peter Coulson Bunn as Trustee for the Company, of the other part. (3) An Agreement dated 23rd June, 1896, between Peter Coulson Bunn of the one part, and the Company of the other part, being an agreement for resale at a profit to the Company by the said Peter Coulson Bunn, who is the Vendor to, and the promoter of, the Company.

These Agreements, and the Reports of the Accountants and Valuers, and prints of the Memorandum and Articles of Association can be inspected at the offices of the Company's London Solicitors.

The business will be taken over by the Company as a going concern, subject to all existing contracts. These are necessary for the working of the concern, and include numerous contracts with employés, customers, manufacturers and others, and consequently are not specified. There are also other contracts and arrangements entered into by the Vendor and promoter with reference to the formation of the Company and of obtaining its capital, to none of which the Company is a party. Applicants for Shares shall be deemed to have notice of these existence of these contracts, agreements, and arrangements, and to have agreed with the Company as Trustee for the Directors and others to waive their right, if any, to particulars thereof, or to any further compliance with Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, than is contained in this Prospectus.

Applications for Shares must be made on the Form accompanying the Prospectus and forwarded to the Bankers of the Company with the amount payable on application. In every case where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned to the applicant in full, and where the number of Shares allotted is less than the number applied for the surplus will be credited in reduction of the subsequent instalments. Any balance will be returned to the applicant.

Stock Exchange quotations in London and Provincial Centres will be applied for in due course.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, Brokers, Auditors, and Secretary of the Company and at the Company's offices in London and Birmingham.

June 23rd, 1896.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to reside at Windsor Castle until the day before the Royal wedding, when she will come up to Buckingham Palace for two nights, after which her Majesty is to proceed to Osborne. The Court will return to Balmoral for the autumn on Wednesday, August 26, and in September the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and their children are to be her Majesty's guests there, as well as Princess Louis of Battenberg and the Countess Erbach-Schönberg. Princess Beatrice and her children will accompany the Queen from Osborne to Balmoral.

I see that with solemn state those on whom it has been decided to bestow the new Victorian Order have received its insignia. The Order has apparently been instituted in order to reward the upper domesticity of the Court. The wonder is that any one should feel a glow of pride in being permitted to wear it. It reminds me of what I once read about an Eastern Court—if I remember rightly it was in Persia. A Shah confided the government of the country to certain of the Palace officials, on which they published a decree that there should be no capons in Persia, in order to safeguard their own dignity.

The Royal Victorian Order is, I hear, to be lavishly distributed in all its five classes on the occasion of the Royal wedding.

Some of the papers are printing a great deal of most idiotic rubbish about the future pecuniary position of Princess Maud and Prince Charles of Denmark. There is not the slightest foundation for the statement of an evening journal that "the Queen will see her granddaughter is provided for in a separate estate," and a weekly contemporary is equally incorrect in announcing that Prince Charles and Princess Maud "will have to rely upon the allowance made to them by the Prince of Wales." The Prince and Princess of Wales have, of course, stipulated for adequate settlements, which are now being drawn up, and, considering the vast wealth which the Crown Prince of Denmark possesses, it is impossible that there could be any serious pecuniary hitch.

As a matter of fact, Princess Maud is to have £4,000 a year out of the allowance which was granted by Parliament in 1889 for the family of the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Crown Princess of Denmark is to make an allowance of either £10,000 or £12,000 a year to her second son. The couple are to occupy a suite of apartments in the palace of the King of the Hellenes at Copenhagen, and one of the Royal villas near Bernstorff Castle will be their country residence in Denmark, while in England they will live at Appleton, a small place near Sandringham, which belongs to the Prince of Wales. It is well known that the Crown Princess does not like the marriage, as she had quite made up her mind that Prince Charles would become the husband of her relative the Queen of the Netherlands, who is, of course, the greatest match in Europe.

Only a very limited number of invitations will be issued for the Royal wedding and the subsequent déjeuner at Buckingham Palace. It is, however, the intention of the Prince and Princess of Wales to hold a reception in the grounds of Marlborough House on the afternoon of the wedding, from three o'clock till six. After the wedding breakfasts (there will be one for the Royals and a separate one for the suites and guests) there will be an assembly of all the people who have been at the marriage, in the Picture Gallery, after which the Queen is to take leave of the bride and bridegroom, who will drive in procession, accompanied by the Royal Family and the Royal guests, to Marlborough House by way of Constitution Hill, Piccadilly, and St. James's-street. The bride and bridegroom are to go to Sandringham for their honeymoon, and they will travel by special train from St. Pancras (or possibly from Liverpool-street) to Wolferton.

The papers persist in stating that several hymns and anthems are to be sung at the wedding by the combined choirs of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and of the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace. As a matter of fact there will only be one short anthem, which is to be sung before the Primate delivers the final address. Dr.

Creser, organist of the Chapel Royal, is to preside at the organ, and the choir of that chapel will sing the anthem. A march will be played on the organ as each of the three processions enters the chapel (one of Handel's, one of Beethoven's, and one of Wagner's), while Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" is to be played after the service. The Queen's State Trumpeters are to be stationed outside the chapel, and they will announce the arrival of each procession by a flourish of trumpets.

Lady Downe, who has been the Lady-in-Waiting on the Queen during the last fortnight, will be succeeded by Lady Lytton, after whom comes Lady Antrim, and then either the Dowager Lady Southampton or the Dowager Duchess of Athole, each staying at the Court for a fortnight.

Though Ireland, like other islands, is liable to be swept by great winds, it has suffered far less by them than from "airs." Royalty has shown the way in treating the country with contemptuous neglect. The present Prime Minister has followed suit by expending on it his best oratorical sarcasms, including the historical "Hottentot" sneer. Under the circumstances, it is hardly strange that the exaggerated outpourings of the prophets on Lord Cadogan's appointment to the Irish Viceroyalty have proved very far from prophetic. Lord Cadogan has been Viceroy for nearly a year; during all that time expectation has been standing on tiptoe, awaiting the predicted social brilliancy of the Viceregal Court. It has never come, and even the prophets are beginning to grow somewhat uneasy at the long delay. Meanwhile, Lord Cadogan has publicly let it be known that he is in favour of the abolition of the Irish Viceroyalty. It is more curious, under these conditions, that he should have accepted the place, than that he should have failed to fill it brilliantly.

The Horse Show in the Royal Dublin Society's premises at Ball's Bridge will be held as usual this year at the end of August. Already rooms are being engaged in the hotels in Dublin and the neighbourhood for this great horse festival. Lord and Lady Cadogan are expected to be at the Viceregal Lodge at the time, and to entertain a large party of visitors. Next year it is under consideration to change the date of the Horse Show, so that there may be no rivalry of attraction between the partridges and the horses.

The present Lord Clonmell, in coming into the title, came into a very barren honour. His predecessor left the family residence in Kildare and the property away from his successor and his family. Society in Kildare is much exercised on the subject, and there is a rumour of the will being disputed.

As a sequel to recent meritorious attempts to direct the attention of tourists to the many charms of scenery and greenery existing in "the distressful country," comes the rumour that the astute owner of that portion of the coast embellished by the well-known Giant's Causeway is busily at work upon a ring fence which will effectually place this natural phenomenon on the footing of a paying exhibition. This policy is scarcely likely to increase the confidence of hesitating visitors who, at the present time, can with difficulty be persuaded to put aside prejudice and undertake that most delightful experience — an investigation of the many points of interest to be found in Ireland. Some local effort should be made to stop this contemplated "novelty" — at least if the Emerald Isle is ever to take its place as a show country with Scotland and Wales.

Lady Stair, who died last week, at Lochinch Castle, Wigtownshire, after a long illness, was the eldest daughter of the Duc de Coigny, while her mother was a Scotch heiress, Miss Hamilton, of Bargany, from whom she inherited a large estate in Ayrshire, which passes to her second son, Major North Dalrymple. She rarely appeared in public, but her charities were most munificent, and she was a kind and watchful friend to the tenants and cottars on the various family estates. Lady Stair was keenly interested in many ecclesiastical and educational projects, and her efforts were not confined to the Church of Scotland (of which she was a member), but she also generously assisted the schemes of the Free and the "U.P." Churches.

It was said of the late Lord Fitzhardinge, by Mr. George Payne, that "no man ever paid more for his friends, nor paid with a better grace." Lord Fitzhardinge will be much missed in many circles of society, and to Gloucestershire his death is an irreparable loss. He lived for about two-thirds of every year at Berkeley Castle, and personally supervised the management of his large estates, and he was a most generous and considerate landlord. He earned the reputation of being one of the most successful Shorthorn breeders in England, and was unsurpassed as a judge of all kinds of stock. Lord Fitzhardinge was a great favourite with his county neighbours, and particularly among his own tenantry, and it was a source of just pride to him that there never was a vacant farm on the Berkeley estates. He was an ardent Liberal until the Home Rule split, and he had since become an equally zealous Unionist. He was very hospitable and a keen sportsman, being a fine shot, an expert angler, a splendid rider, and an excellent billiard player. He was a man of most genial and kindly nature, and many were his private acts of beneficence. He was said to be the smallest man who ever belonged to the Blues, and at that period of his life he was familiarly known as "The Giant."

The first function in connection with the visit of the Honourable Artillery Company of Massachusetts to England is to take place to-day (July 8), at the Hotel Cecil, when the members will be entertained at luncheon by Mrs. Collings, wife of the United States' Consul-General. The Boston men are making the Hotel Cecil their headquarters during their stay in London.

A gentleman who lays claim to an extensive knowledge of Bournemouth, and especially of the local trade, writes a long letter disputing the proposition that the ratepayers at large will benefit from a permanent improvement such as a marine drive. His contention comes to this, that the sole benefit from such improvements must be reaped by the ground landlords. I trust that my views on the land question are fairly sound and up to date, but this contention I must absolutely decline to accept. That ground landlords benefit by all permanent local improvements is obvious. But as regards land which they have already leased they cannot reap a halfpenny of benefit until the leases fall in, and as regards their other land, the lessees will take it with full knowledge of all the circumstances, and must judge for themselves whether it is or is not worth the price asked. If it is worth that price, the lessee has nothing to complain of.

To say that all those who occupy land already leased —i.e., the whole of the present ratepayers—can derive no benefit from public improvements, seems to me too childish for serious argument. Everything which attracts to a town visitors with money in their pockets, and causes them to spend that money in the town, must be for the general benefit of the town. The evidence of this is to be seen at every pleasure resort in the world. The owners of the soil will of course benefit with the rest, but the way to meet that is to make them pay their fair share of the cost of all improvements. In the case of Bournemouth, the principal ground-landlord offered a substantial contribution towards the particular improvement in question. It may not have been enough—on that point I offer no opinion. But if it was not enough, that merely means that the Corporation should try and make a better bargain with the landlord for its constituents.

I have been asked to give publicity to the following statement in the hope that it may meet the eye of the proprietor of a well-known hotel in New York whose conduct is complained of. Last January a gentleman, who had just come from the West Indies, put up at the hotel referred to—for the moment I refrain from mentioning its name, but I believe it is one of the leading establishments in New York—and having occasion to go away for three weeks, deposited some of his luggage in the hotel baggage-room to be kept in safe custody. On his return he found that a Gladstone bag and a suit case had been cut open and everything of value abstracted. The proprietor of the hotel asked for an estimate of the value of the things lost, and promised to "fix" the matter next morning before the gentleman sailed for England. Next morning the proprietor could not be seen, but the hotel clerk gave an assurance that the amount claimed—sixty dollars—would be remitted to England by the next mail. It was not remitted, however, and so far all applications to the proprietor have been ignored. In these circumstances it has been suggested that I should try to persuade him to keep his word. My own view is that he must in some way have accidentally overlooked the matter, and that on his memory being thus jogged he will at once forward the sixty dollars. It may interest him to know that, if he does so, the money is to be given to the Truth Toy Fund, so that he will be not only discharging a just debt, but at the same time benefiting a charitable work.

A correspondent sends me the following verses :—

AT LORD'S—FRIDAY, JULY 3.

Wrong? Was it wrong? Well, surely,
To judge from the angry shout
Of the crowd at Lord's assembled;
Of that there can be no doubt.
It was not, it is true, illegal
By the "written" laws of the game;
But a kind of instinct tells us
It was shabby, all the same.

'Twas a tricky piece of dodging
That was tried last week and failed,
And 'twas well that, despite such tactics,
'Twas the better side prevailed.
It was well that the captain stooping
In a way so indiscreet,
Should find that his stoop for triumph
Had ended in sore defeat!

In vain do the beaten Cantabs
Whom the public censure smites,
Protest that their captain's action
Was "well within his rights."
In vain is such special pleading
In face of the feeling strong
That a right which is strained unduly
Full often becomes a wrong!

Of the laws in the text-books written,
There rarely has yet been one
That included every item
Which should, or should not, be done;
However diffuse the words are,
There must be inherent flaws,
Unless our honour can furnish
An interpretation clause.

Judging by what I hear, the misunderstanding that has arisen over the sale of La Flêche is in a fair way to be adjusted, Sir Tatton Sykes having decided to keep all the animals bought in his name at the Hirsch sale.

It would seem that a play has been performed at the Aston Theatre called "The Raid in the Transvaal," at which the troops of the Chartered Company were represented by soldiers of the 6th Dragoon Guards from the Birmingham barracks, and under the charge of a sergeant. This seems to me monstrous, and it is all the more absurd, as the troops of the Chartered Company—apart from the illegality of their raid—in no way distinguished themselves. What should we say if the battle of Krugersdorp were put on the stage at Pretoria, with the police of that town playing the part of the Boers and shooting down Dr. Jameson's "heroes"? Would this be likely to promote good feeling between the British and the Dutch races in South Africa?

Let there be a memorial to the late Sir Augustus Harris by all means. I cordially agree with the very widespread wish that has been already expressed to mark in some way the public appreciation of a very enterprising manager and remarkable man. But against the proposal that a statue should be erected in his honour I emphatically protest; and I do so the more strongly, as I feel sure that the late impresario himself would have been the first to object to such a form of memorial. Sir Augustus was nothing if not practical, and he would have laughed to scorn this notion of a statue. A bust, or, better still, a tablet, in the vestibule of Covent Garden would not perhaps be out of place, but the main portion of any fund that may be raised should certainly be devoted to some project of assured and lasting utility.

By the way, I notice that, according to a statement published in one of the evening papers, "the value of the countless floral emblems which lay strewn about the graveside of Sir Augustus Harris amounted to over £2,500." This only shows to what lengths a silly and pretentious custom can be carried. We are always congratulating ourselves on the disestablishment of Mr. Mould and his myrmidons, but it is but a nominal reform which delivers us from the tyranny of the undertaker only to hand us over into the clutches of the fashionable florist. Two thousand five hundred pounds absolutely wasted! How much better would it have been to add this sum to the Harris Memorial Fund that is about to be raised.

Mrs. Stowe had not visited Europe since 1859, and very little had been heard of her since her attack upon Lord Byron in 1869, which irreparably damaged her reputation. Mrs. Stowe made one of the greatest of literary successes with "Uncle Tom's Cabin," but she profited but little by the achievement. Her visit to England in 1853 was a blaze of triumph, but she offended many of her European friends by the revelations and comments in her "Sunny Memories of Foreign Lands" (published in 1854), which Macaulay abused as "a mighty foolish and impertinent book." It is, however, a work which can still be looked through with considerable entertainment. Mrs. Stowe paid a second visit to England in 1856, but the trip was a disappointment, and most of her quondam friends in London utterly ignored her existence, regarding her as obsolete and played out. Her melancholy and mortifying experiences during the visit caused Macaulay to indite some weighty remarks in his diary upon the subject of "lions":—

There is nothing more pitiable than an ex-lion or lioness. London, I have often thought, is like the sorceress in the "Arabian Nights," who, by some mysterious law, can love the same object only forty days. During forty days she is all fondness. As soon as they are over, she not only discards the poor favourite, but turns him into some wretched shape—a mangy dog or spavined horse. How many hundreds of victims have undergone this fate (in London) since I was born! The strongest instances, I think, have been Betty, who was called the Young Roscius, Edward Irving, and Mrs. Beecher Stowe."

The other day I was reading a novel that a friend of mine sent me from America, entitled "A Faithful Traitor," which seemed to me a capital story and very well told, and I was surprised to find that it had been originally published in our Family Herald, because I had so often seen deprecatory allusions to the stories in that organ of novel readers. "A Faithful Traitor" is far superior to many of the puffed three-volume novels, and certainly, if the stories in the Family Herald are up to its standard of excellence, the subscribers of that journal have no reason to complain.

I was asked recently by an assistant-master in a large public school to raise my voice against the system of reserving headmasterships exclusively for the clergy. Remembering the heated controversy which raged over this question on the last vacancy in the headmastership of Rugby, I can only refer to it in fear and trembling; but my friend the assistant-master makes one point which really seems worth the attention of the public. The strongest argument, so far as I know, in favour of clerical headmasters is that the British parent feels that his son's religious and moral training is safer in the hands of a clergyman than in those of a layman, however learned. But the assistant-master is of opinion—and he is a man who ought to know something about it—that clerical schoolmasters are absolutely harmful to the cause of religion. He asserts—probably few will feel disposed to contradict him—that the services in school chapels are "a miserable farce, as a rule," and that this is due to their being conducted by schoolmasters, and being consequently regarded by the boys as part of the educational curriculum. I would commend this view to the consideration of all those who are in such a state of morbid excitement about the importance of religious education in Board Schools and elementary schools in general. In connection with the elementary education question, it has always been my view that religion taught by schoolmasters is worth very little; and I am, therefore, glad to find the same thing asserted by a master in a middle-class school.

Of this, at any rate, I am certain, that if the exclusion of laymen from headmasterships is of no service to religion, it must be prejudicial to the secular side of education. The gentleman to whom I have just been referring tells me that out of the assistant masters of public schools at present nine-tenths are laymen, and that among these nine-tenths are to be found all the most distinguished scholars and teachers. It is grossly unfair to these men that they should be excluded from the highest prizes of the profession; and such a state of things must tend in the long run to drive out of the profession the men who are best qualified for it. One of the ablest schoolmasters in England at the present time—a man who has raised his school to the very foremost place among public schools from the educational point of view—is a layman. Of the educational advantages which have accrued thereby to the boys in the school there cannot be the slightest question; and it will take a great deal to convince me that the boys who have been educated under this gentleman are less devout Christians than those who have come during the same period from any of the other public schools presided over by clergymen of the Church of England. Clergymen are bywords for their failure in the religious and moral training of their own children, and I really do not see on what ground they should be expected to be more successful with those of other people.

For the Latin Prize Essay at Harrow this year the following is the subject propounded:—

Puerorum educatio Græcorum et Romanorum cum nostris comparata.

I learned Latin at Eton, and it may be that for this reason I do not appreciate the niceties of the language as written at Harrow. But why "cum nostris"? Is the essayist expected to compare ancient education with "our boys," which is much like comparing chalk with cheese; or if not that, why is education singular in reference to the Greeks and Romans, two distinct nations, and plural in reference to ourselves? A friend whose classics are a little fresher than mine tells me that the "cum" is redundant and ugly, that "puerorum educatio" does not mean the education imparted to boys, and that "educatio apud Græcos et Romanos" is the mode of expressing himself which an ancient Roman would have adopted. But this may perhaps be due to the defective "educatio Græcorum et Romanorum cum nostris comparata." "Apud Græcos et Romanos," as the prize essayist will no doubt point out, there was no "publicarum scholarum educatio.' It may be, therefore, that the ancient Roman did not learn Latin with the same elegance and correctness as a Harrow boy.

The Guardian is of opinion that the time has arrived when some definite arrangement should be made as to the source from which "Suffragan" Bishops are to derive their stipends. I quite agree in this view, but differ most decisively from the Guardian's idea that valuable City livings may very properly be held by the Bishop of London's "Suffragan." The fact is that if a Bishop is assisted by a "Suffragan" he should most assuredly be required to pay his "episcopal curate" out of his own stipend. If Bishop Temple requires two "Suffragans" he ought to pay them £2,500 a year, which would leave him a stipend of £7,700 a year, which is surely a sufficient income for any descendant of the Apostles. The Archbishops and Bishops ought all to be compelled to pay their "Suffragans" out of their own stipends, instead of quartering them upon capitular and parochial funds in the manner which is now so scandalously common among these rapacious dignitaries. I am informed that the Bishops of Winchester and Rochester are honourably distinguished among their brethren in that they pay their "Suffragans" out of their own pockets, but in every other case the assistant prelate has been jobbed into either a good living or a residentiary stall.

It is announced that the Archbishop of York has licensed the Rev. W. D. D. Maclagan to the perpetual curacy of Grosmont, of which his Grace is patron. Crockford gives the gross value of the living as £335, net £285, and the population of the parish is 776. Mr. W. D. D. Maclagan was ordained priest in 1889, and he came into the parish as a curate less than three years ago. There are plenty of deserving curates who have been labouring in the same diocese for almost as many years as this young gentleman has lived, and who are left to toil and moil for the Church on beggarly pittances, while he drops in for this fairly comfortable piece of preferment. But what of that? Is not Mr. W. D. D. Maclagan a son of the Archbishop? And does not his Grace make it one of his first duties in the dispensation of his official patronage (as he has shown before) to provide for those of his own family and household?

The case of Canon Scott Holland is peculiar. A letter which was incidentally produced from him to a young man was read at the South Western Police-court, and the magistrate observed that it was one which no gentleman would write to another. The Canon, on being interviewed, says that he repudiates the allegations contained in the statement made in the Police-court, and that there is not a semblance of a particle of truth in the insinuations. The Canon appears to me to be an aggrieved person, for he has had no opportunity to meet the allegations of the magistrate, except by a bare denial to a Press interviewer. Under these circumstances, he ought, in common fairness, to be allowed to submit the whole matter to some tribunal, either ecclesiastical or civil, in whose decision the public would have confidence.

The Westminster Gazette has, I see, commented on the prolonged absence of the Bishop of Mashonaland from his diocese, and the Bishop has written a letter to that paper explaining his position. I am glad of this, as I was about to comment on the same subject myself. It seems that the prelate's return is purely a question of cash. £15,000 is required, and £8,000 has been obtained. £7,000 more and back goes the Bishop. "You kindly compare me to a general," says his lordship. "Would a general be sent out with insufficient arms and ammunition?" Certainly not, but it is highly edifying to have it on the authority of a Missionary Bishop that the arms and ammunition required for the conversion of the heathen are primarily pounds, shillings, and pence. "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses," was a prominent instruction in the original plan of campaign; and I strongly think that this plan might still be adopted with good effect. However, it is some comfort to know that the Bishop does not rely on worse arms and ammunition than £. s. d. When his Lordship first went to introduce Christianity to the Matabele, it was, if I remember rightly, behind the rifles and Maxims of the Chartered Company.

A correspondent sends me the following verses apropos of the discussion now going on in some of the papers as to the influence exerted on Church-going by Sunday cycling:—

A NEW VIEW OF SUNDAY CYCLING.

They're complaining from the pulpit, with an energy undue,
That the craze for Sunday cycling now is emptying the pew;
But we think these hasty parsons are mistaken when they throw
On the wheel so much in fashion all the burden of their woe.

As it seems to us, the cycle, on which now so many perch,
Does not lure away each Sunday those who ride it from the Church,
It is from the club it takes them, from the pot-house, from the street,
As it bears them off rejoicing to the country fresh and sweet.

White-faced office boys it carries to the woods where throstles sing,
To the fields, where whirring coveys from the waving wheat-stalks spring;
Care-worn city clerks it hurries off to Nature's fairest scenes—
Flower-decked meads and trellised hop-grounds; babbling brooks and village-greens.

Round-backed artisans it bears, too, from the small and stuffy room,
To the lanes where trailing roses all the summer air perfume;
And it makes them grow forgetful of the stifling, man-made town,
As they climb the breezy roadway o'er the swelling, God-made down.

Can a change like this be vicious? Can the exercise do harm,
That thus adds to lives so weary once a week a healthful charm?
No, it seems by far more likely that the cyclists thus may learn
From the fairest sights of Nature to that Nature's God to turn.

Moved to thought and to reflection by the wonders that they see,
They may long in grateful homage once again to bend the knee;
And the parsons may discover that their pews are filled anew,
Not because their flocks don't cycle, but, forsooth, because they do!

Archdeacon Watkins, of Durham, is to be the special preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral next Sunday at the evening service, while on the 19th the pulpit will be occupied by the Dean of Windsor, and on the 26th by the Dean of Gloucester, for whom, I hear, the new See of Bristol is intended.

The "appointed" preachers at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, during the remainder of this season are:—July 12, Rev. A. L. B. Peile, Master of St. Katherine's Hospital; July 19, Prebendary Harry Jones; July 26, Rev. Clement Smith, Rector of Whippingham; August 2, the Sub-Dean; August 9, Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies, Vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale; August 16, Bishop Selwyn. The chapel will be closed after August 16 until the beginning of November.

There is a touting financial establishment in Finsbury-pavement, styled the "Carlton Bank, Limited," which trades specially on the necessities of poor parsons and other needy professional men. This concern has just issued broadcast among the clergy a particularly impudent circular to the following effect:—

We have decided to increase our working capital, and knowing as we do the influential position that clergymen naturally occupy, we venture to suggest that, as opportunity offers from time to time, you might privately recommend our £1 Six per Cent. First Preference shares to investors whom you may personally know who desire a fixed, substantial, and secure quarterly income from a non-speculative, old-established Company.

These £1 shares are now being issued by the Bank at 22s. each, and we are prepared to place to your credit an honorarium of 5 per cent. on all investors who purchase shares from us through your private introduction, so that on an investment of £1,000 you would be entitled to £50, and proportionately on higher or lower sums; or, if you prefer it, we would instead subscribe that proportion to your schools or church fund, or any charity you nominate.

I am glad to find that the clergy generally warmly resent this attempt to employ them as touts on commission, and several dozen of these circulars have been sent by the recipients to TRUTH office. As I know that the money-lending fraternity are fond of circulating testimonials from their clients, the "Carlton Bank, Limited," may like to have for future use a few of the opinions of the clergy on this circular. I append, therefore, a few extracts taken from letters that I have received on the subject. The Bank have my full permission to reproduce them:—

A touting circular which for unblushing effrontery may be fairly said to "take the cake." . . . . Combines impudence, meanness, and an appeal to the lowest feelings in an unprecedented degree. . . . . (A Suburban Curate).

I cannot think it anything else than an attempt to gull a peculiarly gullible and unsuspecting class of people. . . . . (The Vicar of a Welsh town).

It appears to be an artful and rascally attempt to obtain money by playing upon the "greenness" or impecuniosity of the clergy (A Curate in the Midlands).

There isn't an honest man in England who wouldn't spurn with contempt a clergyman who prostituted his profession by constituting himself the tout suggested by the circular. . . . (A Yorkshire Rector).

A particularly glaring example of the impudence of money lenders. . . . . (A Parson in Hampshire).

I hope you will deal with this (as I think) insolent attempt to enlist the clergy as touts for a commercial speculation on commission at 5 per cent. . . . . (A City Clergyman), &c., &c.

By the way, it will be seen on reference to the concluding paragraph of my friend Moses Moss's letter this week, that one Clarkson, of Walsall, is offering a block of 1,000 of these same Six per Cent. First Preference shares at par. Mr. Moses Moss does not recommend the investment even at that price. Yet the Carlton Bank itself is endeavouring to retail the same shares at 22s., and offering a commission of 5 per cent. to any clergyman who will assist in placing them at that figure.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Holiday Fund for Poor and Sickly London Children:—Mouse, £10; Gerald, 10s.; H. H. B., £5; W., £2; Ellen Mott, £1. I have also had forwarded to me from "A Reader" a five-dollar note for Father Wehinger's Leper Mission.

The Duke of Cambridge told the Patriotic Fund Committee the other day that it was necessary for the Fund to have a large capital, or they would not be able to grant annuities with any confidence. H.R.H. here overlooks entirely the alternative arrangement which has been at every opportunity pressed upon the consideration of the Commissioners in these columns—namely, that they should expend their funds in buying annuities through sound insurance companies. Not only could annuities be granted with perfect confidence in this manner, but the beneficiaries would get larger annuities than the Fund can give them out of the mere interest on its investments. They would, in fact, get the benefit of the capital as well as the interest, which is what the donors intend when they give the money.

When a person gives a pound to a relief fund, or any similar object, it is not his intention that the trustees of the fund shall invest the pound in Consols at 113, and allow interest on it at the rate of about sixpence per annum for life to some one in distress, and then transfer the sixpence to some one else, which is the way the Patriotic Commissioners dispose of the money. He intends that the whole of his pound shall be applied to the specified object. If the present arrangement is to hold, benefactors should be allowed to give their sixpences a year and keep their pounds for their own use. I trust that the House of Commons Committee will keep these considerations in view when dealing with this important question.

The receipts at the Royal Military Tournament amounted to upwards of £20,000, and it is hoped that about £4,000 will remain over for distribution among the military charities. Lord Methuen and his Committee deserve hearty congratulations on their success, considering the storm of invectives with which the new arrangements were saluted. This year's Tournament has been very properly managed on purely military lines, and the Committee has succeeded in earning general confidence.

Lord Roberts has been granted £6,000 for the purposes of the military manœuvres in Ireland, and he has drawn up an excellent and thoroughly practical programme of operations.

Some time ago I called attention to the hard case of Colonel Stockwell, who was scandalously treated in being passed over and retired, in spite of his exceptionally strong claim and his weighty recommendations. The whole affair was a disgraceful piece of jobbery, and it excited such general disapproval that the case has been reconsidered, with the result that Colonel Stockwell has been granted the honorary rank of Major-General. This is a truly miserable compensation for the discreditable favouritism of which he has been the victim, and which has blighted a highly creditable career.

Mr. Brodrick's answer to Mr. Morton's question on the order forbidding N.C.O.s of the 2nd Berkshire Regiment to subscribe to funds for the defence of their comrades before courts-martial is a curious piece of official straw-splitting. It comes to this—that though every man may give money individually to help a comrade in his defence, yet no two or more men may contribute collectively for the same purpose, and (apparently) no one man, except the prisoner, may receive the subscription of another man. It is astonishing, even after all that one knows about the War Office, that grown men should condescend to such puerilities. If A, B, C, D . . . Z may each give money for a common purpose, what is the use of attempting to hamper the collection and application of their money by the farce of forbidding an organised collection? The authorities would do better to employ their subtle intellects in looking into the state of things in the 2nd Berks which has caused this question to be raised.

I have to thank several Army readers for enlightenment on the question of the obligations of Medical Officers in regard to attending the wives and families of their brother officers. The matter, it seems, is provided for in the Medical Service Regulations which entitle officers to free medical attendance for their wives, their children under fourteen years of age, and their servants, within the number allowed by the Regulations, always provided that the officer resides within a mile of the hospital or other point fixed by the G.O.C. for the purpose. As mentioned in last week's TRUTH, a case has recently occurred in which a Medical Officer sent in a bill for attendance on an officer's family. Unless the case came within the exceptions above-mentioned, this seems a very shabby and unprofessional proceeding, and I should hope that the officer to whom the bill was sent, stood on his rights and refused to pay.

From a cutting sent to me, I gather that the Broad Arrow has been bringing its acute intellect to bear on this question. The result is all that might be expected:—

> But under no conditions whatever would any Medical Officer be justified in charging for his services to the family of another officer, under circumstances entitling the latter to medical attendance.

That is to say, where an officer is entitled to medical attendance free, a Medical Officer is not entitled to charge for attending him. What a sublime discovery! And yet there are many people in the Services who question the wisdom and capacity of writers in Service journals.

In connection with the latest ugly incident in the Royal Engineers—the suicide of Quartermaster-Sergeant "Knight" (really a discharged soldier from the German Army)—Mr. J. C. Linay was last week sentenced at Maidstone Quarter Sessions to twelve months' hard labour. Linay was a contractor to the R.E. Committee at Chatham, and the offence of which he was convicted was that of obtaining, in collusion with "Knight," public money to the amount of £311. 8s. 6d. by means of forged receipts. The case is another proof of the irregularities and frauds that are freely practised in connection with the execution of public works by the Royal Engineers, and I strongly suggest that the time has come when the War Office ought to undertake a searching inquiry into this subject. In support of that view, let it be remembered that the public has been robbed to the extent of some £40,000, or more, over the reconstruction of the Royal Barracks, Dublin, and that up to the present time all that the War Office has done is to exert itself vigorously to hush up the scandal and screen the parties officially responsible.

The men of the M.S.C. at the Station Hospital, Gosport, have a substantial grievance in the fact that they and their families every time they go to the town have to cross a bridge on which there is a toll of one halfpenny for soldiers not on duty. There are only one or two small shops close to the hospital, and the children of the married men have to be sent into the town to school. One man tells me that he has had to disburse as much as 2s. in a week for tolls at the bridge—a very serious tax upon a soldier's pay. I understand that all the staff and employees at the Naval Hospital close at hand are allowed to use the bridge free of charge, and the War Office ought to make some similar arrangement for the benefit of their men at the Station Hospital.

Will the official who edits the monthly Army List kindly explain why he gives in his table of contents a reference to the "Provisional Cavalry Depot"—an establishment which ceased to exist several years ago? In the June Army List the table of contents refers the reader for this Depot to page 106a, but of course nothing of the sort appears there. I would suggest to the Editor that while taking out this entry he should insert in his table of contents a reference to the Discharge Depot, which is not given there at present. The Discharge Depot appears in the June List on page 9; but how anybody looking for it in the book is to find it, the Editor alone knows. I agree with an Army man who characterises the Army List in its present shape as "a most vexatious work for reference." It would probably be simplified if the Regular and Auxiliary Forces were separated into two distinct sections of the volume.

One of the perennial grievances on which Tommy Atkins is always complaining to me is the periodical appropriation of his library or recreation room for the entertainment of N.C.Os. The last growl on the subject comes from Cairo, where the men are constantly being turned out of the garrison library in order that it may be used for dances by the corporals of the different corps quartered in the town. I should not wish to say anything in deprecation of corporals' dances, or any other reasonable recreation, and it is obvious that there must be a little give and take in matters of this kind; but it strikes me that at present it is nearly all take and very little give. If the privates occasionally had the exclusive use of the regimental rooms for a dance on their own account, they would probably be less disposed to grudge the use of it to others for the same purpose.

After reading my recent remarks on education certificates for soldiers, one or two N.C.O.s have sent me samples of examination-papers set for first-class certificates. With one exception, I cannot say that these papers represent an unreasonably high standard; but, looking at the questions all round, I am fully confirmed in my opinion, that there can be no good ground for submitting grown men to a school-work examination of this kind. No employer in civil life would dream of putting a man in his service through an examination of such a nature, and making it a condition precedent to raising the man's salary; and why such a thing should be done in the Army I fail to see.

The one exception to which I have just referred is an exercise in deciphering a piece of half illegible and much corrected MS. When or where this exercise was set I do not know, but I am certain that it would puzzle the most experienced compositor to make a fair copy of the MS. in half-an-hour, the time allowed; and I question whether any one but the ingenious individual who amused himself by compiling the thing would transcribe it correctly at the first shot. There can be no sort of sense in setting a soldier down to crack such a hard nut as this.

The claims of the Civil Assistants in the Ordnance Survey to superannuation have been frequently ventilated in these columns, but I have just heard, for the first time, of a similar grievance among soldiers and sailors in the same Service. These men, it appears, are discharged at the age of sixty without any superannuation allowance, after, it may be, fifteen or twenty years' service in the Department. One of them asks how the present Government can acquiesce in this state of things, after the talk on the subject of old age pensions which Tory speakers and writers have so freely indulged in. He also suggests that as Lord Salisbury is allowed to be Prime Minister at the age of 67, an old soldier or sailor might, at least, be allowed to stick to his work till the same age, if the State is not disposed to pension him off. The Prime Minister will be the first to appreciate the force of this reasoning.

Surely the time has come when Volunteers who join the regular Army ought to be released from the tax which they at present incur by so doing. A man who recently transferred from the 2nd South Middlesex to a Line battalion has just been called upon to pay to his old corps £3. 10s. for non-efficiency, which is really a most monstrous and iniquitous charge—monstrous, because a man is presumably of more use to the State in the Army than as a Volunteer, and ought not to have to pay for making the change; iniquitous, because no man at the time he transfers himself to the regular Army has the faintest conception of the fine he is incurring by so doing. If the consequences were known, no Volunteer would ever join the Army, but the sergeant-instructors, or recruiting sergeants, who induce them to transfer, take good care, of course, not to mention this little inconvenience when they are enumerating the "advantages of the Army." The War Office ought to attend to this matter without further delay, and it is astonishing that they have not done so long since.

On the question of the transfer to the Reserve of men before the completion of their colour-service, a Commanding Officer tells me that he has in his time transferred a great many men qualified under the Regulation, and has never refused a request for transfer where a man could show a bonâ-fide offer of good employment. He tells me that the matter is entirely in the hands of the Commanding Officer, provided that the man really has an offer of employment; but I am under the impression that a soldier serving in an extended engagement, who recently complained on the subject, had been several times recommended by his Commanding Officer, and still did not get his transfer. However, it is satisfactory to know that the paragraph in the Regulations is not a dead letter; and now that attention has been called to the subject I hope that more Commanding Officers may be led to follow the example of the one referred to above. I may remark, however, that there is nothing in the Regulation which makes the transfer of such men dependent on their being able to produce promises of civil employment.

Here is a further instalment of my Pillory of Military Grievances. I place first the treatment of the 2nd Wiltshire Regiment, because the decision in this case seems a most iniquitous one, and I am in a position to say that it is strongly resented by all the officers, N.C.O.s, and men of the battalion, with the exception of the C.O. and one or two married officers, who have comfortable quarters in the neighbourhood. It is to be feared that the decision has merely been arrived at to suit the convenience of these officers, which is the more wrong inasmuch as the present C.O. did not serve with the battalion abroad. The battalion ought never to have gone to the Portsdown Forts at all, and it is to be hoped that, after the true state of the case has been pointed out, they will be saved from another winter there, more especially as their conduct has been excellent in all respects. The other little matters noted below speak for themselves:—

2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment.—It has just been announced that this battalion is to spend another year in the Portsdown Forts, where it was quartered (in defiance of protests from all quarters) on its return from Burma last November. The rule has hitherto been that the last regiment to arrive at the station goes to these forts, and it was in compliance with this rule that the Wiltshires were quartered there. The forts are a most undesirable station for many reasons, apart from the danger of putting troops to winter there on their return from the tropics. For instance: (1), the splitting up of a battalion into five detachments involves a great deal of extra work, and is prejudicial to esprit de corps; (2), the nearest recreation ground is at Portsmouth, distant a 6d. railway fare; (3), many of the married men are quartered in one fort and have to do duty in another—a most trying arrangement, especially in winter; (4), the frequent parades on Southsea Common involve on each occasion a march of ten miles for the men from the nearest fort, and nineteen miles from the furthest.

4th Battalion South Wales Borderers.—This battalion finished its training on Saturday, June 27. On Sunday, 28th, by order of the quartermaster, the staff, including the colour-sergeants, were set to work in the stores, cleaning equipments, &c., and were engaged on this job from 9 a.m. till 5 p.m. No reason of any kind is known why this work should be performed on Sunday.

Military Police, Aldershot.—Up to the end of June the money due to the wives of the married men of this corps, for washing done during May, had not been paid. By rights the money should be paid up monthly, but delays are stated to be frequent, though the present instance seems to be unprecedented.

Depot Lancaster Regiment.—A custom is in force in this Depot that every sergeant bringing in a recruit who is passed as fit for the Army shall pay to the orderly-room-sergeant the sum of sixpence for making out the attestation paper. There is no provision in the Regulations for such a payment, and it does not appear to be the rule in other Depots. Any sergeant ought to be capable of filling up the attestation paper for himself; and as long as he is, there is clearly no reason why he should be made to pay another man for doing it.

I have it on the best possible authority that a custom has lately grown up in many battalions of keeping unofficial defaulter sheets, the entries in which are not transferred to the company defaulter sheet. This practice is, of course, quite irregular and unauthorised, and ought to be stopped. By means of it a great deal of "crime," including such offences as drunkenness and insubordination, is hushed up, and a battalion is enabled to cut a figure at inspections and in official returns to which it has no right whatever. Apparently some inkling of its prevalence has reached the General Commanding the Cork District, for an order forbidding the use of such sheets has lately been issued in that District. It would be well for other G.O.C.s to make inquiries on the subject in their respective commands.

There is another method in use, I am told, for concealing the delinquencies of a regiment from the eye of the higher authorities. This is simply the exclusion from the annual returns of all crimes committed by "casuals," or men discharged, transferred to the Reserve, or sent to foreign battalions. All such practices are obviously no better than frauds on the War Office, and, through the War Office, on the public, as the party ultimately concerned with the state of the Army.

One of my military correspondents in India is much exercised respecting the practice of the civil police saluting the Army, and vice versâ. From what he says, I gather that it is a very general thing for the police to salute the military, and that officers thereby get to look for salutes as a matter of right, and make complaints when they are disappointed, thereby getting the police into trouble. It would be better all round that the practice should be stopped. There is quite enough silly vanity and self-assertion over saluting in the Army itself, without drawing civilians into the question.

CARPET BEATING SEASON.—The Queen says: "A good place to send carpets to is the Compressed Air Carpet and Tapestry Cleaning Company, Brook Green, Hammersmith, W. Dust blown out. No beaters used." To prevent deception carpets cleaned by this process bear the Trade Mark on the back.

Some interesting hints on the question of rifle stealing on the Indian frontier have reached me from an officer commanding one of the British battalions in that region. He tells me that a rifle will fetch as much Rs. 300 or Rs. 400 over the border, a price which must obviously throw a very serious temptation in the way of any soldier whose honesty is not absolutely invincible. It appears that the Commander-in-Chief's orders are peremptory that every man who loses his rifle shall pay the price of it, and shall also be tried by a District Court-martial, unless the General Officer Commanding the District thinks fit to let him off. I fully see the necessity of doing something to counteract the temptation which the weaker vessels of a regiment are under to make away with their rifles. At the same time it is quite clear, from what one hears of the diabolical ingenuity of the native thieves, that merely punishing the soldiers will not put a stop to the thefts. Moreover, it would also appear that, if a rifle can be disposed of for the price above-mentioned, there is still room for a dishonest man to get rid of his weapon, pay Rs. 100 for a new one, and still pocket a handsome profit on the transaction. It seems to me difficult to believe that it is impossible to invent a better system than this for checking either theft by natives or fraudulent traffic by British soldiers, if the military authorities seriously gave their attention to the matter.

I am told that at a recent sergeants' mess meeting in an infantry battalion in India, it came out in the course of conversation that the sergeant-major, in giving an order for furniture to the amount of about Rs. 200 to a native dealer, had instructed that man that he was in future to give discounts to him (the sergeant-major) and to no one else connected with the mess. This seems a very good instance of the irregularities in mess management to which I devoted a good deal of space a year or two ago. Clearly any discount given ought to be given to the mess generally, and to be credited to the treasurer in the official account. There are many complaints that the mess in question is "bossed" by the sergeant-major, and that this functionary always uses his influence with the C.O. to ensure that any proposal carried by the mess, of which he does not himself approve, shall be vetoed. It seems the height of unwisdom for a Commanding Officer to allow himself to be influenced to this extent, but I fear there are many who do so.

Apropos of a recent reference in TRUTH to the practice of giving credit to soldiers at regimental shops in India, an N.C.O. tells me that he has frequently known unthrifty men in his battalion to have spent as much as Rs. 15 of their month's money before they received it, partly at the coffee-shop and partly at the tailor's. The regimental tailor's shop in question is run by a native, and one of the objectionable practices connected with it is that the unthrifty raise cash by buying shirts and other articles of clothing there on credit, and then selling them at a reduced figure for ready money to their more prudent comrades. This sort of thing seems to be done wherever soldiers are able to get clothing on credit, and it would be a good thing for all parties if some general rule were passed to prevent credit being obtained at all.

It is very discreditable to the Indian Government that no steps have yet been taken to redress the injustice caused by the distinction between domiciled and non-domiciled Anglo-Indians in the Exchange Compensation Regulations. The last case of which I have heard is that of a man in the Ordnance Department, the son of Irish parents, who himself has resided both in England and Ireland, and has left his eldest son to be brought up in the latter country. This man has to remit money regularly for the support and education of his child. He is refused Exchange Compensation because Government has decided that he has acquired an Indian domicile; while there are many of his comrades in the Indian Military Service, who have joined on precisely the same terms, and remit money home under precisely similar circumstances, but are yet in receipt of the allowance. The Indian Government long ago promised to redress all these anomalies, and there can be no excuse for its not having been done months ago.

In reference to a paragraph in TRUTH of May 28 concerning the doings of Mr. C. A. Radice, British Political Agent in Tipperah, I have had a somewhat singular communication from Signor A. M. Radice, of Naples, the father of the Political Agent in question. Signor Radice puts to me a number of interrogatories which, but for the allowance which must be made for a foreigner, I should be disposed to call impertinent. He demands, among other things, the name of the correspondent who supplied me with information about his son's doings, which information, he suggests, was prompted by personal malice; and, after presuming that I have verified my statement, he leaves me to the judgment of my own conscience if I have not done so. The statement about Mr. C. A. Radice has appeared in print in India, and came to me from two sources, one of them being a gentleman whose integrity and veracity I am bound to take for granted. Signor Radice himself admits that he has no knowledge whatever of the facts, and, while he questions the accuracy of my statement, he tells me that he has written to his son for information. It seems to me that when he has received his son's answer it will be quite time enough for him to dispute my accuracy, and to make imputations against the bona fides of my informants.

Complaints have been rife in the Chief Constructor's Department at Chatham Dockyard about certain recent promotions to the list of draughtsmen. The staff of this Department are divided into draughtsmen and shipwrights, and for some years past, as vacancies have occurred for draughtsmen, it has been the rule to promote the next man on the list. But a recent vacancy was filled by the appointment of a man who stood forty-seventh on the list, and who has jumped over the heads of about sixteen men, who, according to the usual rule, had a prior claim. Since this was done, a further vacancy has occurred, and another man has been recommended who has no visible claim, but who, it is significant to note, is a relative of the man previously favoured; and it is therefore reasonable to suppose that some form of family influence or favouritism is at work. It is not even clear why men in this Department should be promoted purely in order of seniority. An Admiralty Order, dating from some years ago, provides that a triennial examination for draughtsmen shall be held, but I understand that no examination under this order has taken place since 1884, and that the men promoted since that date have merely ranked as acting, not established, draughtsmen. The organisation of this office would seem to need a little attention from headquarters.

An announcement recently appeared in the Press that a relief crew for H.M.S. Hawke was being sent out to the Mediterranean in the Nelson, and the crew of the Hawke, which has completed her three years' commission, were making every preparation for returning home. On the arrival of the Nelson, however, it appeared, to the disgust and disappointment of the Hawke's men, that she had only about 20 men for their ship, and they were sent out as supernumeraries. The announcement that the Hawke's crew were to be relieved appeared in the Times among other papers, and I hear that on seeing it the men telegraphed to the Times office to make sure that it was correct, and received a reply in the affirmative. The Times presumably had its information from an official source, so that there must have been inexcusable blundering somewhere.

One hour and thirty-five minutes for the despatch of a telegram from Croydon to Woking turns out to be only an ordinary performance on the part of the G.P.O. A gentleman living within ten minutes of Bray Post Office, having missed his train at Paddington, wired from that point at 6.55 that he should be home at 8.15. He duly reached home at that time, and the telegram from Paddington arrived about ten minutes later, having been just one hour and a half on the journey. He states that it is always necessary to allow that time for a telegram from London to Bray. This is a disgraceful state of things, and the best remedy for it, and for all such irregularities, would be for Parliament to give the public the right to the return of their money when a telegram takes more than a certain time in transmission.

Certainly they manage some matters better in France. A Paris publisher has just been prosecuted by the fathers of two boys to whom he had sent catalogues of obscene literature; and although the magistrate before whom the case came in the first instance declined to convict, the superior court to which the prosecutors appealed was of a different opinion, and the purveyor of filth has been fined 5 francs for each circular. The only matter for regret is that a few hundreds of the recipients of the circulars did not join in the prosecution. Unless I am mistaken, the rascal thus brought to justice is the same one who has for months past (by the kind assistance of the Duke of Norfolk and his staff at St. Martin's-le-Grand) been flooding the United Kingdom, and even the Colonies, with his filth. Why have we no law as effective as the French for dealing with such vermin?

I have to thank innumerable correspondents who have again written to me from all parts of London on the great gas-meter question. At present, however, I do not think that any good purpose is to be gained by devoting any further space to the subject in Truth. I have given my readers my advice. It is to take every opportunity of assisting the Progressive policy in municipal affairs, which aims at transferring all these great monopolies into the hands of the public through their elected representatives on the County Council or elsewhere. I may mention, however, that I seem to have been below the mark in estimating the average increase of gas bills for the quarter ending March, 1896, at 25 per cent. above that for the corresponding quarter in 1895. Several readers of Truth give me figures going far beyond this estimate, and in one instance, where the householder is confident that he burned less gas than in the previous March quarter, the increase is as much as 60 per cent.

There is, however, one hint which I should like to give those gas consumers who have wisely decided to introduce the electric light into their houses. It is on no account to give up their gas-fittings and meters, but to keep the two side by side, and use from quarter to quarter whichever light they find the cheaper—giving both companies notice of their intention. A correspondent tells me that he has tried this plan with good results. Although the electric light has many advantages, it is a mistake, I think, to cut your gas off altogether. You then only transfer yourself from the hands of one monopolist into those of another, and it may be out of the frying-pan into the fire. A little wholesome competition is what is needed in these matters.

It cannot be too generally made public that the District Messengers' Service and News Company have recently placed at each of their numerous establishments, Merryweather's hand fire-pumps, and arrangements have been made by which one of these portable engines can be "rung up" in case of small fires, pending the arrival of the fire brigade on the scene. It is easily conceivable that in private houses outbreaks of fire may frequently occur, which can be overcome with little difficulty, if only taken in time, and the provision now made by the Company in question is intended to meet emergencies of this description, and therefore ought not to be lost sight of.

For some time past I have refrained from any allusion to the affairs of Holloway Sanatorium, in the belief that the Lunacy Commissioners would in due course take some decisive action upon the report presented by the two Commissioners who investigated the TRUTH allegations. In the absence of any such action, the time seems to be arriving for again opening up this matter, and I trust that before the present Session closes, some opportunity will be found of challenging the conduct of the Lunacy Commissioners in Parliament. As has been fully pointed out in these columns, the so-called inquiry into the TRUTH allegations was an utterly one-sided and incomplete proceeding; but so far as it went, the report was in all material particulars a complete vindication of the accuracy of my statements, and contained a most scathing censure of Dr. Philipps, the Superintendent of the Sanatorium. It is impossible that the matter can be allowed to rest at this point.

Some time back the Town Council of Folkestone commissioned Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, & Co. to investigate and report upon the system of keeping the Corporation accounts; and so far back as April 24, Messrs. Turquand presented a report, in which the bookkeeping came in for some very severe criticism. Among other things, it was shown that in the collection of the coal dues the Borough Treasurer kept no proper ledger accounts with the various debtors to the Corporation; that the monthly return of dues had never been properly checked with the cash-book, and was inaccurate in one month to the extent of over £600; and that in the case of one coal consignee who had failed, and who was shown in the return in March last to be a debtor to the amount of £40. 17s. 10d., the arrears actually due amounted to £1,119. 16s. 6d. There is a very natural anxiety on the part of the inhabitants and ratepayers of Folkestone to know what steps it is proposed to take in view of this report. The report was adopted at a meeting of the Town Council on May 6, and to all appearance nothing has been done in the matter since that date. I would suggest to the Town Council that they should enlighten the public as to their intentions in this respect.

Here is a story of sweating in a public institution which beats anything I have heard of in that line. An advertisement was lately published from the City of Dublin Hospital for a messenger and general assistant who could read and write. Applicants were directed to the hall-porter for further particulars, and from this functionary it was learned that "amongst the duties were scrubbing, sweeping, dusting, carrying coals, emptying slops—in fact, they wanted a man to do anything and everything he was told; to be at the beck and call of the staff from the secretary down to the porter himself; work to commence at seven o'clock in the morning and not to end till past ten o'clock at night, Sunday and holiday, week in week out." The pay offered for all this was the sum of six shillings per week, being at the rate of about three-farthings per hour! It is possible that this starvation wage was fixed by some underling without the sanction of the Governors of the Hospital, but now that their attention has been drawn to the matter, I hope they will see that a decent living wage is given.

Sir Peter Edlin has agreed with his adversaries on the County Council, and is to retire on a pension. As he could only have got this by something in the nature of a deal, he has thereby shown his prudence. I hear that sundry very desirable changes are to be introduced in connection with the vacancy, one of them being that the paid deputies will no longer be appointed, as heretofore, by the chairman—a most pernicious arrangement, which under Sir Peter Edlin has led to more scandals than the public has any idea of.

Now that Sir Peter, who has always been a sore subject, is out of the way, I would respectfully suggest to our County Councillors, notwithstanding their well-known solicitude for keeping down our rates, that they should reconsider the question of salary in a more liberal spirit than has hitherto been manifested. No doubt eminent lawyers (and eminent journalists too, if you like) are paid extravagant salaries. But as long as things are as they are, if you want a good article you must pay the market price of such an article. This applies to the wages of labour equally with the price of commodities. If you are a business man with an important establishment to run, you cannot afford to bother your head with recondite theories about what a fair wage ought to be. You want a good man, and you must bid for him as much as other employers are prepared to pay him. If you don't, you won't get your good man.

The duties of the Chairman of the County of London Sessions are quite as onerous as those of the Recorder and Common Serjeant of the City of London, and far more complicated. They include not only a far larger number of criminal trials than those at the Old Bailey (where her Majesty's Judges also assist), but appeals from all the Metropolitan Magistrates and from all the Licensing Justices, as well as the ultimate jurisdiction over the rating assessments for the whole Metropolitan area. It is not an exaggeration to say that there is not a more important judicial post in the kingdom. It ought by rights to be far more highly paid than the comparatively useless office of Lord Chancellor, and it is absurd to expect that a thoroughly competent lawyer can be found to fill it at the salary of a Police Magistrate or a County Court Judge.

PRINCE OF WALES HOTEL, HARROGATE.—Finest position, facing the Stray. Redecorated and sumptuously refurnished. New management. Excellent stabling. Electric light throughout.

I do not know who Sir John Godfrey, Bart., may be, but, judging from an incident that occurred at the Quarter Sessions at Tralee the other day, he must be a great man in those parts. Sir John was the plaintiff in an ejectment case. In the ordinary course it would not have been heard until the equity business had been disposed of, but on being told that the Baronet "wanted to get away," Judge Shaw said he would take the case at once, though it was then his Honour's usual time for adjourning for lunch. Mr. Broderick, the defendant's solicitor, explained that he had not been told the case would be taken out of its proper order, and that he was not ready to go on with it at a moment's notice, but that he would be after the adjournment. "Well," said the Judge, "I must oblige Sir John Godfrey, and the case must go on now." Mr. Broderick thereupon returned his instructions, and the defendant was not legally represented in the action, which was decided in favour of Sir John Godfrey. The point that excites my wonder is this. If Judge Shaw is so exceedingly deferential in altering the arrangements of the court to suit the convenience of a baronet, regardless of the inconvenience or injustice to any humbler mortal, what would he not be willing to do to oblige a full-blown peer?

The evidence given at an inquest at Durham Gaol the other day again recalls attention to the cruel and indiscriminate way in which people are committed to prison for debt from the Darlington County Court and the other Courts of the same circuit. The deceased, a man named James Walker, had been committed by Judge Turner in default of paying £4. 0s. 5d. on a judgment summons He was ill when he arrived at the prison, and, after passing a very bad night in the prison hospital, he died on the following morning from acute pneumonia. "One would have thought," said the coroner, "that something like a wise and humane discretion would have been exercised in the execution of the warrant." One would think so; but in this district no discretion whatever is shown either in granting or executing such warrants. Only a few weeks since a painful account appeared in a Darlington paper of another case in which an old man of seventy, actually a pauper in receipt of outdoor relief, had been dragged from a sick bed to prison for default in paying 5s. 8d. on a judgment summons. Of this amount 11d. was the unpaid balance of an original debt of 2s. 11d., and 4s. 9d. for costs. Judge Turner's courts have long been notorious for scandals of this kind, and some time back representations on the subject were made to the Lord Chancellor by the Hartlepool Guardians, who found that many families were being pauperised through unjustifiable commitments for debt. Is it not time the Lord Chancellor took some action in this matter?

Some further information has been sent to me concerning the footpath dispute at Tendring, and the recent trial at Essex Assizes, on which I commented last week. I do not think it is necessary to go into the matter at length, but in fairness to the Rector, it should be explained, first, that the prosecution was instituted by the District Council, and secondly that an effort was made to settle the matter in a friendly way, but that the defendant preferred to fight it out. That so paltry a question should have had to be fought out on a criminal indictment, shows a most unfortunate state of feeling between the parties.

Two peculiarly monstrous sentences for the heinous crime of wandering abroad and lodging in the open air were passed by the County Justices at Lancaster the other day. It appears that since the Corporation carried out some improvement schemes in the borough there has been a great deficiency of common lodging house accommodation—"so much so," says the report, "that the police have allowed men to use the police-station as a shelter," while the Chief Constable has frequently brought the difficulty to the notice of the Watch Committee and the magistrates. In the case referred to, John Wells and John Johnson, two men who had been working in the district, were found sleeping out; they explained that they did so because they were unable to obtain lodgings. Notwithstanding this explanation, and the further fact that both prisoners were first offenders, the county justices sent them to gaol, Johnson for a week and Wells for fourteen days. I have never myself been able to see any reason or justice in punishing people at all for sleeping out; and I should have imagined that the most remorseless Draco would have been ready to overlook this so-called offence in such circumstances as the foregoing. It is now too late to appeal to the Home Secretary for the release of these poor fellows; but now that I have brought the facts under his notice, I have little doubt that he will administer a sharp reprimand to the wooden-heads who committed them to gaol.

With reference to a case at Northwich County Petty Sessions which was mentioned in my Legal Pillory of the 25th ult., the Clerk to the Justices informs me that the defendant Taylor was not "fined" £2, but ordered to pay that amount as compensation to the complainant, together with the costs. This course was adopted solely in the interest of the complainant, a poor deaf and dumb man, and in the circumstances I do not think exception can be taken to it. It is true Taylor was thereby enabled to get off very cheaply for a brutal assault; but, on the other hand, £2 was the maximum amount the Justices could award the complainant, and if they had subjected the defendant to a fine or imprisonment, his unfortunate victim would have received no compensation whatever for his injuries. It is noteworthy, by the way, that if Taylor had been charged with breaking windows or other damage, the Bench would have been able not only to order him to pay full compensation, without limiting the amount to £2, but to impose a heavy fine in addition—another beautiful instance of the importance that the law attaches to the protection of property and the protection of the person respectively.

If magistrates will persist in following the irrational and discredited system of cumulative sentences for old offenders, they might at least display some amount of discrimination and some regard for consistency in applying it. How far the amateur dispensers of justice at Quarter Sessions are from doing this is effectively shown by the cases from the West Riding Court which head my Legal Pillory this week. A young woman is adjudged an incorrigible rogue and vagabond because she has been sleeping out, after eleven previous convictions for the same so-called offence. A man is found guilty of a robbery and of a dastardly assault on a girl, and he has a really black record of previous convictions, one of his sentences having been a term of twenty years' penal servitude. Yet the sapient magistrates visit both these prisoners—the woman who does nothing worse than lead a vagrant life, and the ruffian who commits robberies and makes himself a terror of the neighbourhood—with precisely the same punishment of nine months' imprisonment. Could there be a more grotesque exhibition of judicial incompetence? In connection with the sentence of six weeks' hard labour for an assault on a child at Dorset Quarter Sessions, it is interesting to note that the Chairman had previously, in his charge to the grand jury, deplored the frequency of outrages of this kind. How, in the name of common sense, can he expect them to diminish so long as offenders are treated with such ridiculous lenity? Other instances of the sort of justice meted out at Quarter Sessions are also given in the list below, together with the usual cases from the minor Courts:—

West Riding Quarter Sessions, Sheffield. Before Mr. Samuel Roberts and other magistrates. John Frederick Ward, convicted of stealing several articles from a lodging-house at Doncaster, and also of assaulting Myra Wood, a girl of 17, at Bradfield. A second charge of theft was not proceeded with. There were a number of previous convictions against Ward, including a sentence of twenty years' penal servitude, and he was described as "the terror of the neighbourhood," children and young girls being very much frightened by him. Three months for the theft and six months for the assault.

Surrey Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. George Cave and other magistrates. Walter Mitchell, indicted for maliciously wounding Job Stevens with a knife. He pleaded guilty to a common assault. One month.

North Riding Quarter Sessions, Northallerton. David Noonan, convicted of maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm upon his wife. The woman was thrown down, kicked and jumped upon, receiving such serious injuries that she had to be sent to the infirmary, where she was an inmate for a fortnight. Three months.

West Riding Quarter Sessions, Sheffield. Before the same magistrates. Mary Ann Dyson, aged 27, charged with being an incorrigible rogue and vagabond and sleeping out in an outhouse. She had been eleven times convicted of sleeping out, and it was explained that "the magistrates in the court below could only send her to gaol for three months, and they thought this altogether insufficient." Nine months.

Surrey Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. George Cave and other magistrates. Daniel Daley pleaded guilty to attempting to commit suicide. Three months.

North Riding Quarter Sessions, Northallerton. Michael Carrol, convicted of stealing watches, value £3. 15s. Previous convictions were recorded against him. Seven years' penal servitude.

Dorset Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. H. B. Middleton and other magistrates. Geo. Holt pleaded guilty to indecently assaulting a little girl, aged eight years. Six weeks.

Grantham Borough Police-court. Before Dr. J. W. Jeans, Dr. R. Wilson, and Mr. W. Scoffield. Charles Walker, milk-dealer, charged with cruelty to a mare. Defendant thrashed the animal on the head, neck, and ribs with a thick stick until she fell to the ground, and he then yoked another horse to the mare's neck to pull her up. The mare was pulled along the ground two or three yards and eventually was got up, when defendant struck her again until she fell on the other side. Fined 10s. and 15s. costs.

Halifax Borough Police-court. Joe Arnold, a well-known football player, convicted of assaulting William Henry Whitaker. Defendant ran at the complainant in the street, knocked him down, and kicked him several times. Fined 10s. and costs.

Witham Police-court. Before Messrs. J. H. Salter, J. Moss, and A. Motion. James Gaskin, a pea-picker, charged with cruelty to a child, aged 3 years. After striking the child defendant threw her up in the air, and as she fell to the ground he kicked her. One month.

Stoke Police-court. Before Messrs. G. Leason and W. Kirkham. James Potter, convicted of assaulting Mary Jane Mullock. Without any provocation he struck her a violent blow on the eye, "knocking her senseless." Fined 20s. and costs.

Dysart Police-court. Before Bailie Harrow. Robert Cameron pleaded guilty to committing an unprovoked assault upon an old man. The assault was of a most brutal character. Fined £3.

Barnsley West Riding Police-court. Before Messrs. H. Pigott, W. Batty, A. B. Southall, and F. Dransfield. Alfred Hallam, convicted of assaulting William Layt and William Brooke. Defendant attacked Layt as he was going home, knocking him down, and kicking him violently and repeating the assault after he got up. Brooke was still more brutally attacked, being so badly hurt that two men had to assist him home. Fined 5s. and costs for the first and 10s. for the second assault.

Lancaster Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. John Fell and other magistrates. Thos. Barrett, charged with stealing a shirt. Twelve months.

Grantham Borough Police-court. Before the same magistrates. John Smith pleaded guilty to stealing a pair of spectacles value 1s. 6d. Twenty-one days.

Spittlegate (Grantham) Petty Sessions. Before Lieut.-Col. C. J. B. Parker. Samuel Parsons, Alfred Hill, Elijah Huskinson, and Edward Smith, charged with sleeping out on the road side. Seven days each.

Hythe Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. Du Boulay, A. S. Jones, B. Horton, W. Wightwick, W. E. Thompson, and Commander A. B. Mansell. Harry Waller and Frank Waller, charged with trespassing in search of game. Fined, with costs, £2. 13s. each.

Castle Eden Police-court. Frank Caffery and Thomas Caffery, charged with poaching. Six weeks each, and a further month in default of finding sureties.

Yeovil Police-court. Before Messrs. Cox and Curtis. Joseph Hooper, charged with sleeping out. Two months.

Winchester County Police-court. Before Mr. W. B. Simonds and other justices. William Rogers and James Winkworth, charged with trespassing in search of conies. Twenty-eight days each in default of paying £2. 6s. each.

Fareham Police-court. Before Messrs. J. C. Garnier, W. H. Deane, C. E. Radclyffe, Colonel Hunt, and Captain R. Turner-Irton. John Smith, charged with sleeping out on the road-side. Fourteen days.

York City Quarter Sessions. Before the Recorder, Mr. E. P. Price. Mary Brown, charwoman, charged with stealing a slipper, the property of a clergyman, from the vestry of a church. There were a number of previous convictions. Three years' penal servitude and three years' police supervision.

I scarcely think the Ramsgate Bench took a just or reasonable course in the sad case in which Mrs. Ruby Spalding was charged with cruelty to her son. No doubt the evidence for the prosecution showed that the child had been ill-treated; but, on the other hand, the evidence for the defence went a long way to prove that the defendant was not at times altogether responsible for her actions. A medical man stated that he had for four years attended her for blood poisoning and hysteria, and the magistrates themselves saw during the progress of the case an example of the uncontrollable violence of the hysterical fits to which she is subject. To those who know the nature of the malady it will seem that this lady was more to be pitied than punished; and it was explained on behalf of the prosecution that the only object of the N.S.P.C.C. was to ensure the protection of the child. If, in spite of these considerations, the Bench had still deemed it necessary that some punishment should be inflicted, it was obviously their duty to send the defendant to prison. What they did, however, was to impose a fine of £25, with the result that the penalty fell not upon the offender but upon her husband. Surely, if it was not thought a wise or humane proceeding to commit the defendant to gaol, the ends of justice would have been served quite as effectively by binding her over, as by subjecting this doubly unfortunate gentleman to a heavy pecuniary penalty. Their worships expressed "great sympathy" with him in his troubles, but this was a decidedly novel way of giving expression to their feelings.

The Pembroke Magistrates seem to be among those who, as Sam Weller put it, commit themselves far more frequently than they commit anybody else. During the police-superintendent's cross-examination of a witness in a case of drunkenness the other day the Mayor peremptorily stopped a question with the remark, "I won't have that."—The clerk having expressed the opinion that the question was in perfect order, the Mayor apologised for his "mistake." Then Mr. Tombs, J.P., requested that Dr. Reynolds, J.P., should also apologise for having applauded the remark which the Mayor had withdrawn. Dr. Reynolds declared that he would not do anything of the kind. "You are the one," he observed to Mr. Tombs, "that reports your brother Magistrates to the Lord Chancellor. You can report me again if you wish it. A fine fist you made of it last time." Mr. Tombs retorted that if he had cause he would report him; and so the altercation proceeded, to the great edification of the spectators. Seeing how the Great Unpaid of Pembroke comport themselves on the Bench, I am surprised the inhabitants do not report the lot of them to the Lord Chancellor and demand the appointment of a Stipendiary.

"John James Jones is at it again," writes a correspondent, in forwarding a batch of the London Samaritan Society's circulars. John James Jones, so far as my experience goes, is always at it. I have never heard of his having stopped, and I doubt that he will do so as long as people can be found who are so foolish as to give support to a charity with such a history as the London Samaritan Society.

Here is a new version of an old trick of turf sharpers. The circular appears to have been produced by some multiple or copying process, and doubtless the dodge is to get a number of men by this means to back different horses, leaving the tipster to win in any event. Does any one at Newmarket know anything of Mr. Fred Wilson, of 4, Heath Villas?

4, Heath Villas, Rous-road, Newmarket.

DEAR SIR,—I know a good winner. The horse will start 4 or 5 to 1. Will you back it? and what amount will you put on for me? Please wire me, and pay 6d. reply, and say the amount you will invest for me; the race is for to-morrow. When you telegraph, kindly put your name and address on wire. I am living in the stable where this horse is trained, therefore you can rely on the information.—Yours very truly,

FRED WILSON.

At last the impudent swindle which has so long been run by a man named Mason, calling himself "Mason & Co.," of Oswestry, has received the attention of the police. My readers may remember that Mason publishes an advertisement offering "home employment" to those who send him one shilling; and that all they get in return is a trumpery little book of domestic recipes, with an invitation to become his "agents" in working the fraud by publishing a similar advertisement on their own account. With the loss of their shillings the vast majority of Mason's victims let the matter drop; but a military pensioner named M'Donnell at Dublin lately carried out Mason's instructions for the further propagation of the swindle, with the result that he was speedily haled before a magistrate on a number of charges of obtaining money by false pretences. It was shown that "Mason & Co." were to pocket sevenpence out of every shilling that was netted by their "agent," and the magistrate, taking the view that M'Donnell was himself only a dupe, discharged him with a caution, on his undertaking not to continue the business. To have punished M'Donnell while Mason remains at large would have been manifestly unjust. Now that this lead has been given by the Dublin authorities, however, I hope the police here will no longer hesitate to prosecute the prime offender. Mason has defrauded hundreds of people in all parts of the kingdom.

A great deal of trouble and annoyance were occasioned in Leeds the other day by the wholesale delivery of the following post-card. The card was in each case addressed to the master of the house, and was timed to be delivered when the addressees were away from home on their duties, obviously with the idea of its falling into the hands of their wives, and thus creating the maximum amount of domestic unpleasantness:—

Fairlawn View, Sherwood Rise,
June 27.

My Dear Friend,—Why did you not keep your promise? I waited over an hour for you. Why did you not come? Marshall has persuaded the Express people to print the whole story about Miss Gray. It will make a stir, and will be the talk of the town. Madame Rose will be delighted, especially if she knows your wife has seen the Express. I will try and meet you on Monday,—Yours ever, Edith.

They print a sketch of the lady, so Madame says.

Of course this is only the latest notion in smart advertising. But obvious as this may appear after what has been said, it, of course, did not at once strike every lady who got hold of it, and in more than one case the results were anything but laughable. The advertisement appears to have emanated from the Leeds Evening Express, and to have reference to a serial starting in that paper. The impudence of the trick is decidedly aggravated by an article published in the Express the same afternoon, drawing a facetious picture of the consternation excited in various households by the post-card. The commentary is in this strain:—

As soon as the matter was brought to the Editor's notice, our reporters, with characteristic zeal, ferreted out the secret, and it is with the greatest pleasure that we are enabled to undo the damage done by the inconsiderate perpetrator of this huge practical joke. If all the ladies concerned will read Bourton Marshall's new story, "Warning Shadows," and Madame Rose's article for "Mothers and Daughters," their minds will be set at rest, and they will thank the industrious and painstaking joker for his ingenious method of calling attention to the brightest, best, and biggest evening paper published on Saturday evening. We are unable to say how far the wicked work has gone. We strongly advise every husband to take home a copy of the Express, and ask his wife to read the many bright features it contains, not forgetting the new story and the fashion article.

A provincial editor may regard this sort of thing as a joke, but it seems to have struck most of those affected by it as beyond a joke altogether. The Express has since issued an apology, signed by the manager, to all those who received the card, making a somewhat feeble attempt to excuse the offence on the ground that its objectionable character was overlooked "during severe pressure of other business," which is absurd in view of the article published the same evening. However, I am glad to see the apology, for its appearance implies that this novelty in advertising has created an effect quite opposite to that anticipated. Journalism has enough sins to answer for without such attempts as this to make it a public nuisance.

Almost every week I am asked to utter a protest against the publication of newspaper advertisements of obscene and offensive books and pamphlets and of a certain class of quack "remedies" which can only be used for dangerous and illegal purposes. A year or two back I did my best to rid journalism of this disgrace, but while I had the satisfaction of bringing about some improvement in one or two instances, the general result was to show that so long as the law allows them to do so, some newspaper proprietors will be ready to admit any sort of filth to their advertisement columns, provided it is sufficiently well paid for. In the case of some of the local papers, however, I would suggest that the correspondents who write to me would do better to first remonstrate directly with the proprietors. Then if the latter have any excuse to offer for this pollution of their pages, I shall be glad to hear of it and to deal with it.

Two letters have reached me from the office of the Musical Standard, with reference to the advertisement of Mr. Henry Holmes in that paper. The first is from Mr. William Reeves, the publisher, who, after sundry observations which have nothing to do with the case, states that neither he nor his advertisement manager knew anything of "the gentleman advertising," and that it is not intended to take any further advertisements from the same source when the present contract ends. The second is from Mr. E. A. Baughan, the editor of the paper, who writes:—

Will you kindly permit me, as the Editor, to state publicly that I have no control whatever over the advertisements and business arrangement of the paper (the Musical Standard). I have come to the conclusion, however, that such a position is untenable, and, therefore, I am about to tender my proprietor notice of resignation as Editor.

In this, I think, Mr. Baughan is wise. The advertising and editorial departments of a newspaper must, of course, be kept distinct, but an editor who has "no control whatever over the advertisements" is apt to find himself in a false position.

With regard to the Holmes advertisement, after what Mr. Reeves states, it is unnecessary to say more; but as Mr. Reeves also informs me in his letter that he is "not in the habit of searching for scandals," and that he has "seen it stated that there are few families without one, if we knew all," it may be of use to him to know, if he intends to continue publishing newspapers, that it is essentially his duty to search for scandals in the advertisements he publishes, and to see that nothing scandalous appears among them. The Holmes scandal, as I have already said, was an open secret in the musical profession for a year or two before it became necessary to make it public property in Truth. No very elaborate search was, therefore, necessary on the part of the publisher of a musical journal in order to discover it. It may or may not be true, as Mr. Reeves suggests, that there are scandals in every family; but I can assure Mr. Reeves that if he is so unfortunate as to have any scandals of this or any other kind in his own family, I shall be happy to put the public on their guard against the offenders.

Apropos of the new departure of the North Eastern Railway Company in selling first-class tickets available for a specified distance on any part of their line, a friend calls my attention to the arrangements in this direction which have been adopted on the Belgian State Railways. Their tickets are issued at all times for a period of fifteen days, during which the holder may travel any distance on nearly any part of the State lines. The prices of these tickets are, in effect, £2, first-class; £1. 10s. 5d., second; and £1, third. By way of preventing fraudulent transfer of such tickets, an unmounted photograph of the holder is required to be attached to them, which seems a very simple and sensible arrangement. If this system can be worked successfully in Belgium, why not in England?

I have to apologise to several readers and correspondents in Manchester and the neighbourhood for deferring consideration of communications received from them respecting the Lifeboat Saturday Fund—a matter in which Manchester is deeply and properly interested. The fact is that I have myself had under consideration another important question concerning the National Lifeboat Institution, which I had intended to discuss this week. But at the last moment pressure on my space, coupled with the necessity for further inquiry on one or two points, compels me to postpone what I had intended to say. I have, therefore, thought it better to hold over the whole question until the next issue of TRUTH.

Two correspondents have this week communicated with me anonymously on matters of importance. Both of them, I think, are ladies. One of them says that if she (or he) was sure that her (or his) name would never appear, she (or he) could enlighten me further. My correspondent can send me anything she pleases, and may rest quite assured that her name will never appear. She may also take it that unless she sends her name her information will never appear. This applies equally to all communications, whatever the source or the subject. I would specially ask the lady who writes to me respecting the fate of her child, to give me an opportunity of communicating with her.

The Home Secretary is aware, he says, "that collections for objects of charity are made to a considerable extent in the public streets; but the police control over them," he states, "only extends to seeing that no obstruction takes place, and that no annoyance takes place to passers-by." Well, is not that enough? Does the Home Secretary suppose that no obstruction (in the police sense of the word) is caused by these collections, and no annoyance caused to passers-by? I can show him one busy West-End thoroughfare where every Saturday he may find in the space of half-a-mile half-a-dozen tables and chairs placed on the pavement, with a dozen box-rattling females in attendance. If an old woman with an apple-stall planted herself on the pavement in the same way, would not the police make short work of her? Of course they would. These young women are no more engaged in charity than the apple-woman. Those to whom I specially refer are simply collecting money on commission for an enterprising individual who runs a "Fund." I want to know why there is one law, or one police rule, for old women with apple-stalls and another for young women who rattle money-boxes on commission.

As for "annoyance to the passers-by," it has grown and grown until annoyance is hardly the name for it. A beggar who stands in the gutter and whines out his sing-song as you go by, is a very trifling inconvenience by the side of the young woman who plants herself before you, money-box in hand, and, if you push by, pursues you down the street, rattling the thing in your ear. If it is not considered annoying to the passer-by to be accosted in this way half-a-dozen times in a quarter of an hour's walk, the police might just as well give up regulating the streets altogether. Certainly, they ought not to interfere with the ordinary beggars.

As President of the Increased Armaments Protest Committee, Mr. Spence Watson denounces the increased armaments which Mr. Gladstone declares in his letter to that gentleman to be "wild, wanton, and most perilous." As President of the National Liberal Federation, Mr. Watson supports, as leader of the Liberal Party, a nobleman who is a far more convinced Jingo than Lord Salisbury. It is this sort of dual allegiance which makes most Radicals regard Liberals as humbugs. Either we are for increased armaments, and for the aggressive policy that renders them necessary, or we are not; and it would be well that Mr. Watson and the National Liberal Federation should decide for which we are. In these matters I am a Gladstonian. I mean to remain one, and without fear or favour to oppose all those who do not agree with me. Their views may be sound, and those of Mr. Gladstone may be unsound. But nothing is more certain than that our huge armaments and the Jingo policy that now prevails, are due to the Liberal Party having repudiated the opinions of Mr. Gladstone on these matters.

Such bad taste, we are told, it was in Mr. Lloyd George to refer to the amounts which would be secured to landlords in the Cabinet by the Tory Rating Bill; and such bad, such execrable taste, it was in Sir William Harcourt to hint that, although there was not even the pretence of agricultural distress at Hatfield, Lord Salisbury would come in for his share in the dole. Bad taste it certainly is for any one to taunt a person with gifts that he has bestowed on him. But we Radicals have not given anything to landlords of our own free will. The money that they are to get from us has been wrung from us. With all respect to Lord Salisbury, in my wildest dreams of lavish generosity it never occurred to me to make him the recipient of my charity. We protest, and we have protested, against relieving agriculture by relieving landlords. They are the drones in the hive. They exact, and they are legally entitled to exact, the pound of flesh that the law allows them to obtain for letting their land; but between this and making up to them out of public funds whatever they may have lost by the fall in the value of land there is a very wide difference. If anything can arouse Radicals from their apathy this Rating Bill ought to; for in the worst days of landlord supremacy in the Legislature a more outrageous robbery never was perpetrated.

Crete is a portion of the Turkish Empire, and the Turkish Empire is the Eastern Question. So long as that Empire exists so long will Christians be misgoverned by Turks. We are the great supporters of this Empire. Our Statesmen hold that on its integrity depends the security of our Empire. On the other hand, the great majority of the inhabitants of these Isles hold that we should be quite as safe if the Turkish Empire were to cease to exist, and that, even if this were not so, we have no right to maintain this hell upon earth on political grounds. So far as we are concerned with Turkey, the quarrel is between our politicians and all those who would subordinate fancied political advantages to that moral law which ought to be the basis of all international policy. This ought to be clearly understood. Either we must accept the barbarities practised by Turks on Christians as the direct outcome of our political creed, or we must give up our political creed in regard to the maintenance of the rule of the Sultan.

The decision of Mr. Chamberlain to agree to the appointment of a Committee of the House of Commons to inquire into all and everything connected with the Chartered Company of South Africa meets the requirements of the case. The Committee will, I presume, collect evidence of facts, leaving it to the House of Commons to take what course it deems best when put into possession of them. It is to be regretted that the Committee should not be able to commence its investigations at once, but the delay is inevitable, owing to the Jameson case being still sub judice.

Mr. Chamberlain has, it must be admitted, acted both wisely and fairly in the difficult position in which he found himself. He at once "damped down" the raid, and, so soon as it became clear that Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Beit were connected with it, notwithstanding the denials of the former, he made it clear to the Directors of the Company that the connection of these gentlemen with it ought to be severed. And now he has consented to a Parliamentary inquiry, notwithstanding the influences that have been brought to bear in order to prevent it. Sir F. Carrington is at the head of the armed force in Rhodesia, and the only criticism that I have to offer on the action of the Colonial Secretary is, that it might perhaps be well, in the interests of South Africa generally, and in those of Rhodesia in particular, that the civil administration of the latter should, for a time at least, be placed in the hands of Sir F. Carrington, the Company, as a quid pro quo for its commercial rights in the country, paying all costs.

In the meantime, I sincerely hope that some means will be found to establish a modus vivendi between the natives of Rhodesia and the sparse Europeans dotted about in it. It is horrible to read of these poor creatures —whose crime is what we should call patriotism were they white instead of black—being shot down like game at a battue, with apparently as little danger to the shooters as to those killing hares and rabbits.

Of course, we may anticipate a plentiful crop of stories respecting Mr. Rhodes from the Cape, launched in order to rally public opinion over here to him. The following, I see, is going the round of the Press:—When Mr. Rhodes arrived at Beira, the contractor for the Rhodesian railroads informed him that he intended to buy material in Germany owing to its cheapness. "Never mind that," said Mr. Rhodes, "whatever you do, get all material from Great Britain, and I will refund the difference." Mr. Rhodes' friends on the Press of South Africa must regard us as singularly credulous. I would suggest to them, as their next imaginative effort in this direction, to describe their paymaster as fully determined to devote his surplus cash to building and endowing a number of churches in Rhodesia.

Some people may wonder at the persistence with which a number of the country papers continue week after week printing articles which extravagantly eulogise Mr. Rhodes and all his works and grossly vilify President Kruger and the Transvaal Government. It may help to lessen this wonder if I explain that there is a body calling itself the South African Association, and having Lord Lorne and Mr. G. Wyndham, M.P., among its members, which is good enough to supply the Press with articles on these lines free, gratis, and for nothing. Every week the Association sends out a printed paper containing ready-made leaders and leaderettes on South African questions "for the use of editors." Self-respecting journalists, of course, consign such stuff to the waste-paper basket or forward it to Truth; but not a few are found willing to reproduce it in their columns as expressions of their own editorial views. This is one of the methods by which newspaper opinion is manufactured in favour of Mr. Rhodes—and a pretty commentary it is upon the intelligence and independence of the Press.

The question as to who is to pay for the Soudan campaign is simple enough. If it is an Imperial war, the British Empire should pay; if it is an Egyptian war, Egypt should pay. But the Government has got itself into this mess. It is, they say, an Imperial war so far as India is concerned: it is an Egyptian war so far as Great Britain is concerned. The cost of the Indian troops is roughly estimated at £175,000. We pay £140,000, and get it back from Egypt. India pays £35,000 and does not get it back. The reason for this is that the war is unpopular. Were we to pay, the Government would suffer in electoral opinion; as India does not return Members to Parliament, public opinion in India need not be considered. On Monday last, after defeating an amendment by a majority of eighty-five only, the Government carried their resolution by 146. But this majority was secured by the free use of the whip, for nine out of ten of the Unionists bitterly deplored their Leaders having brought forward the resolution.

THE FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UGANDA RAILWAY COMPANY.

(A FORECAST.)

"In making this, their First Report, the Board are grieved to state
That 'tis at best a chequered tale they must therein relate.
All the employees who survive are working with a will,
But, up to date, the net receipts continue to be nil.

"The line is still intact in parts, though, in a fit of pique,
The friendly tribe of Shiftas stole ten miles of it last week.
The 'Mjaro section (thrice renewed) has been abstracted too,
But this the Board do not intend at present to renew.

"Amongst a somewhat lengthy list of similar disasters,
The Board report the total loss of sixteen station-masters,
All of them, there is cause to fear from their successors' notes,
Killed by the natives for the lace upon their caps and coats.

"The rolling-stock renewal needs, and that without delay,
The Board's last locomotive went three weeks ago to-day,
And now is in King Khaka's kraal, where by a fate most odd,
It's tended by the medicine-man and worshipped as a god!

"The traffic figures might have caused well-founded jubilation,
But, sad to say, no luggage train has reached its destination.
The 'Cheap Excursions,' too, have failed since, by a well-plann'd plot,
The Bhuggs two hundred 'trippers' caught, and cooked and ate the lot!

"The Board is still determined, though, that it will not say 'die,'
So to the British Parliament it will once more apply,
And with another generous vote, three millions p'r'aps may do—
Undaunted, undiscouraged still, its course it will pursue!"

WILD CATS IN UGANDA.

THE peculiarity of the English people, or rather of that section of the English people who are what is called Jingoes, is, that every now and then they come to the conclusion that the entire future of the Empire depends upon our getting possession of some particular tract of land. The priests of the Jingo creed then beat the big drum, and curse every one as a traitor who is not prepared to spend blood and treasure in the particular annexation which, for the nonce, attracts their attention. A few years later, some new scheme of annexation crops up, and little is heard of the territory for the possession of which they were ready to fight the world in arms.

The East Africa Chartered Company was not, like the South Africa Chartered Company, a Stock Exchange speculation. Its promoters would not probably have been averse to making money, but in the main they were influenced by a perverted idea of patriotism. They obtained a strip of coast land, and they made treaties with African Kings in the Hinterland. Amongst these monarchs was the King of Uganda. This State is, for an African monarchy, civilised. It is situated about six hundred miles from the coast, from which it is separated by a desert sparsely peopled by fierce savages, whose hands are against all who traverse it. Having made a treaty with the King, which practically handed over the country to them, the Company sent up some soldiers with a couple of Maxim guns. There were two parties in the country, one of which called itself indifferently French and Catholics, and the other English and Protestants. Of the theological difference between the Catholic and the Protestant creed neither knew anything, their sole idea of the outcome of the difference being that a Catholic ought to kill a Protestant, and a Protestant a Catholic, whenever he got a chance. The Company allied itself with the Protestants, and earned their respect by slaying numerous Catholics. But having spent a good deal of money in this "civilising" enterprise, it finally came to the conclusion that the speculation was commercially a bad one, and announced its intention to withdraw from the country. On this we took the territory over, and annexed it. Since then we have been waging war with all the neighbours of the Ugandese, and particularly with the kingdom of Unyoro. The monarch of Unyoro was not a commendable person, but any Government is better than no Government in the estimation of all who are not Anarchists. Thanks to us, there is now no Government in Unyoro. We had found in Uganda several hundred Soudanese, who had formed a portion of the troops of Emin Pasha, and who had rebelled against him. They were a band of unmitigated ruffians. We took them over with the territory, and we have used them in order to extend the area of civilisation. In Unyoro there is no villainy that they have not committed against the natives, but we pay them in order to use them, and for fear that if we did not they would turn against us. The latest news is that we have annexed Unyoro.

Having thus established our rule in Uganda, and put an end to all rule in Unyoro, we came to the conclusion that the next step would be to make a railroad connecting these territories with the sea. A sort of vague survey was made by Major Macdonald, at a cost, if I remember rightly, of about £20,000. A Blue Book was published giving the result of this survey. The railroad, it was officially declared, could be made at a maximum outlay, including plant, &c., of £2,240,000. Last year Parliament was asked to approve of this railway, and it was informed that the cost had been over-estimated, and that it would not exceed £1,750,000. Now we are told that the cost will be £3,000,000, and we are asked to authorise this outlay. But in the debate that took place on the subject last Thursday we were informed that the route had not really been surveyed, and, in fact, that it had not yet been decided what the route was to be. This £3,000,000, therefore, is a mere guess, and, taking the cost of railroads in South Africa as a basis for calculation, there is nothing more certain than that the minimum outlay will be £5,000,000.

Major Macdonald estimated that three trains per week was a sanguine estimate for all requirements; he calculated that the annual working expenses would be £67,000, and that provided a number of "ifs" became anything beyond "ifs," the gross receipts might be £61,000 per annum. That a railroad of 657 miles can be worked and maintained in the tropics at a cost of £67,000 is obviously outside the area of probability. We may take it, therefore, that not only shall we have to pay £150,000 per annum as interest on the cost of construction, but that we shall also have to pay £50,000 per annum to make up the difference between receipts and expenditure; total, £200,000. To this, it is replied that the railroad itself will create traffic. Uganda will produce crops of cereals and other products. These the natives will exchange for our manufactured goods, and thus the railroad will prove a most remunerative speculation, benefiting us and the Ugandese. All this is nonsense. The country is unfit for Europeans, owing to the climate. Africans do not work whenever they can help it, and the Ugandese are not in the least likely to produce crops in excess of their own requirements, in order to exchange them for our manufactured goods.

Commercially, therefore, the railroad is an absurdity. Those who advocate its construction are well aware of this, and they have to fall back, in order to defend the outlay, upon vague statements respecting the use that it will be, when made, in suppressing the slave trade. Now, the slaves that are sent down from the interior of Africa to Zanzibar and the adjacent coast, are sold either to Arabs in Zanzibar, or to the slave masters in the Island of Pemba, where the mortality amongst these unfortunate creatures amounts to 10 per cent. each year. As Pemba is under our protectorate, the utter hypocrisy of this plea for a railroad is manifest. We provide the market for slaves, and then we spend millions to prevent, or to endeavour to prevent, supply reaching this market. The real truth is that the railroad is to be made in order to gratify the Jingoist mania of men who would have us first grab all that we can in Central Africa, although absolutely useless to us, and then make a railroad to the new acquisition. I am not a Jingo, but if I were, I should exercise a certain discrimination in giving effect to my predatory instincts; just as, were I a burglar, I should only break into houses where I thought that there was property worth the stealing. If, too, I were for laying out millions on making a railroad abroad, in order to increase the area of the market for our manufactured goods, I should advocate its construction to some place where these goods would be likely to be sold.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONSULATE SCANDAL.

Over three months have elapsed since reference was made in these columns to certain serious charges against the personal honour and integrity of certain officials of the British Consulate at Constantinople, which have been put forward in the local Press, and by an ex-official of the Consulate. I have refrained from referring further to the matter in the interval for various reasons, one of them being that litigation was in progress at Constantinople which was likely to elucidate the facts, and another that at the conclusion of one of the cases under trial the Vice-Consul and the Judge of the Consular Court were summoned to London. This last event, however, happened some five or six weeks ago. There has been ample time since for Lord Salisbury to ascertain the nature of the facts, and to come to a decision upon them; and the public have a right to know whether any definite action is to be taken in the matter, or whether the attempt to hush up the scandal, which had been pursued up to the time of the last article in Truth on the subject, is still to be persevered in.

To show how matters stand, I will briefly recapitulate the facts to which I called attention on April 2. In consequence of disputes among the officials of the Consulate, Mr. Henry Silley, the chief clerk, an official of twenty-eight years' standing, was in January last retired. So far as I can see, Mr. Silley's attitude in his disputes with his colleagues, and in his relations with his official superiors, had been in all respects proper and becoming. He left the Service without any imputation upon his character or ability, and he has since received a superannuation allowance. The step, therefore, of retiring this gentleman while leaving those against whom most serious allegations were made in undisturbed possession of their offices, has a very ugly look to start with. After his retirement, Mr. Silley formally laid before the Ambassador a memorandum specifying various gross irregularities which had been committed in the Consulate. The most serious of them referred to the fraudulent use of the seal of the Consulate for the purpose of deceiving the Turkish authorities as to the title to certain property, in which the gentleman thus alleged to have misused the seal was interested. The official against whom this serious allegation was made, was Mr. P. Sarell, the Vice-Consul, a gentleman recently promoted to that post from a clerkship in the Consular office. No direct answer was given by Sir Philip Currie to Mr. Silley's memorandum, but, on calling attention to it again, Mr. Silley was informed that it had been transmitted to the Foreign Office. It thus appears that Lord Salisbury was in possession of the details of the allegations against the Vice-Consul some time in January last. Failing to make any impression on the Embassy, Mr. Silley embodied his allegations in a communication to Mr. W. H. Wrench, the British Consul. In this document he reiterated his charges in the most unreserved terms, pointing out that they were of a criminal nature, and calling upon the Consulate to bring the matter to an issue, either by the prosecution of the Vice-Consul, or by ordering that official to vindicate himself by an action for libel against the writer, Mr. Silley. To this letter no answer was vouchsafed. Mr. Silley then came to London and went personally to the Foreign Office to obtain an answer to his original letter to Sir Philip Currie. The only satisfaction he got there was that he was referred back to Constantinople. These were the facts to which I called attention on April 2. I may add to them now that Mr. Silley went back to Constantinople and addressed a further inquiry to Sir Philip Currie respecting his previous communication. He was informed, in reply, that the Ambassador saw no ground for inquiry into the conduct of Mr. Tarring, the Judge of the Consular Court (which had also been impugned by Mr. Silley), and that, as regards Mr. Sarell, his Excellency proposed to await the result of legal proceedings then pending by the Constantinople Building Society against that gentleman. Mr. Silley, in reply, begged his Excellency to reconsider his opinion in regard to Mr. Tarring, and, as regards Mr. Sarell, pointed out that the specific charge which he made (that of misuse of the seal of the Consulate) had no relation to the issue raised in the Building Society's action. This produced a request from the Ambassador for particulars of the charge against Mr. Sarell, which Mr. Silley met by referring his Excellency back to his original memorandum of January 14, and there the correspondence ended.

Everything that has happened since lends colour to Mr. Silley's allegations against the Vice-Consul, as well as those against Mr. Tarring, the Judge of the Consular Court. In order to explain what has happened, it is necessary to give some particulars of the disputes among the Consular officials which led to Mr. Silley's retirement. At the bottom of the quarrel seems to have been a company, called the Société Vinicole de Constantinople, which was promoted by four British officials to take over a vineyard owned by Mr. Silley. The officials concerned were Mr. Silley himself, Mr. Sarell, the Vice-Consul, Mr. Thomson (Harbour-master, Gaoler, and Inspector of the Consular Police), and a clerk in the Consulate calling himself Hamson, whose true patronymic is, I believe, Hamsi-oglou, a name which hardly points to British origin, and is, I fancy, indicative of Syrian extraction. These our gentlemen became directors of the Société Vinicole. The company does not seem to have been a success, and the absence of dividends may have led to friction among the directors. At any rate, during the absence of Mr. Silley, Messrs. Sarell, Thomson, and Hamsi-oglou-Hamson called a meeting for the purpose of winding-up the company. Mr. Silley's friends took steps to resist this proceeding, and this seems to have been the beginning of the litigation. I believe in the first instance Sir Philip Currie endeavoured to smooth over the dispute by ordering all four officials to withdraw from the Société Vinicole. Mr. Silley certainly did withdraw, and transferred his interest to a trustee in favour of his wife and children; but the others stuck to the company, attended the meeting which had been called, and passed a resolution for the compulsory winding-up of the company. To show the character of these proceedings it may be stated that only Messrs. Sarell, Hamson, and Thomson were present at the meeting. These three directors are stated to have held between them about one-tenth of the capital. Sarell himself, who had not then attained the dignity of Vice-Consul, held one £10 share. He took the chair at the meeting mentioned above. A written protest was handed in by a solicitor representing shareholders holding about two-thirds of the capital. Nevertheless, the three directors passed their resolution. The opposing shareholders thereupon commenced an action to set aside the winding-up resolution. In consequence, I believe, of further intervention by Sir Philip Currie, Mr. Silley's family and the other shareholders submitted the dispute to the arbitration of Mr. Tarring, the Judge of the Consular Court. Mr. Tarring's decision was in favour of the Sarell-Thomson-Hamsi-oglou-Hamson faction; but on an action being commenced to set aside the winding-up resolution, judgment was ultimately given against the three directors. This judgment was delivered on April 21. Not only does there seem to have been no shadow of justification for the attempt of Mr. Sarell and his colleagues to throw the company into liquidation, but the hearing of the action discloses irregularities of the most astounding description on the part of the directors. It appears that the company, which had a brass-plate on a door in London as its registered office, had no seal, issued no share certificates, and absolutely had no register of shares or transfers; and it was stated, I believe by Mr. Sarell himself, that the liabilities incurred in the shape of fines for violation of the Companies' Acts would have swallowed up the whole of the assets. So much for the case of the Société Vinicole de Constantinople.

This action is only one of a whole batch which have been commenced in connection with the transactions between the officials of the Consulate. One of the most important of these is the case of the Constantinople Building Society v. Sarell already referred to. The Building Society sued Mr. Vice-Consul Sarell to recover an advance of £1,800 made to him on the security of property the title to which was defective, and which the plaintiffs allege he knew to be defective. This case being sub judice, it would be unfair to comment on its merits, but it may be mentioned that Mr. Sarell was at the time of the loan in question a director of the Building Society, and that this loan was obtained in order to pay off a mortgage on the same property, given by Mr. Sarell's father to another director of the Building Society. So that the transaction, which is now alleged to have been tainted with fraud, was virtually the substitution of the Building Society for one of the directors as the mortgagee of a property belonging to another director, the title to which was defective. I understand also that the Turkish Government are taking proceedings against the trustee of the said property for the recovery of the share which should, by Turkish law, have reverted to the Turkish "Evkaf" through the death of three brothers and sisters of Mr. Sarell, the Vice-Consul. It is, I believe, in connection with the furnishing of evidence to the Turkish Government respecting the deaths of these brothers and sisters that Mr. Sarell is charged by Mr. Silley with having made fraudulent use of the seal of the Consulate. Whatever truth there may be in the allegation that the Turkish Government was wilfully deceived, there seems to be no doubt, from certain correspondence of which I have particulars, that every difficulty was thrown in the way of the Government in obtaining the information to which it was entitled respecting the deaths of the parties whose property was in question.

Another action, which has already been tried, was brought by Thomson, the Harbour Master and Police Inspector, against Mr. Silley for the delivery of certain shares in the Société Vinicole. This action is of great importance on account of the part played in it by Mr. Tarring, the Judge of the Consular Court. What the part played was may be seen by the following extract from the Oriental Advertiser:—

> The scenes witnessed in Court on Thursday last and the following day are unparalleled, when counsel for the defendant, after a series of the most exasperating interruptions, was finally compelled to tell the Judge that he was "the instigator of the suit." The sudden adjournment of the Court by the Judge, with a threat of committal for "contempt," and, on the reassembling of the Court on Friday, the counsel for the defence refusing to withdraw his statement, are facts yet fresh in the memory of those who were present on both occasions. But the scene on Friday, when the Court-room was crowded to excess, let us hope, will never be witnessed again in any Court of Justice. It will be remembered that on Dr. Mizzi refusing to retract his statement he felt it incumbent upon himself to retire from the case. The defendant, Mr. Silley, then continued the case without the aid of counsel, and being in the witness-box, proceeded to give his evidence; this proved the most crushing part of the whole case, or it mainly concerned the connection of the Judge with the matter. The witness, for fully three-quarters of an hour, with consummate coolness and a firm grasp of facts, dates, and documents, delivered evidence showing how and in what manner the Judge was connected with the subject-matter of the suit. Mr. Pears, who happened to be in Court, here intervened as amicus curiæ, and, after expressing his regret at the monstrously cruel position in which the Judge found himself, suggested an adjournment by which counsel, on both sides, might be able to bring about an arrangement for the continuance of the case in order to bring it to a speedy termination.

The adjournment led to no result, and the trial was resumed. The Judge, notwithstanding what had occurred, then delivered a summing-up, marked by strong expressions of opinion in favour of the plaintiff, but the jury, consisting of five members of the British colony, returned a verdict in favour of the defendant on all the issues, and the verdict was received with uproarious applause by the public in Court. It should be added that this case unexpectedly got into the list for trial while Mr. Silley was in England in March last, endeavouring to bring to a head his charges against Mr. Sarell. Notwithstanding the absence of the defendant, the Judge refused to grant an application for the postponement of the trial, and, in consequence of this, Mr. Silley was compelled to leave London and hurry back to Constantinople. The Advertiser appends the following remarks on the case:—

> This remarkable lawsuit and the circumstances which led up to it, together with Mr. Judge Tarring's connection with the matter, and his insistence upon presiding as Judge, in face of official advice to the contrary, may be the subject of future comment, as they are matters which concern the general interests of the British colony.

With regard to other actions pending it is not necessary to say much. In two cases Mr. Silley is the plaintiff. In one of them he sues Mr. Sarell for £480 money lent; and in the other he sues Sarell and Hamsi-oglou-Hamson for libel and slander.

Such is a general outline of the scandals connected with the Consulate. The questions which arise on the facts are chiefly these:—(1) On what ground and on whose recommendation was Mr. Sarell in the autumn of last year, when all these disputes and disclosures were pending, promoted from the rank of clerk to that of Vice-Consul? (2) On what ground and at whose instigation was Mr. Henry Silley about the same time removed from the Service? (3) Did Mr. Tarring, as I understand is the case, make any representations to the Foreign Office respecting the desirability of Mr. Silley's removal? (4) Why have the Ambassador and the Foreign Office in London abstained from any action whatever upon the facts, or alleged facts, officially laid before them by Mr. Silley in January last? (5) What action does Lord Salisbury now intend to take in regard to the facts proved as regards Messrs. Sarell and Tarring in the case of the Société Vinicole and that of Thomson v. Silley, and the further allegations still pending against Mr. Sarell and his colleagues? Although some of the facts are still in obscurity, enough is known to show clearly that there has been conduct of a most unbecoming character on the part of certain of the Consulate officials, while the history of the case up to the present time suggests in the strongest way a disposition on the part of some higher authority behind to hush the scandal up. If that course is persisted in, after what has come to light in the two cases that have been tried, the universal opinion will be that the worst that has been alleged is true. Already its truth is assumed in the newspapers of all nationalities at Constantinople, and, for the most part, by the British colony there. A scandal of such a nature would be bad enough anywhere. But in a city like Constantinople, where so much depends upon the credit of British diplomacy, and where this country poses as the exponent of all that is noble and chivalrous, its consequences must be especially deplorable. It is a matter of national importance that the Foreign Office should delay no longer in threshing out the whole of the facts, and, when that has been done, taking such further steps as the interests of justice may demand.

Every requirement for Furnishing tastefully at least expense is amply illustrated in the Galleries and Catalogues of HAMPTON & SONS, Furnishers & Decorators, Pall Mall East, S.W.

THE COVENT GARDEN THEATRICAL FUND.

For many years past the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund, which is generally supposed to be enormously wealthy, with a formidable accumulation of unused capital, has been shrouded in mystery. Since Covent Garden ceased to be a patent theatre, and devoted itself to operatic instead of dramatic performances, it has been impossible for any one to get on to the Fund at all. The consequence was that existing annuitants fattened on the proceeds of the Charity, and the obvious inference is that the member who longest survives the existing annuitants will become the possessor, on the Tontine system, of the funds that have accumulated by compound interest for over 130 years.

The Covent Garden Fund was instituted on December 23, 1765, and confirmed by Act of Parliament. But, from that time to this, the rules, regulations, amount of capital, and names of annuitants have been carefully concealed from the public gaze. Whisperings of a scandal have been heard in dramatic circles for many years past, but no one has dreamed of taking action in the matter. The attention of the Charity Commissioners has been called to this wealthy Fund without success. And so the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund has gone on piling on interest upon interest until, as is generally supposed, the invested capital has assumed prodigious proportions.

Since the Pyne and Harrison opera companies and others ceased to exist, and since pantomime at Christmas time died for ever on the Covent Garden boards, it has been impossible to elect any fresh annuitants; so the regular incomes are regularly paid, and the unused capital is increasing every year, to fall in time to the longest life. I am given to understand that the oldest living member of the Fund is Mr. Walter Lacy, now considerably over ninety years of age, and the youngest is Mr. Wilford Morgan, the well-known singer and vocal instructor.

How strange is the irony of Fate! Whilst making some purchases at the Bazaar recently held in aid of an Actors' Orphanage, I came across a most remarkable play-bill dated Tuesday, March 27, 1832, which lets in a little light upon the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund. Was it not wonderful that, on the very day that these energetic ladies were working hard, and appealing to the generous and charitable to help the fatherless children of actors, it should be discovered that one of the main principles of the Fund was to assist not only the aged, indigent, and infirm actors and actresses of the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, but also the widows and children? I am given to understand that the clause about the children may be very liberally interpreted, and, if I mistake not, extended to the orphan children of the whole dramatic profession. If this be so, the attention of the Charity Commissioners should at once be called to the secret Fund, in order, if possible, to secure some of the revenue for the Actors' Orphanage, which, through the vigour of the ladies of the dramatic profession, and the energy of the various speakers and patrons, has had a brilliant start with over £2,000.

The Covent Garden playbill to which I allude is safe in my possession, and I now give a copy of it for the benefit of not only those who desire, and have desired for years, that the books, minutes, regulations, the past and the prospects, of the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund should be thoroughly overhauled, but that some important grant should be made out of the Fund to supplement the £2,000 already gained by such heroic effort in aid of an Actors' Orphanage. Were this done, certain privileges at some Infants' Orphan Asylum now in existence could be at once secured for several fatherless actors' infants already on the list of candidates; and the fully-furnished house at the London Orphan Asylum at Watford could be immediately endowed and dedicated to the dramatic profession.

A close perusal of the old playbill will show the names of Kemble, Bennett, Warde, Abbot, Keeley, Payne, Addison, Romer, Hughes, and many more, all of whom have descendants on the modern stage. It is interesting to note also the names of the patrons of the theatre who supported the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund at the anniversary dinner on March 28, 1832, all of whom were doubtless capable of drawing a very handsome cheque on this occasion. At any rate, here is a copy of the playbill; and if the dramatic profession is wise, it will lose no time in demanding a public investigation into the Fund, with a view of benefiting the excellent scheme which has been generously devised to assist the helpless and fatherless little children of actors:—

NOTES FROM PARIS.

ENGLISH GOVERNESSES IN PARIS.

THE subject of English girls in Paris has long been on my mind. I mean those who come to teach English in exchange for board, lodgings, and what French they can pick up. The directing spirits of "Homes" and "Missions" here have within the last quarter of a century been so hard at work to provide France with such teachers as to make them even more than a drug here. English girls once upon a time could obtain fairly good salaries as governesses in Paris. They can no longer, save in rare cases, expect anything of the kind. "Homes" supply them gratis to the French at the expense of rich English philanthropists. English girls read in the papers of Paris as the gay, the brilliant capital; the radiant centre of civilisation. Poor moths! they do not understand how this brilliancy comes of the toiling, moiling, and the severe economy of the many. They get infected with the Paris fever, and think how nice it would be if they could secure situations in Paris, to exchange English lessons for board, lodging, and the opportunity to hear French spoken. They have no idea what expense and inconvenience an ordinary Parisian family is at in taking in an additional inmate. As ignorant are they of the clause of the Code that allows employers to turn them adrift at a moment's notice. Nor if they knew, would they mind. The "Homes" are supposed to be of easy access. Texts and tracts they put in circulation speak of them as refuges in times of trouble. It is not hard, certainly, to enter them when they are not full; but when many are called but few can be chosen. English chaplains, doctors, and managers of the British Charitable Fund can tell sad tales of girls who have failed—and worse—in their attempts to make their way as English teachers. One hardly ever hears of them going to laundresses to learn dainty ironing, or to pastrycooks to master the secrets of the culinary art. To be governesses or shop-girls is what they mostly try for. The "Home" does not, so far as I can learn, encourage useful handicrafts.

The following letter may give an idea of the reckless way in which English girls are shot, with parental agreement, into Paris. I forward you the original; you will see from it that the address given is in a fairly genteel neighbourhood of West London:—

My introduction to you is from a gentleman named Hardy [I never knew a Mr. Hardy, and neither card nor note from him was enclosed], whom you assisted in a similar manner to mine so far back as '67, and from what he told me, I feel assured that I need no apology in asking your kind interest for my daughters who are in Paris and seem to be very badly treated. If you will give them an interview and assist them by the benefit of your advice, you will be doing a most charitable action. The situations they are now fulfilling were obtained for them through agencies, and are both most unsatisfactory. In the case of one at the Avenue ——, the family received an invitation to leave next morning, and there was no room for her. Practically turning her out, as far as they knew, without a home to go to, and but for the generosity of a lady whom I have never seen or known she would have been without shelter or money. This man, Monsieur ——, occupies, I believe, a good position in Paris, and is well off [could he be confederated with the generous lady?] This is the first time the children have been to Paris, and they seem quite unprepared for the unkind treatment they have received. Naturally I feel anxious about them, as they write in such bad spirits. By the generosity of your character I feel sure you will help them, and believe me, very gratefully yours,

ADA ——."

The address in Paris is Avenue ——. The other is staying at —— (a suburb a good way out), with the lady who has taken her in.

My having helped Mr. Hardy in a similar case in '67 was a pure myth. The letter was in substance one of many I have at different times had. It was false perhaps in one respect, but true otherwise. Unskilled writers never know how to begin, and the fiction of Hardy might have been a device for making a start. The introduction, perhaps, was meant to show a knowledge of social etiquette. I own that the story of the girl being turned out by Monsieur —— at a moment's notice, and falling into the hands of the generous lady, made my blood run cold for a moment; but what a business it would be to have a pair of girls, recklessly sent through agencies, coming to one's door. After weighing pros and cons, I felt that something should be done, and called on different persons who try to keep English girls from coming to teach English in exchange for French in Paris, and, when they are here, to keep them straight. They advised caution when told of Hardy, the agencies, and the generous lady. The "Homes" had shot out a continuous stream of damsels only fit to go to the wall. These girls wrote back to other girls about Paris. What with their letters and sparkling newspaper chit-chat about the gay city, the Paris fever was raging in England. It was heartrending to know what victims it had made. The successful few got nothing worth speaking of. Many failed—and worse than failed—through being flirty, and some through wanting to learn more than French. Frenchmen look on flirtation as a serious challenge to be audacious. They detest the girl who throws down the glove, and when it is taken up shows herself offended. Her conduct is thoroughly un-French. A play of wit or cheerfulness, with modest conduct, is enjoyed and respected. But playing with the eyes and the mine provocatrice are not. Sentiment that does not grow out of circumstances is hated. A man might think himself bound for life to a woman who attached herself to him in evil fortune, or who proved her love by attending him in small-pox. But he would look on talk borrowed from pianoforte songs as betraying a wish to throw out grappling-irons. Damages for breach of promise have no place in the Code. But an ill-used French damsel can give a man an ungalant name, or she may throw vitriol. An English girl cannot do the former, and would not do the latter. She has no redress for wounded feelings or more serious grievances. These truths cannot be too often dinned into the ears of those who suffer in England from the Paris fever.

One lady, of whom I asked counsel as one having experience, did not like Mr. Hardy and his introduction. She was for acting with caution, and told me how she was the victim of a few "plants." She was on one occasion appealed to for help by a parent writing from London. She found the daughter in fearful hands, and wrote to say so. A solicitor's letter ensued. Another lady, who with her husband goes much into "rescue" work, spoke in a similar strain. She recommended me to inform the anxious mother that there was a Girls' Friendly Union at 44, Rue de Provence. Girls of the right sort would be sure to reap advantage by going there. It might ease my mind (for I really was moved by the letter in spite of the Hardy myth) to call on Mrs. Washington and state the case to her. She is the wife of the Chaplain of the Jubilee Church here, and busies herself in seeing after English girls who have come to Paris to look for situations.

To that lady I went. She spoke warmly against the Homes, a good deal on the ground that they overcrowd the market. "Let there be no homes," she emphatically said; "let the supply be natural, and means be taken to foster friendly societies deriving strength chiefly from the efforts of the girls themselves." Mrs. Washington then read the letter, remarking, as she did so, that its author did not say whether her daughters were governesses, nursery governesses, saleswomen, or what. No information seemed to have been asked about the families the girls were sent to by the agency. When she came to the signature, she said, "Why, you must have crossed on the stairs the girl whom —— turned out suddenly. She left as you came in." "What sort of a girl is she?" "Well, I fancy one who can stand up for herself. She looked self-possessed. I shall send her to the Comtesse de ——, who was also here when you entered."

Mrs. Washington is a maîtresse femme and a magnetic woman. She is prompt, sensible, quick to read character, ready to admit extenuating circumstances when an unhappy being is sent to the wall, and agreeably chatty. She has a comely presence, a fine flush of health, gleaming teeth, and looks motherly. Her abode is a mediæval flat adjoining the Jubilee Church, and furnished in the English style. We had some further talk about English girls and their employers. French ladies, as a rule, treated their English governesses harshly. They do not show more kindness to one well qualified to teach than to an incompetent raw creature. The Comtesse to whom she proposed to send the daughter of Mrs. Ada —— was as hard and exacting as she could be. But her house was respectable, and would be a refuge while something better was being sought for. "What," I asked, "if the generous lady who took in Miss —— should turn out to be something else?" "Let the Comtesse look to that," she said. "Trust her to find out! Should the generous lady not be all right, means will be taken to give a hint to the mother, and to let her know what steps to take. But can you understand any woman in her senses sending, as the letter describes, two girls to Paris?"

Mrs. Washington said, what I already knew, that well-educated English girls are expected to eat with the servants, or to eat alone. If they do eat with the servants and do menial work, they may get good wages. Otherwise, they eat alone, and their employers contrive to get servants' work out of them. The most highly-educated is not better used than the girl who is hardly educated, or who may not possess an "h," but sets up, nevertheless, to teach. Thus the Comtesse above mentioned obtained through her a most accomplished and competent girl. She makes her eat by herself, serve as a housemaid in the bedrooms, and bathe and dress a boy of twelve every morning. Her agreement was to teach and stay with a little girl. Nothing was said of making beds, &c.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

LORD MEATH, dear Lady Betty, has contributed to the present number of the Nineteenth Century an article entitled, "Are Manners Disappearing from Great Britain?" The article has attracted much attention, and therefore it may be well to consider the subject.

The man is the raw material, the gentleman and the gentlewoman are this material polished. Or, in other words, the man is the rough stone, and the gentleman is the gem after it has been cut. Unfortunately our generation only sets store by the setting. It judges by the expensive dressing, the expensive living, the fine houses, the conspicuous equipages, the servants, the display, and the obtrusiveness of manner. Contrast this attitude with that of our fathers, who required of gentlemen and ladies that they should be unobtrusive in their behaviour, considerate for others, quiet, dignified, and gentle.

A quarter of a century ago the West End associated itself with the City, and it is no injustice to either to say that since then the West End has acquired the worst failings of the City without adopting its good qualities, whilst the City has imitated that which is worst in the West End without acquiring that which is best. In the City, in consequence of the continual and eager struggle to make money, it has become almost necessary to be truculent and selfish—to push, to bluster, and to always attempt to obtain the best of a bargain. Those members of the West End who have associated with City men have adopted these not altogether amiable customs, whilst they have not acquired the generous instincts which so many City men have. On the other hand, the City men have adopted the love for title and position which were such undesirable qualities in the West End, and they now ape and exaggerate the many silly affectations so common in this quarter of the town. All these circumstances have done much to destroy the good manners of our generation, for it must not be overlooked that the West End is and always has been the guide in the matter of manners.

Another point requires to be considered. There is an odious word that is much used now, to wit, the word "Smart." "Smart" people are merely obtrusive people. They are those whose vanity is so great, or whose social position is so small, that they feel compelled to advertise themselves continually. Their carriages are picked out with the liveliest colours, the liveries of their servants are startling, the outsides of their houses are decorated most gaily; they themselves are always dressed in the newest of clothes, their voices are loud, and in their talk they always aim to produce effect. These people play for the gallery, and therefore it is not to be wondered at that their performances are not in the best of taste. Unfortunately in these days when the newspapers give so much publicity to the doings of the obtrusive, there are many who imagine that such people set the manners, and in their ignorance they follow them. The really powerful men and women of our times are, as they have always been, simple, dignified, unobtrusive, and gentle; and if a conspicuous instance of this is required to support the assertion, the example of the Queen herself may be quoted.

The fact is, we have heard too much of "High Life Below Stairs." There is another side to the subject: to wit, "Low Life Above Stairs."

In March, 1895, it was stated in these columns that Sir Hercules Robinson would be elevated to the Peerage. The prediction has now been verified. Sir Hercules accepted the appointment of Governor of Cape Colony with much reluctance, and only upon being pressed by the Government to do so. It has been his misfortune that his second term of office at the Cape has been a period of much disturbance in the Colony, but this has been through no fault of Sir Hercules Robinson, who during the recent troubles has acted firmly and judiciously. His promotion to the Peerage will be welcomed by all as a just reward of long and admirable services to the State.

* * * * *

The results of the recent sale of the pictures and other works of art collected by the late Sir Julian Goldsmid, show that whatever the state of the money markets may be, the prices for good old pictures are steadily increasing. In most instances each article which was genuine fetched at Christie's more than Sir Julian paid for it, and this was the more remarkable, as before the sale many experts predicted that the reverse would occur. The total amount of good old pictures and works of art is limited, whilst vast markets for the sale of these have been opened in America, in Australia, and in other quarters of the globe. No better investment can be devised at the present moment than the intelligent buying of such works, for obviously, as the margin of prosperity widens throughout the world, the competition to obtain them, and therefore the prices paid for them, must increase enormously. There are several old Catholic houses in England that are filled with art treasures which have never been disturbed, and in many instances have never even been seen by the dealers. Two or three of these houses are, it is said, to be ransacked next season.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE result of the Newmarket race between the three-year-olds makes the Leger appear to be merely a question of health for St. Frusquin or Persimmon, and my own opinion is that Mr. de Rothschild's horse will be the winner at Doncaster. It is now clear that Regret is a long way from being a flyer, although the Duke of Westminster's colt is still capable of being considerably improved, but his Leger chance seems exceedingly forlorn, inasmuch as St. Frusquin and Persimmon gave him 9 lb. and 12 lb. respectively, and beat him easily. It will not surprise me if Helm ultimately turns out to be the best of the Kingsclere lot at Doncaster. Regret would probably do better over a longer distance, and I understand that he ran very "green" on Wednesday, especially in the early part of the race, but he made up his ground well when ascending the hill, and he was decidedly running on at the finish. There is, however, no reason whatever to believe that either St. Frusquin or Persimmon is deficient in stamina, although there are some quand-même admirers of Regret who vow that he will outstay his conquerors of last week at Doncaster. There is a strong notion at Newmarket that Persimmon is touched in his wind, but it must be remembered that his brother, Florizel II., has always made an odd sort of whistling noise. Wise people will leave the Leger alone for some time to come, as it may be found difficult to prepare some of the principal candidates if the ground becomes very hard, of which there is at present every prospect.

There was a direful collapse in the July Stakes, which was reduced to a match, although there were fifty-five entries, on each of which a forfeit of £30 had to be paid. Monterey considerably disappointed his friends, who had quite expected that he would make a much better fight with Velasquez than he did at Ascot. Minstrel, who won the Fulbourne Stakes for the Duke of Devonshire (as I had predicted would be the case), is a very nice colt indeed, and he ought to secure the Hurstbourne Stakes at Stockbridge to-morrow. He would have been reserved for the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park, but for the unfortunate fact that he was struck out of that race when a foal, an error of judgment on the part of somebody or other which his owner now has substantial reasons for regretting.

The Newmarket sales were only remarkable for the outrageously extravagant prices which were paid in many cases. Last year Sir Tatton Sykes could have bought La Flêche for £10,000, but at Newmarket she fetched 12,600 gs., and her filly foal by Morion was run up to 3,100 gs. If Sir Tatton had purchased the mare last year he would have got the foal as well, which she was then carrying. The price paid for La Flêche was preposterous, for not only is she likely to prove a "shy" breeder, but her own sister Memoir has so far proved a complete failure at the stud, like so many other mares which have eminently distinguished themselves on the turf—notably Wheel of Fortune, Jannette, Marie Stuart, Gamos, Brigantine, Formosa, and Corisande.

Of the late Baron's two-year-olds the best sold animal was Ste. Adresse, the own sister of Raconteur and Childwick, who cost 2,300 gs. as a yearling, but now fetched 2,800 gs., being purchased for Mr. Barnato, whose agent would have done better to have secured Chantilly (sister to Kirkconnel), who was very much cheaper at 1,900 gs., as she is a most promising and racing-like filly. The bargain of the lot was Altesse, by Amphion, who cost 2,700 gs. at Doncaster last September, but now Jewitt secured her for only 530 gs. She wants time.

By the way, Raconteur ran so fast for three-quarters of a mile in the Princess of Wales's Stakes that he certainly ought to win a T.Y.C. handicap before long, and he may be a dangerous candidate for the Stewards' Cup.

The programme of the Second July Meeting (which takes up three days next week) is not very interesting; and the Chesterfield Stakes seems to be such a certainty for Goletta that this race may collapse like the July Stakes, although there are forty-nine entries. Goletta had no difficulty in defeating Eager and Chelandry in the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, so she must beat them again here. As all meet at even weights, Bay Ronald, having all the allowances, ought to win the Midsummer Plate of £1,000, unless Roquebrune is in form, and she was going well enough the other day. Gulistan may win the Zetland Plate, unless Shaddock is sent to Newmarket. There are fifty-four entries for the Soltykoff Stakes of £300, the best of the lot being Stewarton.

The late M. Lefevre had a comet-like career on the English turf, and he has left his monument at Newmarket in the shape of Sefton Lodge, as he built that house and laid out the grounds in 1872, the place being sold three years later to Mr. Stirling Craufurd, who is buried there, just outside the memorial chapel which was erected by the late Dowager Duchess of Montrose as a sepulchre for her second husband and for herself. M. Lefevre had a hundred horses in training at Newmarket at one time, and his colours were very successful in all kinds of races, the combination of T. Jennings and Fordham, on a basis of unlimited expenditure, being highly felicitous. If M. Lefevre had flourished in these days of £10,000 stakes, his winnings would have been enormous. He bought all the best of Count Lagrange's horses when the war of 1870 broke out, and in 1871 he made his début on the English turf racing under the name of "Mr. T. Lombard." In his very first season M. Lefevre won the Ascot Cup with Mortemer, and several important stakes with Vulcan. His large stud, the reputation of unbounded wealth, lavish hospitality both at his Newmarket house and on the Heath, and a Monte Cristo-like habit of making valuable presents to persons whom it was worth his while to conciliate, admitted M. Lefevre very speedily into the upper region of turf society. At the close of the first racing season he expressed a wish to acknowledge the kindness of the sporting press, and a distribution of cases of wine and of banknotes took place. M. Lefevre, however, was not so much delighted with the sporting papers eighteen months later, when the Sportsman so vigorously attacked T. Jennings after the defeat of Flageolet in the Two Thousand, that the trainer commenced an action for libel, which at the last moment ended in a hugger-mugger sort of compromise, to the infinite disappointment of the turf world, which had anticipated some remarkable revelations if the case had come on for trial, and they would not have been disappointed. M. Lefevre left England abruptly in 1875, in consequence of the proceedings of the Foreign Loans Committee, and for some years his horses ran in the name of Count Lagrange; but he afterwards returned to this country, and his colours were again seen, Tristan being his best horse in the later days of his career. M. Lefevre had made a huge fortune out of the Honduras Loan, but he could not leave well alone, and his connection with the Panama undertakings cost him the bulk of his wealth, so that some eight years ago his stud was dispersed, and the splendid domain of Chamant was sold to M. Menier, the chocolate manufacturer. At one time M. Lefevre owned the finest lot of brood mares that ever were collected in a single stud. Chamant was the best horse he bred, and this animal would have walked in for the Derby and St. Leger of 1877 but for his breaking down after he had won the Two Thousand in a canter. Lord Falmouth, who then won the Derby and Leger with Silvio, considered that his own horse was nearly a stone behind Chamant, who was afterwards sold to the German Government. M. Lefevre was exceedingly fortunate in his horse-dealing transactions, for he over and over again sold both sires and mares at an immense profit. One of his most remunerative deals was his purchase of Tristan as a yearling from the late Lord Rosslyn. Tristan won the Ascot Cup and many other rich races, his career on the turf being both very profitable and unusually prolonged, and he was finally sold to the late Dowager Duchess of Montrose for 20,000 gs. Whatever may have been M. Lefevre's commercial irregularities, he was as "straight" as the late Lord Falmouth himself on the turf, and he never betted, but raced for stakes only.

Twenty-six horses are left in for the Eclipse Stakes of £10,000, which event will be the principal race of next week. It is unlucky that Persimmon is not engaged in the race, in which he would have met St. Frusquin at even weights, each having 10 lb. extra to carry. On last week's running Mr. de Rothschild's colt holds everything in the list quite safe, the possible starters including Kirkconnel and Laveno (each 10 lb. extra), Troon, Galeazzo, and Raconteur (each 7 lb. extra), Bay Ronald (there are no maiden allowances in this race), and Regret. M. E. Blanc is represented by Rêveur, by Clover out of Rêveuse, a colt that might be dangerous if he appeared at the post, and he is also engaged in the St. Leger. St. Frusquin gave Regret 9 lb. and a very easy beating at Newmarket, so that he should find no difficulty next week in defeating the Duke of Westminster's colt at 10 lb., the distance being practically the same.

The National Breeders' Produce Stakes at Sandown Park is worth £5,000, and it is the most valuable two-year-old race of the season. The Kempton Park events have been cut down to £3,000 each, and next to them comes the Prince of Wales's Post Sweepstakes at Goodwood, which will be worth £2,800. This last race will be one of the most important and interesting two-year-old races of the season if it brings out Velasquez and Goletta, who would meet at weight for sex.

Velasquez will have to carry 9 lb. extra if he runs at Sandown Park, whereas her stable companion, Chelandry, has 4 lb. only of extra weight, her penalty being thus reduced by a breeding allowance of 5 lb. The entries include Mr. R. Walker's Galata and the Duke of Portland's Smean (who failed so grievously at Sandown Park the other day), as the best known of the public lot. I expect, however, that the winner of the race will come from the dark division, which includes several animals of high reputation, such as the Duke of Westminster's Simoon, by St. Simon out of Shotover; Mr. D. Baird's Briseis, by Galopin out of Briar-root; Lord Cadogan's Lowly, by Common out of Lonely; and Mr. Houldsworth's Rapallo, own brother to Laveno and Orvieto. Captain Machell's colt Alfar (nominated by Mr. Blake), has been reserved for this event since his defeat in the New Stakes at Ascot. Alfar met Velasquez in that race at even weights, but now he will have an advantage of 7 lb. Captain Machell's colt has earned a penalty of 9 lb., but this is reduced to 2 lb. through his being entitled to a double breeding allowance of 7 lb. My own idea as to this race is that the most dangerous opponent of Velasquez will be Simoon, as a very high opinion is entertained at Kingsclere of this grandly-bred filly, and Lord Rosebery's colt may not be able to give her 9 lb.

It is quite possible that Velasquez may not run at Sandown Park, having much the worst of the weight in the race there. Considering how heavily he is engaged it would be better policy for Lord Rosebery to keep his colt for the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Goodwood and for the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, there being neither penalties nor allowances in those races. Chelandry, who was suffering from the effects of her two races on the hard ground at Epsom when she reached Ascot, might be able to win the Sandown Stakes with only 4 lb. extra to carry; but I shall have something more to say next week about the race. There were originally 259 subscriptions, and the entry fills nine pages of the "Book Calendar."

There ought to be some capital sport at Lingfield on Friday and Saturday, as there are good entries for the principal events in the programme. There are sixty-four acceptances for the Great Foal Plate of £1,000, and Brigg ought to win, as he is favoured with a breeding allowance of 13 lb. The Prince of Wales's Cup of £1,000 (one mile) has twenty-two left in, and Faversham is nicely weighted.

Lord Lonsdale's racing and breeding stud is to be sold off at Newmarket next Monday. There are forty-seven lots in the catalogue, including all the mares, foals, yearlings, and stallions which Lord Lonsdale recently purchased from General Owen Williams.

There was practically only one cricket match last week, and that was between the two Universities. So far as Oxford is concerned it was Barnes Bridge and the boat race over again. They played a great up-hill game and they won a great match against an undeniably great batting team. And the irony of fate was well illustrated. Up to the very last minute Smith's place was in jeopardy, and yet it was he who won the match. In a long innings he only made one mistake, and that a hard cut right to Druce in the slips. If that catch had been caught, or if Raikes had been chosen, there might have been a different story to tell. Mitchell can scarcely be congratulated on his captaincy. Everybody was laughing about the incident of Trott's bowling, and yet there was Jessop knocking batsmen and wicket-keeper to pieces with bumping balls, which Pilkington and Smith in the second innings carefully sent round to leg. It was wretched stuff to call bowling. Cobbold, the last choice, gave the batsmen more bother than any other bowler. Not one of the Cambridge bowlers was a patch on either Cunliffe or Hartley, whose slow, high, hanging balls it was perfectly ridiculous for Jessop to run and smite at. It is curious to note how well the Association footballers played. Burnup was as certain and confident as a professional, and he saved a rot in the first innings; while Bray, although a lot knocked about, played two excellent innings; and of Smith I have already spoken. Druce also batted well, but he missed two catches badly. As for the Dark Blues, their display in the second innings was past all praise. Warner twice foolishly ran himself out, and of the others Leveson-Gower, Pilkington, and Bardswell played exactly the right game. They took no liberties with the bowling. But there was no mistake about their hitting when they got the chance.

The conduct of the general public and of the members in the pavilion was perfectly scandalous when Mitchell prevented Oxford following on. It would have been a disgrace at a football league match, and it cannot be too strongly condemned in the case of members of the M.C.C. Strangers are not introduced to the pavilion on the days of the match, and therefore the members must bear the brunt of their ungentlemanly conduct. If it was the right policy not to let Oxford follow on, Mitchell was perfectly justified in what he did. There is the authority of Mr.

Borwick's Baking Powder. Pure & wholesome, assists digestion.
Borwick's Baking Powder. Guaranteed to be free from alum.
Borwick's Baking Powder. It has the largest sale in the world.

A. J. Webbe for this proposition. The rules of the game are simple, and they were not violated. He did no more than a billiard player does in giving a miss in baulk, or than Mordaunt did in letting a ball go to the boundary for four, when, if he had fielded it, the batsman would have run five. Mitchell was clearly mistaken in his tactics. A follow-on is a demoralising procedure, and the wicket improved as the game went on. Perhaps the Daily Graphic young lady had misled him, and he took a wrong view of what the weather would be.

As to the other matches, Somerset played miserably against Gloucester, who have to thank Grace and Townsend for an easy win. The champion bowled and batted brilliantly, and the younger player, besides batting well, showed some of his old form with the ball. The fact that Stoddart was in form was the chief cause of a hard-won victory by Middlesex over Lancashire, while a very good innings by Mason was wasted against Notts, for none of the other Kent bats gave him any help. A most satisfactory feature of the Australian play has been the fact that both Iredale and McKibbin have been in form for practically the first time during the tour. By again beating Yorkshire, the Colonials showed they are a really strong team. Haigh's bowling should get him a permanent place in the county team. Derby played a good uphill game against Yorkshire, and Storer was again responsible for a big score. Those who expect Essex to be well up the county list seem to have some justification for their hopes, for Warwick were easily beaten, Perrin and Carpenter batting well.

The suspension of Downer, Bradley, Bacon, and others, coupled with the amateur athletic championships which were held at Northampton last Saturday, affords an excellent opportunity for considering the present position of amateur athletics. This consideration is all the more necessary because last year, after the visit to America, a certain number of our leading athletes waxed exceeding wroth over the system that was pursued in that country. Others remembered the proverb about glass houses, and saw that the Americans had in the light of day worked to perfection a system of practices which in this country are indulged in secretly. They openly took athletes and housed and trained them at the public expense. Here well-known runners take good sums for expenses, and make a good thing out of it. So long as they run in good enough form to draw a paying crowd, the club that holds the sports is quite prepared to give the fee that is asked for expenses. A gate is necessary to clear expenses, and with this end in view those who organise meetings lure the promising athlete from the paths of virtue. The athlete's position is a difficult one. Too often he is a man of small means. The expenses of journeying about to different meetings, of going to training grounds, and of entrance fees, makes a big hole in his pocket if he is going in for running as a recreation. It is, therefore, well-nigh impossible to expect that the majority of the runners will not make a little by betting; if they are good enough, by having their expenses paid; and if they are a bit better, it is ridiculous to suppose they will refuse a nice round fee for out-of-pockets. Now, if runners are suspended for these practices, it is perfectly clear that the clubs that have paid them must be known. These clubs and the persons who made the payments should also be hauled over the coals. It would indeed be interesting to see where the inquiry would end. The Universities and a few Metropolitan and Provincial clubs would alone be left. The A.A.A. has shown that it is not afraid to strike in high quarters, but it is to be feared that its action will have little effect. The question is how far can steps be taken to prevent such evils recurring. That they are bound to crop up from time to time is apparent to any one who knows anything about athletics, and it is equally obvious that it is impossible to find a final solution of the amateur question. No system of laws ever compelled every one in a State to be good. If all were good there would be no need for laws. The same principle applies to amateur athletics. All that one can hope to do is to find some methods of improving the existing conditions. A correspondent has suggested what appears to be a very practical and far-reaching remedy. He proposes that the value of prizes should be considerably reduced, and then the costs of holding athletic meetings would be materially lessened, and the necessity of a big gate and the temptation to pay fees to pseudo amateurs would be diminished. These considerations are certainly of some value. What policy the A.A.A. intend to pursue remains to be seen.

The high wind spoiled the times for the championships. It is absurd to suppose that Meredith of Dublin University is really better than Fitzherbert. Great credit is due to the Irishman for winning, but it is a pity both for the sake of his University and for amateur sport in this country, that the Light Blue had not trained properly. It is a pity also that Jordan was not running. Godfrey Shaw, with a gale behind him, cut all records for the hurdles. Leggatt (St. Mary's Hospital) did an excellent long jump. Horgan, an Irishman, won the weight for the fourth year, and Morgan, from the same country, won the final of the 100 yards against representatives from England, Wales, and Scotland. King, of the Royal Engineers, got the half after a splendid race with Cullum, while the mile, though slow in time, was only won by Lawford from Wellin in the last fifty yards. Sturgess walked with scrupulous fairness, and won the race in record time. There was a pleasant little meeting at Erith, and the sprint, being run down hill, was won in very fast time by Cape. At Beckenham there was a large attendance, and some good racing. It is a pity there are not a few more meetings like these round London.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The half year is now turned, and supplies in the Money Market are so excessive that rates are again becoming quite nominal. The surplus funds must find an outlet somehow or other, and I am confirmed in the view which I have taken for some time, that we may shortly expect a fresh outburst of speculation in the various Mining markets, while the other departments must necessarily benefit.

Holidays and Business.

The one influence which is retarding the revival is that of the holiday season. Ascot Races have done their share to keep the markets in check, and this week Henley Regatta will be a weakening influence; while, later on, both members of the Stock Exchange and the public will take more protracted holidays. Yet I am not at all sure that these vacations will to any extent interfere with the greater activity which appears to be justified by general conditions. Last year we had a regular boom, during what generally is called the dead season, and there appears to be more reason this year why the holidays should be to some extent disregarded. I hear, in fact, that some of the big men in the House are making special arrangements, so as not to be left out of the movement when it takes place. Already we have a sharp advance in the Home Railway market, especially in the stocks of the Heavy division, chiefly owing to the announcement of the proposed splitting of Midland stock; and with the declarations of dividends the increased animation is likely to spread over the whole of this department. The American market must unfortunately for some time be ruled by the conflicting reports concerning the Presidential election and the currency question; but even in this case some support has been forthcoming; and there has been more business in the London market than for some time past, although the buying appears to have been of American origin. Contangoes in Paris ruled much lighter at the settlement than had been anticipated, and it is probable therefore that at a given moment French operators will also join the buying movement. I do not see how they can find much to tempt them in interbourse securities at present prices; but in South Americans there is still a margin for further improvement, and recent "Bear" sales of Uruguay bonds in connection with the new loan have apparently paved the way to a "Bear" squeeze, which may at a given moment enliven the whole of this section. Prospects of the Industrial market are also favourable; although the flotation of new Companies, especially in the cycle section, is excessive, and likely to lead to deplorable results in the end. I have already expressed the opinion that promoters and vendors are piling up monstrously high capitals on a number of these concerns. All these various considerations point to the strong probability that South African, West Australian, New Zealand, and other mines will in the near future receive greater attention, and that these will attract a large portion of the capital which cannot be profitably employed through other channels. There is, moreover, every justification for such a movement. We are no longer confined to the inferior or wild-cat American mining companies, which alone seemed to constitute the mining department some ten or fifteen years ago, but there is a choice of investments in high class South African mines, the yield of which can be calculated to a nicety, while in Western Australia, in New Zealand, and in India, goldfields of exceptional merit are being developed, and offer every prospect of large profits and good dividends. The position in South Africa is improving as far as the Transvaal is concerned, and labour on the Rand is becoming abundant. If half the energy which is being devoted to market operations in Chartered shares were to be applied to substantial Transvaal shares, we should already have a fresh upward movement in such properties, and there is no reason why these should not in the near future shake themselves free from the weakening influence which the troubles in Rhodesia have exerted. Even now, efforts are evidently being made by insiders to rig the Chartered market, in anticipation of some new issue which becomes imperative, in order to keep the Chartered Company going, as the expenses entailed by the war in Matabeleland and Mashonaland are estimated at from £200,000 to £300,000 a month. A further advance in Chartered is, therefore, quite on the cards, and although I cannot, under any circumstances, advise their purchase, I think that "Bear" sales would, at the present juncture, be very imprudent. In West Australian mines a very extensive shake-out has taken place, and there are now indications of a revival, not only in the group of the West Australian Joint Stock Trust, which has shown a strong front throughout, but also in the Whitaker-Wright group, in which the flotation of the new Lake View Company has been attended with signal success. That the Stoneham group will soon follow suit is also probable, in view of the splendid West Australian Goldfields' report just issued. In New Zealand mines there has been excessive promotion of more or less doubtful Companies; but there are also prizes in this section, and, by careful selection, promising purchases can also be made amongst Indian mines, and amongst properties situate in several of the other Australian colonies.

HOME RAILS BUOYANT.

I expressed the opinion last week that, with the continuation of satisfactory traffics, and the approach of dividend announcements, Home Railway stocks would brace up; and so it has happened. It is true that exaggerated rumours with reference to the difficulties between the colliery owners and the Midland and Great Northern Companies caused temporary dulness; but I am not at all sure that these troubles were not purposely represented as far more serious than they are, in order to enable insiders with privileged information concerning the splitting of Midlands, to pick up cheap stock. There was some significant buying several days before the announcement, which distinctly points in this direction, and is not very creditable to those who held the key of the secret. It is understood that the proposed sub-division of Midland stock will be compulsory. Under this scheme, the present Four per Cent. Rent Charge Guaranteed and Preference stock will be exchanged for Two and Half per Cent. Preferred stock, in ratio of £160 of new for £100 of existing stocks, and the Consolidated Ordinary stock will be converted into Preferred and Deferred Ordinary stocks, each £100 of present Ordinary stock receiving £100 of Two and a Half per Cent. Preferred, and £100 of Deferred. Midlands, on the announcement, rose to 173, and are but little lower now; and there has also been an advance of several points in North-Western, Great Western, and North-Eastern, the view being taken that the Boards of these Companies will be encouraged to the splitting of their own stocks through the Midland taking the lead. There will probably be a further rise in all these stocks; but it must not be forgotten that the operation cannot be carried out for some time, and that in the meantime adverse circumstances might arise in the railway position, which would thus come on a top-heavy market. Some degree of caution would, therefore, appear advisable, the more so as quotations are already very high. Brighton "A" have been steady, and will doubtless go better in anticipation of the dividend announcement. The South-Eastern revenue statement was satisfactory, and showed that up to June 13 there was a gain in net earnings of £41,889. This no doubt means that the dividend for the first half of the current year will be at the rate of 3 per cent., or ¾ per cent. more than last year, with a proportionate increase in the amount standing to the credit of the Deferred (Dover "A"). The latter should, under the circumstances, have every prospect of a further advance on the present quotation of 102¼. Another rise in Metropolitans has also been a feature. The Scotch section has at times been very strong, Caledonian Deferred Ordinary (Coras) being up at 63¼, reacting, however, to 62⅜ on unconfirmed rumours of coming trouble in the coal trade. I look forward to an advance in North British Deferred, which have not moved up to the same extent, being quoted 51. Dividend anticipations as regards the Great Eastern appear to be somewhat less favourable, hence the decline; but upon the whole I see no reason for departing from my estimates of the 11th ult.

YANKEE MACHINATIONS.

The American Market has continued in an unsettled state, and although a portion of the decline which set in early in the week has been recovered, the outlook is still very much involved, and the see-saw must necessarily continue until it is possible to judge more accurately of the probable result of the Presidential campaign. It is now pretty certain that the Republican platform at the Chicago Convention will hold out certain hopes to the Silverites; but the latter appear by no means content with half a loaf, and there will be a severe fight over the gold "plank." Object lessons are, of course, being administered to the American people by the sharp fluctuations in prices of Yankee Rails, and some of the sharp falls which recently followed news in favour of silver were evidently engineered by the big American financiers. It does not suit the latter, however, to let prices drop too low; and there were strong indications that during the last few days American buying orders came into the market on this side, with the object, no doubt, partly to produce the impression in the States that the public were buying in London. This is, however, quite a mistake. Public interest in Yankee Rails in this country is for the present as dead as door-nails, and will not revive until a gold basis has been decided upon by the American people. Should that desirable event come about, we may see a strong revival. In the meantime, such information as is supplied by some of my Wall-street contemporaries, as pointing to the re-establisment of confidence in American Rails on this side, is quite fallacious. The following extract from the Wall-street Daily News, which is credited to the London correspondent of Messrs. Charles Barney & Co., the well-known Philadelphia bankers, however, fairly represents the position here:—

> Things have been booming here in English rails for some time past, and people who have had their capital tied up for so many years since the Baring failure in Argentine stocks, are beginning to see their money back. Consequently confidence is returning, and if only there was confidence in the currency question in the States, I feel sure we would have the boom extending to American rails. Money is a glut here, and if the political atmosphere will keep moderately clear I think there will be an enormous boom in stocks. It would be a great thing if the currency question was settled, so that we could participate.

The mere adoption of a gold "plank" by the St. Louis Convention is, however, not likely to set the Britishers tumbling over one another to buy Yankee Rails. A very satisfactory Milwaukee traffic has acted as a support of this stock, which, with Louisville, has fairly held its own. Canadian Pacifics have improved to 63⅛, chiefly on the announcement that this Road has come to an agreement with the Joint Traffic Association, although this merely appears to be tentative, and for six months only. Grand Trunks have at last had a satisfactory weekly traffic increase, and the impression is growing that this Road is turning the corner.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

Interbourse securities have been fairly steady, and the predictions of a general collapse on the Paris Bourse on heavy contangoes at the end of June settlement have been falsified. On the contrary, rates have been light, no doubt because this suited the haute finance for the purpose of the copper speculation, and of the carrying-out of other projects which they have on the board. Even the carry-over in Mining shares was much easier than had been anticipated, in view of the report that such facilities would be altogether withdrawn in Paris. I stated at the time that this must be unreliable news, as, for instance, the Robinson Bank and several other institutions have continued to lend large sums. Turks have been weak, and a sharp decline has taken place in Ottoman Banks, the Directors' Report being very discouraging. Spanish and Italians have been well maintained. As regards Argentine stocks, there is no doubt that the recent rise has been somewhat overdone; but a satisfactory feature is undoubtedly the fall in the gold premium in Buenos Ayres to 182½. In the meantime particulars of the modified form of the unification scheme are still wanted, although it is rumoured that a prompt decision is to be come to by Congress. A strong effort has been made by the ursine party to depress Uruguay bonds, in connection with the issue of the new loan, and large sales were effected by somebody or other of the old loan down to 49¾, and of the new loan down to 2½ discount; from which there has been a recovery to 51 and 1¼ discount respectively. This ursine selling was a dangerous proceeding, and I have little doubt but that the "Bears" will be severely punished. It is well known that the new loan was influentially underwritten; and it may well be that the experience of the last Mexican loan will be repeated, which at the time of issue fell to a considerable discount, and now stands some twenty-five points higher. The security of the new Uruguay Loan is ample, and the service of the debt has already commenced, as Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie and Co. have received advice from the London and River Plate Bank at Monte Video that the Government have deposited with them 38,000 dols. on account of the service of the new Five per Cent. Loan during June, and that future contributions will be received from the Customs day by day. The Government have also remitted £33,900 for the service of the old Loan. Under the circumstances, the new Five per Cent. Uruguayan Loan, yielding as it does over 7 per cent. per annum, is a very promising purchase, and is particularly suitable for investors, who will gradually have funds becoming available, as £25 was payable on application and allotment, while £25 per cent. is due only on August 15, and £21. 10s. per cent. on September 30. Another new issue which is now being made is that of a new Chilian Five per Cent. Loan of four millions sterling, at 95½. This is issued by Messrs. Rothschild, the agents of the Chilian Government, and two millions will merely be utilised for taking up Treasury Bills now in circulation. Brazilians have been rather dull, and there has been hardly any business in Peruvian Corporation stocks. Mexicans have been firm. I see, by the way, from the mail news, that on the re-nomination of President Diaz for a fifth term of his important position, great demonstrations were made in the City of Mexico in honour of the popular President. This is not surprising, especially as General Diaz has inculcated the principles of national honesty into the Mexicans, and thus rendered his country an inestimable service. If only the Presidents of such disreputable Spanish-American Republics as Costa Rica, Ecuador, Columbia and Honduras, would take a leaf out of the book of this honest and honourable man!

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS GATHERING STRENGTH.

The chief feature in the Kaffir Circus has been the semi-official announcement that some new issue will be made in the immediate future by the Chartered Company, and, strange to relate, these reports coincided with a sharp upward movement in Chartered shares to 3 7/16, while prophecies are being indulged in of a rise to 4. This apparent contradiction may, however, be explained by the necessity in which those connected with the Chartered Company find themselves of raising the price of the shares in order to engineer such an issue successfully. If Chartered were flat at 2⅞ the public could certainly not be got in. With Chartered at 4, and a firm front shown in the face of all the difficulties surrounding the Company, there might be a possibility of unloading down to 3, so that the underwriters of the issue at 2½ would still reap a large profit. Latest reports are to the effect that a Debenture issue of £1,250,000, carrying 5 per cent. interest, and repayable in 1920, or at the option of the Company at 105, subject to six months' notice, is about to be made. I do not pretend to be in the secrets of the Chartered Company, or of the active spirits who manipulate these shares, and who appear to be ever able to do anything they like with them. The one thing is certain, that the Company wants money for the purpose of both paying indemnities to the settlers and of defraying the very heavy war expenses, which are, as I have already stated, estimated at from £200,000 to £300,000 per month. The indemnity to the Transvaal Government is also looming in the distance, and thus a very heavy bill has to be paid. But if some of the reports which are current are correct, the insiders are equal to the occasion. According to one rumour, Mr. Alfred Beit is prepared to guarantee a million at 2½. According to other reports a Debenture issue will be made; and with it all, the report is spread that there is a big "Bear" account, and that a man prominently connected with the Company is a "Bear" of 40,000 shares. I should not be one wit surprised if, when Chartered shares were last rigged up to 4, some of the insiders had sold "Bears" against their holdings in anticipation of those further requirements of capital which they knew at the time would very soon come upon the Company. However this may be, more Chartered capital has to be found, and the insiders have sufficiently enriched themselves, and are wily enough to obtain the money somehow from the public. I do not advise any one to sell "Bears" of Chartered shares, and still less would I encourage my readers to invest in them. My only interest in Chartered is from the point of view of the effect of their manipulation upon the South African market generally. It is a pity that some of the big financiers connected with the Transvaal do not concentrate that same energy upon their own groups which Chartered manipulators are directing to their Company. If the Chartered wirepullers succeed in facing their troubles successfully, how much more would not a substantial rally in sound Transvaal gold mining shares be justified? It is true that a few dividend disappointments, with regard to the results of the first half of 1896, have to be put up with, but the exceptional nature of the difficulties under which the mines on the Witwatersrand laboured during that period is obvious, and there is every reason for disregarding these now and looking to the future. Some of the announcements are not, moreover, by any means unfavourable. The Ferreira pays a dividend at the rate of 125 per cent. for the half year, which is in excess of estimates.

CHEQUE BANK SHARES.—We have special business in these and other Miscellaneous Securities for safe investment. Buyers now of CHEQUE BANK SHARES are entitled to the 10 per cent. dividend just declared.—FREDK. PERTWEE & Co., 69, Lombard-st., E.C.

On the other hand, the Robinson shareholders have to be satisfied with a 5s. dividend, against 8s. for the second half of 1895; and the Jubilee pays 10 per cent. for the three months, instead of 20 per cent. for the previous quarter; while the various Barnato dividends are still pending, with the exception of that of the Johannesburg Waterworks, which is again at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum. But, as I have said, it is of no use looking back upon the disasters of the half-year, which were entirely created by the unfortunate and fateful Jameson raid. Labour conditions are greatly improved, and there is even a chance of the Transvaal Government making some of those concessions, with reference to monopolies and excessive duties, which are so urgently wanted by the mining industry. At all events, Mr. Chamberlain appears to have replied to President Kruger's last reminder in a very conciliatory manner, and thus the Boers have no longer any excuse for withholding reasonable concessions. As regards holdings which my readers may have in Witwatersrand and other sound Transvaal properties, I repeat my advice to them to stick tight to all their shares, and, if possible, to average the same, if they can take the shares up. As regards further purchases, I uphold my previous recommendations. In the first instance, among the Barnato group, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, Barnato Banks, New Primrose, Glencairn, Buffelsdoorn, Barnato Consols, and Rietfontein should be bought, while all the other Barnato stocks should distinctly be held. I have received this week several inquiries from correspondents who wish to know whether I think that Johnnies will improve. I say distinctly they will, and I am rather surprised that they should ask this question, as I have already expressed this opinion. In Buffelsdoorn, by the way, there has already been a recovery, due, I am told, to private cables stating that the reef has been struck in the main shaft at a depth of 900 ft. It is stated to have been proved for 30 ft. going down further, that its average width is 4½ ft., and the average assay value is 1½ oz. to the ton, which is distinctly encouraging. Temporary dulness of the Robinson group has been followed by a firmer tone. I need hardly repeat that I anticipate a very considerable improvement in all these shares under the lead of Randfontein; and the other shares of this group, which should in time command a much higher price, are Langlaagte Estate, Block "B," Langlaage Star, Block "A" Randfontein, Langlaagte Building and Exploration, Randfontein Mynpacht, and last, but not least, Robinson Banks. A very important announcement has been made with reference to an amalgamation by which the Oceana Company will join forces with the Africana and Austral-African Companies, a new Company being formed under the name of the Oceana Consolidated. The strong point of this amalgamation is that no further capital is required or raised, but that by a combination of the three concerns a powerful corporation is created, disposing of large cash assets, and thoroughly able to undertake some of the big operations connected with South Africa which will present themselves in the near future. The Oceana, with its large holding of land and mineral interests in the Transvaal, in Portuguese East Africa, and in Central Africa, has, according to the official statement, also £90,000 of cash and liquid assets to bring into the combination, and will receive one Oceana Consolidated for each of the present shares. The Austral-African will receive similar treatment, and the fact that it contributes to the amalgamation, in addition to important financial interests, about £240,000 in cash and liquid assets, fully justifies the position of equality upon which it is put with the old Oceana. The Africana brings in its Johannesburg assets and business, and £180,000 in cash and liquid assets, the shareholders receiving one Oceana Consolidated share for two Africanas. The two latter Companies have a very powerful Paris and London backing, and transact finance business, which has in the past yielded good returns; while, on the other hand, the Oceana Company's large landed properties have to be nursed, and will in the next few years attain a very much higher value, especially in view of the various lines of railway projected in the Transvaal, amongst which the Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway will pass very close to a number of Oceana farms. The Oceana Company has also a controlling voice in the Mozambique Company, which should come prominently to the front. Two or three Directors of each of the three Companies will constitute the new Board, and energetic and skilful management may, therefore, be anticipated. Africana shares stand at ¾, Austral-African at 1½, Oceana at 1$\frac{11}{16}$, and my readers can therefore easily calculate what these will be worth on the completion of the new arrangement. Mr. F. C. Bell's letter concerning the Africander Company appears to have been a bombshell amongst the London Directors of this hitherto very silent Company. They have burst out into comments in the Press, asserting that Mr. Bell's statements are incorrect; but why do they not correct these, instead of continuing to keep the shareholders in the dark? I am told that only last September the Johannesburg Local Board requested Mr. Bell to proceed to Klerksdorp to report on the mine. He handed in the report which was sent to the London Board, who in their discretion withheld its contents from the shareholders. Why do not the London Directors speak out? Nickerk shares have been actively dealt in at from 1¼ to 1$\frac{5}{16}$, and look like going better. Sheba Hill have been firm up to 3s. 3d., and there is every prospect of an improvement. The African Gold Properties appear to have got hold of a first-class thing in Landau's Collieries, the possibilities of which are considerable. Another of its ventures, the Randt Gold Mining Company, is turning out well, and the shares are being quietly bought on Johannesburg account. French investors are well inclined to African Gold Properties shares, and in times of activity this may prove a lever in taking up the price. The Violet Consolidated has been a very disappointing mine. It was brought out at a time when the slump in South Africans was already imminent, and it is greatly to be hoped that the sanguine statements contained in the interim report will be borne out by results. Some independent report on the property would be desirable. Doornkops are in the dumps, as the favourable forecasts indulged in on the introduction of the shares in the London market have been altogether falsified. The issue of Simmer and Jack debentures, to which I referred last week as very promising, has been a great success, the amount being applied for ten times over, and they are now quoted at a premium. Rand Reefs have been firm at 13s. 6d. on the issue of a report by Mr. J. G. Bowles, M.E., the engineer and manager, who has just arrived in London to consult the Board on the future development of the mine, in which he confirms his previous statement that there are five gold-bearing parallel reefs on the claims, which, he now says, carry payable ore. The Chairman of the Geldenhuis Main Reef Company has been trying to put a good face upon the mine at the annual meeting on May 28, and calculates its life at nearer fifteen years than ten. This assuredly is a mistake, and I maintain the unfavourable view of the mine which I expressed a few weeks ago, when the shares were quoted much higher. The African Review asks the question why the New Midas Estate Company, which started crushing on March 26, has not yet declared any output? That is what all the shareholders would like to be informed upon. Some of my readers wish to know what Mr. Woolan will do now with regard to African Estates, as Messrs. Ephrussi have not exercised their option. Perhaps Mr. Woolan will oblige with the information? The Rooderand Main Reef Directors appear to have gone to allotment, which is all the worse for the shareholders. How, in all conscience, any promoter could be foolhardy enough to form a Company with a capital of half a million for working Rhodesian claims in the present state of things, passes all comprehension; yet that appears to be the case of the White's Consolidated Company, which acquires the assets of various syndicates, with which Lord Henry Paulet and Captain the Hon. C. J. White are connected. Another flotation, which appears to be very mal à propos, is that of the Matabele Sheba Claims, capital £100,000. Diamond shares have been strong, the satisfactory results of the working of the De Beers and Jagersfontein mines encouraging purchases of other diamond shares which are coming on, such as the New Bulfontein and Leicester Diamond Companies, both of which are likely to prove very successful. Some of my readers would like to hear a little more about Kamfersdam Diamond shares, now quoted about ¼ premium. Perhaps the authorities will oblige?

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

Although business in the West Australian market during the past week has again been comparatively small, and prices have for the most part given way, there are indications that a change is coming over the scene. It is the policy adopted by a good many experienced men who have to take care of market movements to allow quotations to slide away for a time so as to shake out the weak holders, and to be able to bring about a sharp upward movement without having to take with them the small punters who cling to the fringe of the market. This seems to apply more especially to the Whitaker-Wright group, in which, after temporary inactivity, a period of animation will probably be ushered in by the appearance of the shares in the new Lake View Consols on the market. The Company has been formed under the auspices of the London and Globe Finance and the West Australian Exploring and Finance Companies and the shares were introduced on the market on Thursday, opening at £3 and rising with very few shares changing hands to 4⅜. In an interview which I had with the Managing Director the latter expressed the view that this is only the prelude to a fresh advance, which will eventually put the price up to £8 or £9. The property of the Company, the Lake View and Boulder East, is the first and largest of West Australian dividend payers, and Mr. Charles Kaufman, the consulting engineer, who has thoroughly examined the mine, reports that there is £3,000,000 of ore exposed in the lowest level, so that on this statement alone the shares would be worth from £10 to £12 each. It is, so far, the richest mine in Western Australia, and a cablegram has been received that, in seven days with ten stamps 185 tons have been crushed for 693 oz. of gold, so that a monthly output of £12,000 worth of gold is anticipated. Amongst other mines of this group the Mainland Consols is now crushing, and any day the first return may be expected. With reference to the Hannan's Golden Group and Golden Treasure, I learn that while the shares have been inactive of late the news from the mines is most favourable, and that in the Golden Treasure more especially large quantities of rich ore are ready for crushing. A sharp advance in these shares is therefore also predicted. Almost the only other group in which there has been an active market is that of the West Australian Joint Stock Trust. The "Bears" have made several attacks on the shares of the Trust, but the latter have always come up smiling again, and are quoted 3¼ premium, while the Founders' shares stand at from £55 to £60. Associated Gold Mines, of the same group, are firm at 3⅜, Associated Southern at 1⅞, Nil Desperandum at 1 5/16. I have already referred to the great Northern Territory scheme of South Australia, which has been initiated by the West Australian Joint Stock Trust, in which, however, some fifteen other West Australian Finance Companies are also interested. Experienced engineers have carefully inspected all the gold-bearing properties, and have come to the conclusion that this district is similar to the rich gold-bearing belt at Hannan's. A large group of mines is now in a forward state of development, and the syndicate is about to hand over six groups of mining properties to a Proprietary Company. Amongst the Venture Syndicate group Joker (Yalgoo) shares have risen to 2 premium, and full details of the Joker Proprietary Gold Mines, which has been formed to acquire an area of about 165 acres adjoining the famous Joker have been published. This will evidently be a second Joker, and the shares are expected to rise to a high premium. The 90-Mile Proprietary of the Venture group has also been in evidence, and the shares have risen to ⅜ premium on the very favourable statements made at the statutory meeting by the Chairman, which fully confirmed previous reports by the experts. The third crushing of the Menzies' Crusoe has been announced by the following cablegram:—"177 hours run; 135 tons crushed; yield, 430 oz. retorted gold; restart crushing to-day, June 29." The mine is evidently doing well, and whenever the West Australian market braces up, the shares will, no doubt, advance upon the present price of 1 7/16. Reports from the Menzies Consolidated are also favourable. The shares of the Stoneham Group have been quiet, but this is not likely to last long, as the Directors' report of the West Australian Goldfields has now been issued, and shows remarkable results. The net profit for the second year of the Company's existence was £231,849, or 230 per cent. on its capital of £100,000. The Directors take the conservative course of paying a dividend of 30 per cent. only, which, with the interim dividend of 20 per cent. already paid, makes 50 per cent. for the year, while £100,000 is added to the reserve, and £25,000 brings up the fund for the equalisation of dividends to £50,000, besides other appropriations. I repeat that Hampton Plains at 4⅞ to 5, and Block 50 Hampton Plains at 1 7/16 appear to me the cheapest shares in this group. Hannan's Napier at par and Bird-in-Hand at ⅛ premium look promising. Royal Sovereigns have been very strong, rising to 5, and reacting to 4½, notwithstanding repeated "Bear" raids, and the shares of the Anglo-French Colonial Trust, which holds a large interest in this mine, have fluctuated between 1⅞ and 2. In New Explorers Syndicate business is reported at ⅜ to ½ premium, and Explorers Finance Founders' shares are firm at £20 to £25. In Princess Royal further business is reported at 7s. 6d. to 8s., with an advancing tendency, while Yalgoo Battery stand at 9s. As the Australian Mail very correctly remarks, the affairs of the North Queensland Mines Agency are still enveloped in mystery, and it is high time that the shareholders should insist upon full information being supplied. The secretary of the Cassidy Hill has at last sent out a circular, which does not, however, give much information. Some of the shareholders in the Golden Link Mining Company complain of lack of news, and of the inactivity of the Board. What have the Directors to say to this? A very satisfactory statement has been issued by the West Australian Mining Company, and I hear rumours of an important announcement likely ere long to be made to the proprietors. It should be remembered that this was the pioneer of West Australian mining undertakings. West Australian Gold Concessions are likely to come to the front again. I hear that the accounts to December 31, 1895, will show a profit of £91,000. The Company has paid dividends for 1894 of 20 per cent.; for 1895, 25 per cent. is to be paid; and it is anticipated that for the year 1896, 30 per cent. will be distributed. Amongst the interests of the Company is one in the Brownhill district, reports from which are to the effect that at a depth of 120 ft. in the shafts they have come upon a reef similar in formation to that of the Brownhill Reward, about 18 ft. wide. According to Mr. Brookman's map the mine is traversed by the Brownhill lode. Properties recently acquired are four in the Black Flag district, one in the Murchison, and three in Hannan's, all of which work is in progress. I hear that the annual report and balance-sheet will be published in a week or two. The shares, in which there is a considerable "Bear" account, are hardening at 1¾. In Gladiator shares, to which I referred last week, active dealings are taking place at 1 to 1⅛, and an important advance is expected. Amongst new Companies which will deal with West Australian exploration and finance generally is the New Coolgardie Gold Exploration and Finance Association, Limited, which has been formed with a capital of £150,000 in 10s. shares. The Company is acquiring gold mining rights, land, and town sites, and is started under favourable auspices.

THE PRINCES' RESTAURANT, Piccadilly, W., now open, is the most elegant and best appointed establishment of the kind in London, where Society can meet to enjoy Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers of the most recherché description. INDIAN, NEW ZEALAND, AND OTHER MINES.

There has been a partial set-back in Indian Gold Mines on the outbreak of cholera on the goldfield, to which a falling off in the production for June of the Ooregum, for instance (to 5,332 oz.) is attributed. The Mysore West and Wynaad mill produced 422 oz. from 1,000 tons, but the mill was also shut down for eleven days for the same reason. The Mysore Mine still looks excellent but the price is down to $7\frac{7}{16}$. I notice that the Statist endorses my favourable view of the Coromandel Mine, and I consider the shares at $2\frac{1}{8}$ one of the best purchases in this section. The milling ore in reserve on September 30, was stated to be 24,000 tons, or enough to keep the mill supplied with 1,000 tons a month for two years. 3,150 tons passed the 20-stamp mill from March to May, yielding 1,652 oz. of gold, and the manager reports that the new shoot discovered at Prospect shaft is of fair milling value throughout, and at times very rich. In addition to Coromandel Goldfields of Mysore at 26s. are a good purchase, and Mysore-Kadur at 6s. 9d. to 7s. Amongst New South Wales mines, Aladdin's Lamp are steady at $1\frac{7}{8}$, and there is every prospect of a fresh rise. Wentworth Proprietary remain at 1. Mount Morgan have improved, but Broken Hill Proprietary are easier. In the shares of the Curtin Davis Proprietary, the new Tasmanian mine, to which I referred last week, active dealings have taken place at a slight advance. Croydon Consols are firm and tending upwards. In New Zealand Mines, Taitapu are firm at $3\frac{7}{8}$, but Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand Waitekauri, Hauraki, and Waihi are lower. United New Zealand Exploration, on the other hand, have been firm at $2\frac{1}{2}$. Amongst low-priced issues Komata Queen at 4s., Maoriland Gold Mines at 3s. 3d., and Preece's Point at 4s., deserve attention. From the last mentioned mine a cablegram has been received stating that the erection of the machinery has been commenced. The shares of the recently formed Irene (Hauraki) Gold Mine of 5s., fully paid, have come into demand at 5s. to 5s. 6d., and look like going better. It will be remembered that this mine was taken over as a going concern, and that, according to the reports of the experts, it has a permanent payable reef, which should give a good account of itself by means of the 10-stamp mill and a small cyanide plant. From the Invicta Gold Mines (British Columbia) a report is to hand giving full particulars of the operations at the mine, which are being carried on actively, and it is expected that this will be the first of the British Columbian Companies floated in England to produce gold, while the working will be carried on at the lowest possible cost. The shares, now quoted at $\frac{7}{8}$-1, are likely to go considerably better. I hear that another British Columbian mine is about to be placed before the public, viz., the Golden River Quesnelle, Limited. It will take over an alluvial gold mining property on Quesnelle River, over nine miles in length, acquired by Special Acts of Parliament from the Legislature of British Columbia, and situated in the same district as the celebrated "Williams Creek," from $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles of which upwards of £4,000,000 in gold has already been taken. The reports of six different experts of standing are to the effect that the auriferous deposits are very rich, and that excellent results may be expected from the working of the same, which are situated on the entire length of the south fork of Quesnelle River and a portion of the main Quesnelle River. The capital consists of £350,000, divided into 103,000 Ten per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares of £1 each (of which 80,000 are reserved for working capital) and 247,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each. The Ten per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares will be issued on this market. In the general foreign section Burma Ruby, St. John del Rey, and Banner Gold are lower, but Jay Hawk have improved. My recent remarks have brought me a number of letters re the Malacate Mining and Smelting Company, and the following are some of the particulars asked for:—£100,000 is set aside for working capital. The property extends over nine acres, with abundant water and fuel. The ore gives a minimum of 60 oz. of silver to the ton, but it runs up to as much as 2,000 oz. to the ton. It is asserted that no silver mine in the world can be worked cheaper than the Malacate. The property is developed and thoroughly equipped, and silver can be produced at a cost of 6d. per ounce, or even less. Those who want further information should write to the secretary at Palmerston-buildings, E.C. I think, however, I have told you enough to show I know what I am talking about, when I tell you the shares are worth serious attention. I am told that the Mines and Banking Corporation is doing a solid, steady, and profitable business. Recently it has secured the reconstruction of two well-known mining undertakings, which should give good results. Its banking business is quietly extending, so also is its loan business to Stock Exchange brokers and dealers. The shares are fully paid, and at present carry a dividend of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. My information re Mines Contract is more than confirmed by the character of the buying quietly going on this week. It is expected that holders will, within a short time, receive a substantial interim dividend. Last year's distribution amounted to $22\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

CHARLES HEIDSIECK CHAMPAGNE.—ORIGINAL BRAND.—Extra dry or brut. Vintage 1889. One quality only shipped. To be obtained of all Wine Merchants and Stores.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

James Eadie, Limited.—This Company is a reconstruction of James Eadie, Limited, of Cross-street Brewery, Burton-on-Trent. The share capital consists of 25,000 Five per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares of £10 each, and 25,000 Ordinary shares of £10 each. The present issue is that of the Preference shares and of £500,000 Irredeemable First Mortgage Debenture stock.

The Debenture stock will be applied in paying off £250,000 Four and a Half per Cent. stock, the holders of which have the option of exchanging into this issue at par, which I have no doubt they will do, as the remaining portion is issued at £107 per cent., and now stands, I believe, at £115. The Preference shares are issued at a premium of £1 per share. This appears to be a sound Industrial Debenture. Owing to the large number of applications, the subscription list was closed on Monday.

The Norman Proprietary Gold Mines, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire three mining leases in the Waitekauri (Upper Thames) Mining District, New Zealand, of about 90 acres in extent. The capital is £75,000 in shares of £1 each. Twenty thousand is reserved for working capital.

The Fairbairn Pastoral Company of Australia, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the Station properties of Messrs. Geo. Fairbairn & Sons, situated in the Mitchell and Leichardt Districts, Queensland, Australia. The share capital is £250,000 in £10 shares, and £350,000 Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures of £100 each.

Notwithstanding the large area of the property and the amount of cattle, &c., thereon, I consider the capital far too excessive to advise any of my readers to have anything to do with this concern.

The Universal Brazing Hearth Company, Limited.—This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring the rights for the United Kingdom of Elkington & Co., Limited, and Mr. Henry Thomas Fellows for an invention of a new or improved brazing hearth or soldering table. The capital is fixed at £50,000, divided into Ordinary shares of £1 each.

This may be a very clever and useful invention, and do all that is claimed for it, but I fail to see any inducement for investors to place their money in a concern that has yet to undergo the severe test of practical use. Moreover, according to the prospectus, only a provisional protection has as yet been obtained.

The British Arsenic Mines, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire the leases and mining rights for a period of twenty-one years of three arsenic mines, situated at Plympton St. Mary, two miles from Plympton Station, Devon. The capital is £50,000.

This issue had better be left to those who know more about arsenic than most of my readers do. There is nothing enticing about it.

The London and Coventry Cycle Company, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire four manufacturing cycle businesses situate in London, Walsall, Coventry, and Birmingham, and to incorporate with them 30 retail businesses situated in various places. The capital is £200,000.

This appears to be an amalgamation of not very well-known concerns, and the prospects do not, to my mind, look at all bright. It would have been better had the expert's opinion of the various businesses been given separately instead of collectively. The capital appears very large for the property acquired, and this concern had better be left to the promoters and their friends.

Elijah Eyre's Brewery, Limited.—This Company proposes to acquire, work, and extend the brewery business of Messrs. Elijah Eyre & Co., King's Lynn, Norfolk. The capital is £53,280 in Ordinary and Preference shares of £1 each, and £75,000 Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures of £100 each, issued at £102.

These debentures are far from gilt-edged, the difference between the amount of share capital and the debenture issue being too great for absolute safety of the latter.

The River Plate Electric Light and Traction Company, Limited.—Issue of £125,000 Five per Cent. (part of a total authorised issue of £150,000) First Debenture Stock at 97½.

Chilian Five per Cent. Loan.—Messrs. N. M. Rothschild have been authorised by the Chilian Government to receive subscriptions at their offices for £4,000,000 nominal capital of this loan in bonds payable to bearer in sums of £1,000, £500, and £100 each, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. The price of issue is £95. 10s. 0d. per cent.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

Sekwah.—This is a very difficult question to advise upon. All the securities in which you are authorised to invest under the Marriage Settlement Acts are at a very high price, quite as high in comparison as Consols; and I fancy it would be wiser to await developments before taking the step you propose. Medico, Highgate.—1. It appears to be advisable to hold these Argentine stocks for a further rise. 2. Hold. 3. Yes. Archipelago.—1. Brazilians are a fair investment at present quotations. 2. No reason to sell out now, but I do not advise further purchases either. Sinecure.—Why not put the money into the new Uruguay loan, which is well secured and yields good interest? Perthshire.—Amongst the stocks mentioned by you, I should give the preference to the new Uruguay loan, in addition to which you might buy Argentine Funding bonds, as proposed. Peruvian.—Hold for a recovery.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Betty S.—I cannot advise you under the circumstances in which you are placed to speculate with the small sum in question. The best thing you can do is to leave the money in the P.O. Savings Bank. J. H. M.—You might invest the money in Chester Lion Brewery Four and a Quarter per Cent. debentures. N. D. G.—It is certainly a further development that advertisements should appear in the Standard in which it is stated that "A young man, of good appearance and address, is wanted to represent a first-class Company," the Company turning out to be the Provident Association of London, a bundle of whose prospectuses are forwarded. I can only give you Punch's advice to those about to marry—Don't. John McK.—I quite agree with you about these outside dealers' advertisements; but this is no new matter, as the firm in question has been commented upon dozens of times in TRUTH. P. J.—I have repeatedly stated that the lottery bonds hawked about by Cunliffe, Russell & Co., of Paris, are genuine enough; but they yield a very small return, and this firm charges very much higher than the market quotations. A. R.—I cannot tell you if these two Trust Companies are the same; I do not think so, and I do not advise investment in them. Cousin.—No, I do not advise insurance in this Canadian concern. R. A. I. S.—Outside dealers, have nothing to do with them. You should deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. E. C., Eastbourne.—The broker in question is very respectable, and the loss of the transfer is very unfortunate. I return the documents, and do not see what you can do in the matter. P. A.—I cannot under any circumstances reply by letter. 1. Shady outside brokers will do anything to raise a quibble. 2. No, not yet. Regret.—I think your view is quite right. The State should be entitled to all the time of officials, and especially of officers, and the Field-Marshal has undoubtedly made a great mistake.

HOME RAILS.

D. F.—You will see now that the more favourable view which I took of Home Rails was justified, and you would have done much better in holding your stocks. The advance in Midlands will probably affect the rest of the market.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Naval.—It is impossible to tell at present. D. W. C.—This Railway Company is promising, but at present matters in South Africa are in a disturbed condition, and it is therefore difficult to advise upon the subject. Dieppe.—1. Yes, distinctly in favour of the bondholders. 2. You should hold these bonds for a marked advance. X. Y.—1. No reason to sell now. 2. Yes.

MINING SHARES.

S. W.—No reason to sell at once. Await an improvement in the West Australian market, which is about due. W.I.R.—A fair risk, but you can do better in the mines mentioned in my letter. Cluny.—Hold, but do not buy any more. The Directors do not inspire confidence. Studio.—You are quite right. The Directors of the Northern Wealth of Nations ought to be made to give fuller information. The assay of a specimen of the ore is not sufficient. Torve.—1. Hannan's Excelsior are a fair mining risk, and recent reports are favourable. 2. Lake View Extended is a good mine. 3. Yes. West Cliff.—Certainly hold African Estates; amongst the shares mentioned, No. 1 to 10, I like Komata Queen (2), Sheba Hill (3) and Bird-in-Hand (10) best. Manecs-trian.—1. No reason to sell now. All South African shares should be held for an improvement. 2. Yes, W. A. Joint Stock Trust Founders' shares are good for a further advance. Facile Princeps.—No reason to sell any of the shares A, B, C, least of all Randfontein (A). The future of D is still doubtful. So much depends upon the success of the new process. Novice, Haulbowline.—1. No temptation to buy Rand Roodepoort. 2. No. 3. No regular market for them. 4. No. L.—I have never been strongly in favour of this West Australian mine, but it seems to be a fair mining risk. Hold. C. G. L.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you I should prefer Randfontein and Barnato Consols, and, instead of the others, 90-Mile Proprietary and the new Lake View Consols. B.—1. No catch. 2. No temptation to buy more Scottish Corporation shares. No. 4. Leave Sam's Wealth of Nations alone. Hartlepool.—1. You should refuse to pay the call on African Gold Concessions, and join the other shareholders who are now moving in the matter. 2. No option but to pay up and sell after. Caterham.—Yes, Aladdin's Lamp are a good investment, paying large dividends; but Woodstock (Transvaal) are equally promising. Bonn.—1. Hold New Primrose for a rise. 2. No option but to hold at present. 3. Hold. Peter.—Mere trash, and attempt to blackmail. Pygmec.—1. These shares should come to the front again on the revival of the Kaffir Circus. 2. You should also give your attention to West Australians. Gwalia.—Hold all your shares Nos. 1-7, and average Woodstock Transvaal (3). Particulars of the Kamfersdam Diamond Mine were published in a former issue of TRUTH, but you might write to the London agents at 190-1, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, E.C. Clerical.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you, I should prefer a purchase of Croydon Consols (2), Holcomb Valley Prefs. (3), and Waterfall Estates (4). Bertie.—The only shares I like amongst those mentioned by you are Hannan's Main Reef. Instead of buying the others you should make your selection from my letter. Coal.—1 and 2. Not just yet. 3. Doubtful, leave them alone. 4. I do not like St. Augustine diamonds. Swansea. — You can buy the shares mentioned through any respectable stockbroker. Sheba Hill are quoted about 3s. 3d. You have done quite right to go into Irene (Hauraki). Ego Sum.—You should address your complaint to the London agents. G. W., Clifton.—You ought to number your inquiries. The firm mentioned is respectable, and Hawk's View is a promising mine. Amongst the other shares mentioned I like Hannan's Proprietary and Gold Estates of Australia best. Alexis.—I am glad you did so well on my advice. If you are a holder of Nos. 1-4 keep them, but do not buy more now. Explorer, Maidenhead.—1. The full name is the Explorers' Finance Corporation (also nicknamed Spensleys), and the Founders' shares are quoted £20 to £25. 2. I cannot understand the low price of Croydon Consols. Edinburgh Castle.—1. Not yet. 2. Yes, Kudar Mysore are a promising low-priced mining share. 3. Yes. A. J. M.—I am no admirer of West Australian Pioneers, and do not know the reason of the decline. T. T.—You should write to the secretary of the Hetty Gold Mining Company for fuller information. Rollo.—Although I do not think much of the publication in question, the Company referred to is very doubtful. I cannot reply by letter. Spinster. — You must tell me what kind of investment you want and what interest. J. R. H., Lincoln. — 1. Hold Burbank's Birthday Gift. 2. A fair mining risk. 3. Not just yet. 4. A fair risk. 5. Yes. 6. Yes. S. H., Waterloo-terrace.—There is nothing amiss with the transfer, and nothing in the point you raise. I do not, however, know anything as regards the standing of the brokers. Edinburgensis.—A. No option but to hold. B. Yes. C. Impossible to tell. D. No. E. Buffelsdoorn and Sheba Hill. R. S. K.—1. Nothing that I know of. 2. No. 3. I do not like Omnium Gold Mining Association. Perth.—I am glad you did so well. Yes, Nos. 1, 3, and 4 are promising. Persimmon.—1. Hold Transvaal Gold, and more especially Austral African (2) in view of the amalgamation referred to under "Revival in the Kaffir Circus." Golf.—This is not the time to sell any of your twenty-four South African and West Australian Mining shares. Hold all for a rise. No. 24 is promising. Brayne.—Write to the Secretary of the London and Paris Finance Corporation for the information in question. John. — Hold your shares, Nos. 1 - 12, for an improvement. Berger.—Hold Johnnies for a rise. You do not appear to read my letter carefully. Pendennis.—You can find what you want in my letter. Pospects of Nos. 1 to 3 are somewhat doubtful. Stanway. — Await the meeting and then decide. Carrington.—Await further developments. This mine has been very disappointing. Hold the other shares. Lamps.—1—3. I do not advise these. 4.

Aladdin's Lamp are a good purchase. W. W. B.—Taitapu Estates are promising, but why not take so handsome a profit? P. B. N.—The mine is believed to be a good one, and when the Australian market braces up again the shares will doubtless recover. I do not like Bayley's Reward, but the other two mines are likely to go ahead again. Puzzled.—I must leave you to make your selection of South African and West Australian mines from my letter, the present is a good opportunity for buying. Walter.—1. Yes, hold Langlaagte Block "B" for an improvement. I cannot tell you about the distribution. 2. Yes. 3. Randfontein should be held for a rise. Airdrie.—1. You can do better in other West Australian mines mentioned in my letter than in Golden Arrows at the present price. 2. Respectable. Wakefield.—1. A fair mining risk. No reason to sell Mainland Consols yet, as a good crushing may come any day. Gamma.—I do not think much of this concern. Old Bird, Banbury.—All your South African and West Australian shares are well selected, and should be held for a rise. Pan.—Your brokers must be mugs. If you act on their advice you will lose your money. They are evidently very old-fashioned people. 2. I think you could safely give the indemnity letter; still it is a matter for your own consideration. D. D. D.—Hold your West Australian shares for a rise: they are promising. Planter.—This is not the time to sell your South African and West Australian shares, Nos. 1 to 11, which are well selected, and they should be held for an advance. Canbury.—1. These should brace up again some day. 2. You ought to have sold when much higher; it is a good mine, but mismanaged. Anthrax.—1. Yes, Anglo-French Colonial Trust is a good purchase. 2. You should hold Waterfall Estates. Tarna.—1. In such cases it is always advisable to join the reconstruction and sell afterwards. 2. No reason to sell Jumpers, although I should prefer Woodstock (Transvaal) at present price. Jim.—1. The distribution of Porges Randfontein shares will not take place for a month or two. 2. A fair investment, but no catch; you can do better in the shares recommended in my letter. 3. You should keep them now. C. M.—I am afraid it is correct that you will have to wait a couple of months before the distribution of Porges Randfontein shares is made. Jones.—I am sorry you bought Chartered at 5¾; sell on a further improvement. No reason to sell Nos. 2 to 4 for the present, as these West Australian shares will probably recover; but Nos. 2 and 3 are not my choice. Guildhall.—Fair West Australian mines. Nouveau Riche.—I do not care for the West Australian mine in question Regular Subscriber, Alnwick.—You should hold your mines for an improvement. Deanish.—Nos. 1 to 6 are not a very bright lot, but they should be held for the present. As regards African Consolidated (5), you should join the movement amongst the other shareholders. Querist.—Yes, I still think that the mining shares mentioned should be held. Medicus, Dublin.—If you are a holder do not sell; but there is no temptation to buy just now. Senex.—I do not like Nation's Treasure. The talk about another slump in West Australians is absurd; there are good mines which will improve, and there are bad ones which will fall in price. Sierra Leone.—Yes, the shares are worth holding. D. W. C.—Take a good profit when you can get it. Titch.—No option but to hold for the present. A. Z.—I am informed that you will see another dividend on Croydon Consols soon, but you had better communicate with the agents. Pym.—1. Yes. 2. A fair mining risk.

Industrial Shares.

Blue Nile.—Yes, you should certainly hold these shares. I am glad to hear that you are doing so well in Harrod's Stores on my advice; the Founders' shares are also promising. Nemo, Willenhall.—What is the good of your buying first and then asking my advice. Dunlop Deferred are promising, but you ought to have bought long ago when they were lower. I do not think much of Cycle Components, Cycle Tube shares are more promising. S. W.—The Debentures are fair value; but Van den Bergh Prefs. are not tempting. Agricola.—I have already stated that I do not like the Great Horseless Carriage Company, and it is probable that, as you say, very few shares were applied for by the public. Whether the Company will ever pay is a doubtful point. Seniab.—Take a good profit when you can get it. Chess.—Your broker is quite right. You can only obtain your money back when the settlement in Dunlops takes place. I do not think there will be any dividend before the settlement, but the dividend would go to your buyer, and you cannot repudiate the sale. I do not like the issue referred to, neither do I like the Cycle Company. Venturer.—You should repudiate the shares, and join other shareholders in the Dunlop-Truffault Bicycle Manufacturing Company, who are raising the question of the legality of change of name. Jorg.—I do not recommend you to follow this adviser. I do not care for the Cycle shares Nos. 1 and 2, and the others are also indifferent, more particularly Great Horseless Carriage (5); but, having once received an allotment, you cannot now repudiate the shares (except in the case of No. 2, the name having been changed). H. R. H.—Very fair investments; no reason to change. Boon.—Have nothing to do with the Army and Navy Co-operative Breweries. T. H. W.—No; a further improvement is probable.

Mixed Investments.

Questions.—1. Yes, a fair mining risk. 2. Possibly. I am glad you recognise the value of my advice to hold St. Louis Brewery Prefs. when in the dumps some years ago. Erie.—No option but to hold Nos. 1 and 2. As regards No. 3, you must have a good profit, and should sell on the next advance. East Anglia.—1. No, I do not like Maynard's. No option but to hold the mining shares Nos. 2 to 5 for a recovery. Apex.—I do not like Arrow Brownhill (1). No option but to hold Atchison "B" bonds for a further recovery. Constant Reader, Bandon.—1. Yes, a fair purchase. 2. Not known yet. 3. Impossible to tell yet. 4. No. Read remarks in last week's issue. 5 and 6. 5s. par value, 4s. 6d. paid. J. J. C.—There is every prospect of the Argentine Railway bonds in question reviving again. Hold. This is not the time to sell South African or West Australian mining shares; keep all yours, Nos. 1 to 18, for a rise. Kett.—The Hicks Gold Mine is a promising property, and you should hold. I do not think much of the Typewriter Company. Abaute.—Yes, hold your West Australian shares Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement. I do not think much of the Electric Lamp Company (6). You bought Nos. 2 and 3 against my advice, yet I would not throw them away now. Peggy Bawn.—With reference to the Dunlop-Truffault Cycle Company, see reply "Venturer" under "Industrial Shares." The Springdale is a good mine, but is under bad management. Hold Wealth of Nations. D. M.—Amongst Home Rails you might invest in Brighton "A" and Dover "A." Very little is known here as regards the Glasgow Murchison and the United Exploration Companies' affairs. D. M. B.—1. Yes. 2. I do not like it. 3. Be careful. W. S. J.—No reason to sell Nos. 1 to 6, 8, 11 to 13, or 16. No. 7 seems to be a fair Industrial investment, but you should sell No. 9 on a further improvement. Randfontein (10) should be held for an important advance. I do not think much of No. 14, and no news is available in the market about No. 15. I am glad to hear that you did so well in Mainland Consols and in Grand Trunk debentures on my advice. I think it advisable to hold the Grand Trunk stocks. Capital-less.—1. It would be advisable to sell the Mazawattee Tea shares at the premium now obtainable. 2. A fair mining risk. 3. I do not think much of this concern, especially in view of the heavy liability. Juggins.—1. I am glad you are doing so well in Woodstock (Transvaal) on my advice. Hold all your shares Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement. I do not like Nos. 6 and 8, and No. 9 are not very promising; but Dunlop Deferred are likely to improve. With regard to the rest of your letter, I must refer you to my remarks under "Golden West Australia." F. C.—1. Has been very correct of late. 2. Buffelsdoorn are likely to improve. J. A. P.—1. Yes, hold for an improvement. 2. One of these days, when the currency question in the States is settled. Macbeth.—1. Langlaagte Star should recover again. 2. I have no further information. 3. Fair investment, but speculative. Scarecrow.—Amongst Home Rails you might buy Brighton "A" and Dover "A" at 182¾ and 102½ respectively; Amongst American Rails, New York Central Four per Cent. Gold debentures at 106; amongst Home Breweries, Chester Lion Four, and a Quarter per Cent. debentures at 105. Albarade.—1. Take a good profit. 2. Do not sell now. 3. Very doubtful; why not put the further amount into high-class South African mines, such as Langlaagte Estate, which will pay you better interest. Donegal.—I do not advise purchase of Hannan's Brownhill shares, the problem of the machinery has not yet been solved. 2. A fair investment, but no catch at the premium. 3. A fair investment. Unicorn.—1. A good investment 2. Too speculative. 3. Somewhat too speculative at the present price. Have nothing to do with the "system" referred to, but deal only through a member of the Stock Exchange. Nemo Black.—It is quite impossible to answer questions as to how much profit can be made within a certain time; but No. 9 are already up, and there is every prospect of Nos. 12 and 13 improving. I do not care for Lisbon-Berlyn (14). Your holdings in Home Rails (Nos. 1 to 7) are going the right way. You should not sell your South African shares before a further rise has taken place. Veritas, Leamington.—1. I do not care for the Finance Corporation of Western Australia. 2. Why do you not instruct your broker to take your handsome profit on the Ordinary shares? The Founders' shares are now high enough. 3. I would not buy them now. 4. No hurry to sell. Musical.—1. What is the good of a guarantee when the country is not quite safe? Nos. 2 and 4 are fair mining risks. No. 3 is a good mine, and No. 5 is a fair investment. Faint Yet Pursuing.—1. Under present circumstances, although you will have to face fresh fluctuations, I think you should hold these American stocks. There is no reason for selling any of your South African or West Australian shares Nos. 8 to 25, which are likely to improve further. Nor is there any reason for selling Nos. 2, 4, or 5. You know yourself how the Grosvenor Hotel (3) is mismanaged. No. 6 is a speculative Industrial investment, and I do not like Beeston Cycles (7). Tout.—1. Hold the Aluminium shares. 2. Perhaps in the dim and distant future. Cid, Huddersfield.—All your Mining shares, A to G, should be held for an improvement. No. 3 is a promising Industrial Company. I do not care for Nos. 1 and 2.

Various Investments.

It is evident that first-class investments will for some time retain their popularity and high range of prices. The large amount of surplus funds and purchases of the Government broker, for instance, are sustaining Consols, which at one time touched 113¾, and are still fractionally higher for the week at $113\frac{7}{16}$. Silver has declined $\frac{1}{8}$ to $31\frac{7}{16}$d. The tenders invited by the French Government for the metal were accepted on the part of Messrs. Allard, but apparently the necessary quantity had already been secured in the States, and thus the general market here was not helped. Rupee Paper is easier at $64\frac{1}{2}$, and amongst the Chinese loans the only change was a decline in the Five per Cent. gold loan to 100. Brewery shares have remained firm, and Allsopps Ordinary are still quoted 180, although nothing has so far transpired with regard to the dividend. Guinness, however, are lower at 660. Nitrate Rails have been dull, but the slightly better tone prevailing during the last few days has improved the quotation to $7\frac{5}{8}$. The traffic during the second week of June showed an increase of £1,981. A fair amount of business has been passing in Cycle shares, but the excessive number of new flotations is seriously prejudicing this market. Dunlop Deferred are slightly firmer at $\frac{13}{16}$ premium, while the Ordinary shares are better at $\frac{1}{4}$ premium. Components have fluctuated to a considerable extent, but are now easier at $4\frac{3}{8}$. Beestons have hardened to $5\frac{3}{8}$, but Humbers have been quiet, and the Extensions alone are firm at $\frac{1}{4}$ premium. I have always thought that sooner or later some improvement would be introduced for preparing and preserving meat, and I am not therefore surprised to see that a process has been taken up for accomplishing this purpose by the London Canning Company, of 20, Bucklersbury, London, E.C. If the patents really are as valuable as they are represented in the prospectus, this invention would inaugurate an important new departure. A circular has been widely distributed by Mr. J. Carter Hart, the secretary pro tem. of Chili Coal, Limited, in which that temporary secretary touts for underwriting of this concern. He promises that on filling up the underwriting letter, those who accede to his request will receive in any event on allotment £5 per cent. in cash, and £6 per cent. in fully paid-up shares, on the amount of their underwriting accepted by the Directors. Upon the closing of the underwriting list, adds Mr. J. Carter Hart, the prospectus will be fully advertised, and the bonds offered to the public. I need hardly say that this system of circularising strangers for underwriting is altogether irregular, and not likely to inspire confidence in the undertaking. Mr. W. Owen Clarkson, of 142, Lichfield-street, Walsall, is on the warpath with an invitation to investors to buy 1,000 £1 Six per Cent. First Preference shares in the Carlton Bank, Limited, which he calls an "institution sixteen years old." Mr. Clarkson is in the happy position to offer these shares through having "acquired an interest in the shares recently belonging to the late Miss Moore's estate." This so-called Carlton "Bank," of 38, Finsbury-pavement, appears according to the balance-sheet for 1895 enclosed, to have cash in hand £1,543, and bills discounted, loans, and advances figure at £29,821. It is a money-lending concern, and the recipients of the circulars will do well to leave it severely alone.—Your affectionate Uncle,

MOSES.

QUEER STORY;

HALF-AN-HOUR AT HENLEY.

"DON'T look so disconsolate, you little goose. You'll see him to-day, you know."

"Yes, I shall see him. But that only makes it the more cruel and tantalising; for I shan't get a chance of t-talking to him, I feel sure."

"Oh, yes, you will. After he has rowed in his race, he will come and join us. He told you so himself."

"Y-yes, he'll join us; but Aunt Ida will be there all the time; and you know how she—she objects to B-Bertie. She'll never let me stir from her side the whole day."

"Don't you think she will?"

"I'm sure she won't. And—and to-day is the last chance I shall have of—of talking to Bertie. He has to join his r-regiment to-morrow at Portsmouth, and next week they sail for South Africa, where he'll very likely be k-k-illed by those dreadful savages, and I shall never see him again. Oh, it's too cruel!"

And Jessie began to sob.

"Now, my dear child," said her cousin Helen, putting her arm round her waist, "I can't allow you to take on like this, and to make up your mind to horrors which are never going to happen. Probably by the time Captain Anstruther's regiment reaches South Africa the fighting will all be over. And in any case——"

"Well, even if it is," sobbed Jessie, "Bertie will be kept out there for a wh-whole y-year; and I shan't even get the chance of saying g-good bye to him before he starts."

"Now, really, silly little puss, you must dry those tears, else your eyelids will be swollen and red all day. I can't think why you are in such a fright of Aunt. If I were you I should stand up to her, and tell her to be—— I mean to mind her own business."

"Ah! It's all very well for you to say that Helen; you only come and stay here occasionally. If Aunt Ida were your guardian, and you had to live with her always, and to put up with weeks of misery every time you offended her, you would speak in a different tone. I tell you, Aunt Ida is a jealous, spiteful, ill-tempered tyrant."

"But the more you give in to tyrants, the more tyrannical they are," replied Helen. "However, I'll see—Hilloa! There, she is calling us. Bother this bonnet-pin! There! The thing has gone in, at last. Do I look passable, Jess? You look awfully sweet, dear. I don't wonder at Captain——"

"Ida! Helen!" sounded a shrill voice from the foot of the stairs. "Unless you come down at once, we shall be late for the train."

"All right, Aunt! Coming! Coming!"

And the two girls hurried down from Jessie's room, where they had been putting the finishing touches to their toilets, to join Aunt Ida in the hall below.

Aunt Ida was a thin and upright lady, with angular features and a somewhat vinegary expression. She was very sprucely attired in an elegant and modish gown, which, however, gave the impression of being too juvenile to harmonise properly with her face. She regarded her nieces with a critical, and not particularly affectionate stare, then said sharply:

"Now, then, girls, what a time you've been! I thought you were never coming down. Admiring yourselves in the glass, I suppose. Ha! ha! ha!"

The last words were spoken in a half-jocular tone, but the laugh was hard and ill-natured. Both girls thought it wiser to take no notice; though within themselves they felt that the imputation came rather strangely from Aunt Ida, who had two cheval glasses in her own bedroom, before one or other of which she was eternally posing and simpering.

"The cab has been at the door ten minutes," said the elder lady. "So come along quick, or we shall miss the train. . . . And mind," she impressed upon them, as they drove away to the station, "keep close to my side when we get out at Paddington. There is sure to be a great crowd there, and I won't have either of you getting separated from me.

There was a big crowd at Paddington, as was, indeed, inevitable on the morning of the last day of Henley. But Aunt Ida managed to pilot her two nieces to the train without being separated from them, and they secured three seats in the same first-class compartment. Aunt Ida was not in an amiable humour to-day, but that was nothing unusual. It was rather her normal state, but it was now distinctly aggravated by the consciousness of a reddish tinge about the tip of her nose, which glycerine and cucumber and other toilet lotions, applied over-night, had failed to remedy. Aunt Ida was fifty if she was a day, but she liked to look attractive; and with a red nose, who could look attractive? Jessie's and Helen's complexions were as fresh as pinks. Their noses showed no signs of rubicundity. Aunt Ida surveyed them with an angry and a jealous glare. Yes, she was jealous of them, absurd as it may appear in a faded spinster of fifty. Of course she would not have admitted it. Had such a thing been suggested to her, she would have scoffed, with contemptuous hilarity, at the bare idea. "Jealous of them? Jealous of those children? How ridiculous!"

She often spoke of them, slightingly, as "children." Ladies of fifty not infrequently do apply this term, in fine contempt, to girls of nineteen. They were not, in her opinion, old enough to know anything about, or to have anything to do with, love. And when Captain Anstruther, a handsome young officer of Dragoons, had appeared upon the tapis as Jessie's lover, Aunt Ida had promptly put down her foot. Love? Psha! What could a child, a mere baby like Jessie, know about love? These silly chits of girls made the absurd error of mistaking their own half-formed fancies for the divine fulness of love. Ah! It needed a woman to love! That heavenly sentiment only found its resting-place in mature bosoms. And Jessie of all girls! Only a brainless noodle, a walking tailor's dummy, like Captain Anstruther, could possibly see anything in that little wax-doll, Jessie. The whole thing was nonsensical, preposterous. It must be at once nipped in the bud.

Now the World is very uncharitable. It could not, by all Christian canons, be the World at all unless it were so. And Aunt Ida's small World said some very sneering things upon this subject. It—the said small World—averred that Captain Anstruther, when he made himself agreeable to the aunt for the sake of the niece, by no means realised what he was letting himself in for. It was hardly likely that he should. A dashing young soldier might, ordinarily, make himself agreeable to the elderly lady guardian of a pretty girl, without any risk of having his attentions misunderstood and misappropriated. But when Miss Ida Frampton was that lady guardian the case assumed an altogether different complexion. Unable to realise the fact of her own faded charms, she actually imagined that the Captain's attentions were directed towards herself; and when she discovered her error, she was furious indeed. It was then that the dashing young dragoon became a brainless noodle, and a walking tailor's dummy. It was then that Jessie was degraded into a little wax-doll. That, at least, was the view which the World took of the situation.

Whether this view was correct or not, it was indisputably true that, after first treating him with the warmest favour, Aunt Ida now regarded Captain Anstruther with the coldest disdain. She avoided him on all occasions, as far as possible, and took good care that Jessie should avoid him too. This resulted in the poor girl's life being rendered unhappy and miserable, for she hardly ever had the chance of even speaking to Bertie Anstruther, whom she loved with all the warmth of her pure and tender little heart. Now her misery was aggravated by the circumstance that her lover's regiment was under orders for the Cape; and so close a watch was kept upon her by Aunt Ida, that she saw no chance of even wishing him good-bye. The Captain, indeed, had expressed his intention of working this matter somehow at Henley, where he had ascertained that Jessie would be present, and where he himself was engaged in the London R.C. Eight. But on the previous day he had been foiled by Aunt Ida, in spite of his endeavours, and poor little Jessie saw no chance of his succeeding better to-day—which was his last chance.

Perhaps, under the circumstances, Aunt Ida would not have gone to Henley at all; but she had been particularly pressed by a Duchess to take tickets for the Lawn of the Kettledrum Club. The Kettledrum Club was a new institution. This was the first time that it had occupied a Lawn at Henley, and the promoters were very anxious to make it a success, financial and otherwise. The said Duchess, a lady always "on" for acquiring a little money, was understood to be interested in the Kettledrum Club to the tune of some hundreds of shares. She, therefore, used every effort to induce her friends to take tickets for their lawn upon this, the occasion of the Club's début. Of course, she did not put it in this way when canvassing her acquaintances. It was a purely personal matter "to oblige an old friend, you know." Aunt Ida, like many others, was flattered to be claimed as an old friend by a Duchess. She looked forward to hobbing and nobbing with her Grace upon the lawn of the Kettledrum Club. Then, besides, she had an especially smart gown to "show off"; and there were many good-looking men to be met at Henley—not mere tailors' dummies and admirers of the wax-doll type, like Captain Anstruther—but men who knew what was what; men of character, individuality, brain. These were the men whose admiration was a real compliment. Only boys, dotards, and tailors' dummies were attracted to the dollish faces of insipid misses.

It cannot be said that the two girls found the journey down to Henley particularly pleasant, or that matters were much improved for them after arriving on the lawn of the Kettledrum Club. Aunt Ida, all the while conscious of her red nose, remained in a most unpleasant temper, and jumped down the throats of poor Jessie and Helen every time they spoke. When Aunt Ida was in this state, she was abominably rude to everyone—unless it were, perchance, a duchess, or a man of brains who knew what was what—and now she behaved so curtly to all their acquaintances who came up to speak to them, that the two girls quite blushed for her, and for themselves that they were associated with her. Jessie particularly was in a condition of dire discomfort. If her Aunt was so uncivil to their ordinary acquaintances, against whom she had no animus, what would she be to Bertie Anstruther when he turned up? Poor little Jessie, much as she longed for a few minutes of her lover's presence on this their last possible day of meeting, found herself almost wishing now that he would not join them, as he had promised her, after his race had been rowed.

The London Rowing Club and Leander were the two crews left in for the Grand Challenge. After a good race, Leander won. Jessie looked very nervous and agitated. This was not because her lover's boat had been beaten. She was not thinking about oars and oarsmen; but she knew that now, in a very short time, Bertie Anstruther would appear, and she dreaded nearly as much as she longed for that momentous event.

And sure enough he soon did make his appearance. Jessie caught sight of his tall, manly form coming towards them in the distance through the crowd. She began to tremble and quiver—foolish little thing—and looked timidly at Aunt Ida. But Aunt Ida happened, just then, to be engaged in a whispered conversation with Helen upon some evidently urgent matter.

"What did you say was showing, Helen?" whispered the elderly spinster, in sudden agitation.

"A stay-lace, Aunt."

"For goodness sake, don't talk so loud. Somebody will hear," ejaculated Aunt Ida, looking nervously round. "W—where is it showing, Helen?

"Between your bodice and the band of your skirt, Aunt. It has come untied and is hanging down!"

"Good gracious! I hope it has not been showing long. J—j—ust tie it up and poke it in, Helen. There's a good girl; but—but—p—pray don't let anybody see what you're doing. Jessie" (in an impressive whisper) "just move round to the other side of me, please, dear. There's Sir Horace Knibster looking this way, and I wouldn't have him see for anything. What can Wainwright have been thinking about?" (Wainwright was Aunt Ida's maid). "I shall give her a piece of my mind when we get home."

"Bother the stay-lace!" exclaimed Helen, in the course of her hurried manipulations at the back of Aunt Ida's skirt. "The tiresome——"

"For Heaven's sake, Helen, hold your tongue. There's no need to mention it at all. Especially in such a loud voice. Fancy if Sir Horace Knibster were to hear!"

"I don't suppose he would be shocked. No doubt he is tolerably familiar with stays. You know they say that he wears them himself."

"Silence, Helen! You immodest girl. I blush for you. There! Don't be all night over it, or somebody must see. Is the—is it all right, now?"

"Yes, I've tucked it in safely, at last," replied Helen, as she arranged her aunt's skirt again in its proper folds. "I don't think it can come out again."

"Are you quite sure?"

"Quite."

At that minute Captain Anstruther came up. He raised his hat and saluted the ladies politely. As soon as Aunt Ida realised who he was (for the little affair of the stay-lace had put her in such a fluster that she had, momentarily, almost lost possession of her wits), she instantly froze. She treated the tailor's dummy to a very distant bow. Then, turning away, and saying to her nieces in a very marked manner, "Come along, girls; the Duchess will be expecting us at tea," she moved a few paces in the direction of the refreshment-tent.

The Captain flushed, and a dangerous light shone in his usually good-tempered eyes. He had been treated rudely by Miss Frampton before; but never so rudely as this. Poor Jessie dared not look off the ground. She was overcome with shame and mortification at her lover being treated with such outrageous incivility. Helen, however, fixed her eyes full upon the Captain, and gave him an unmistakably meaning glance. It evidently implied that he was not to let himself be choked off from remaining in Jessie's company by anything that Aunt Ida might say or do.

That elderly spinster had not walked more than a few yards before she suddenly stopped, and looked round, with a quick, agitated glance. Captain Anstruther, taking his cue from Helen, advanced again to her side.

"I trust, Miss Frampton," he said, in his blandest and most courteous manner, as though he had never noticed her rudeness, "that you will permit me to escort yourself and your nieces to the tea-tent, and to see that you have all you want."

"Oh—er—thank you—er—Captain Anstruther. But—er—I—er—I have changed my mind. I—I—shall not go to tea just at present. There seems to—er—be—rather—a—a—crowd in the tent."

The excuse was surprisingly lame on the part of a lady who ten seconds before had been in such a desperate hurry to reach the tea-tent. But the Captain was not to be offended.

"I think you are quite right," he said. "Awful crowd there just now. Deuced hot and uncomfortable! Much better to wait out here for a bit, and enjoy this lovely air."

"But pray don't let me keep you from going to tea, Captain Anstruther."

"Oh, not at all—not at all," replied that warrior, cheerfully. "I'd rather wait, don't you know."

Aunt Ida bit her lip and looked very much annoyed. The tailor's dummy, however, even if he had been compact of actual wax, could not have preserved a more unintelligent, imperturbable demeanour. He appeared utterly impervious to her hints—utterly ignorant of the fact that he was not wanted. He wore his blandest smile, and talked in his most self-satisfied manner. Although Aunt Ida hardly answered him, he discoursed away quite unabashed.

And yet he was really watching her all the while with the utmost keenness. There was something new in her manner to-day—something that he could not understand. She had often been rude to him before; often given him the broadest hints that his presence was undesirable. But now there was an uneasy agitation in her rudeness—an evidently desperate hurry to get rid of him, which (in his opinion) could only be accounted for by the fact that she was expecting somebody else, whom she did not wish him (the Captain) to meet. Lovers are proverbially suspicious. Bertie Anstruther at once jumped to the conclusion that Miss Frampton had some other man in view for Jessie, whom she was expecting to join them now at any minute. This, no doubt, accounted for Helen's peculiar look. He instantly registered a vow that wild horses should not move him away until he had seen the thing out.

His suspicions were shortly corroborated by a proposal which Miss Frampton made suddenly, and with the most palpable eagerness.

"Captain Anstruther," she said, forcing herself to speak more politely than she had yet done, "I—I—my head is aching rather, and I do not think that I could stand the heat of that crowded tent. But there is no reason why everybody should be kept waiting on my account. W—won't you t—take Helen and give her some tea?"

The Captain felt himself unexpectedly cornered. It would be altogether too rude to refuse to take Helen; and yet if he did take her, that other chap might come in his absence, and——

He was helped out of his difficulty by Helen herself.

"Oh, not me, Auntie, dear," she exclaimed, sweetly. "I don't want my tea a bit. But poor Jessie here is simply dying for hers. You had better take Jessie, Captain Anstruther."

"Delighted," said the warrior, smiling gratefully at Helen, and offering Jessie his arm with extreme alacrity.

Aunt Ida turned upon Helen a look of unutterable wrath. She was evidently about to interpose. She moved a step towards Jessie; then stopped with surprising suddenness, turned a quick, uneasy glance on the grass at her feet, and actually suffered the Captain to lead Jessie away without let or hindrance. It was a most surprising thing. Quite a miracle. Not until she had actually reached the tent, and seen that her aunt was not following, could poor little Jessie believe that her good fortune was real.

"Helen," began Aunt Ida, in an awful voice, as soon as the Captain was out of earshot, "Helen!"

But Helen was not listening. She had her face turned towards two well-dressed young men, who had been hovering near for some time, trying to catch her eye, and who now came hurrying forward, as she greeted them with a bow and a smile.

"How do you do, Mr. Greenstock? How do you do, Mr. Halliwell? Auntie, dear, pray let me introduce—Mr. Greenstock, Miss Frampton; Mr. Halliwell, Miss Frampton."

"Delighted, I'm sure," murmured the first young gentleman.

"Charmed, indeed," simpered the second.

Aunt Ida did not say that she was either charmed or delighted. Perhaps it would not have been much use if she had. Her looks would utterly have belied her words. Rage, uneasiness, and a most unaccountable agitation—an agitation which caused her to keep looking with fearful anxiety at the toes of her patent shoes—made themselves apparent in every line of her face. But the two young men seemed just as obtuse as Captain Anstruther, for they remained chattering with Helen and her aunt for nearly half an hour, never in the least perceiving that their presence was irksome and obnoxious to the elder lady.

At length Captain Anstruther and Jessie came back; and Messrs. Halliwell and Greenstock raised their hats and departed. The Captain appeared to be in the highest feather. Little Jessie looked blushing and timid, but was evidently radiant with happiness. They had spent a blissful half-hour together. They had said their good-bye—a true lovers' good-bye—uninterrupted. Fortified by that sweet, entrancing interview, and by the vows of eternal constancy which each had made and ratified by—well, by the lovers' usual process—they now felt ready to face anything. Their parting could not fail to be bitter; but this last interview had made it at least tolerable. And Helen had managed it all for them; but how?

* * * * *

"You—you—wicked, cruel, immodest girls! you did this on purpose," stormed Aunt Ida, perfectly pale with fury, when at length Captain Anstruther had gone away and left aunt and nieces alone together.

"Oh, Auntie!" protested Jessie. "How can you say so? You know——"

"It is all right!" struck in Helen, cheerfully. "Jess is perfectly innocent of the whole affair, Aunt. I am the culprit."

"You—you—little Jezebel! You h—h—have the f—f—face to confess your sh—shameless, im—improper conduct?"

"Oh, dear, no! Nothing improper. Nobody saw it, you know, Aunt. At least, I don't think so—though I did see Mr. Greenstock looking rather hard at your feet once or twice. I admit it was a trifle cruel, perhaps, to keep you standing for an hour in the same position, when you were dying to join the Duchess at tea. However, instead of wasting time in abusing me, I would recommend you, Auntie dear, to make use of these precious moments of solitude to extricate yourself from your embarrassment. You stand on that side, Jess, I'll stand on this; and then Aunt will be quite screened from observation."

Miss Frampton gasped with wrath. But she saw the urgent necessity of carrying out Helen's suggestion. With unwonted agility, she skipped out of something lying about her ankles, something in natural wool, which she snatched up and hastily rolled in her waterproof.

Jessie could not repress a quick little cry of surprise, as she realised that she owed that day's happiness to Helen and a Jaeger under-garment.

MUSIC.

END OF THE CONCERT SEASON.

THE concert season which has now ended has developed some curious features. It lasted, as usual, from the autumn till early in July, the greatest rush being in November and early December, and from March till June. Two or three new comers, to the chagrin of some of the concert managers who cannot get off the beaten track, started at the end of September, and thereby gained for themselves a degree of attention which they certainly would not have secured later on. In the autumn complaints were made of short attendance at some of the orchestral concerts, but these were due to faulty programmes rather than to any falling off in the popularity of such entertainments. Mr. Henschel, particularly, is not at all likely to repeat the experiment of devoting an entire season to the music of any single composer, even though that composer be Beethoven. Some of the Ballad Concerts had to be bolstered up by operatic vocalists and dramatic reciters. The severe competition, however, proved a perfect mine of wealth to the artists.

London is still the only city in the kingdom which suffers from a paucity of oratorio choirs. The Albert Hall was never intended to be confined to three Patti and ten annual oratorio performances, of the latter, half being devoted either to the "Messiah," or to Messrs. Novello's new and other copyrights. An impression has got abroad that the Royal Choral Society, of which that popular musician, Dr. "Westminster" Bridge has now been appointed conductor, have a monopoly of the Albert Hall. But this is not the case, and although the Council will not, for their own sake, let their magnificent building to an indifferent choir, yet the Leslie and Bach choirs have given performances there, and the hall is open to any manager with pluck and real artistic aims. The Queen's Hall choir has improved, but with room for much more improvement, while big audiences have been drawn to oratorios by numerous choirs in the East End, and on Sunday nights by the Sunday League at Queen's Hall.

It is being drilled into the heads of pianists (and, which is of more importance, into those of their agents) that the pianoforte recital is not altogether the want of the age. The guinea recital stall is, with the exception of the solitary recital expected each season from M. Paderewski, a self-evident absurdity. A few personal admirers and friends may pay such prices, but the general public are not so foolish, and when the same executants, with practically the same programmes, give recitals in Germany to three or five shilling audiences, the nonsense is the more strongly marked. This year also to a greater extent than ever, the practice has grown of expecting the pianoforte maker to contribute towards the pianist's fee, and hence the name of the manufacturer on the concert pianoforte is becoming bigger and bigger. The advertisement is paid for and must be taken out somehow. The unexpected absence of M. Paderewski and Herr Rosenthal (who would do well to abandon his "Historical Recitals," as nobody here needs this educational process) has been a great thing for the smaller fry, though not for the Philharmonic. Executants, both pianists and violinists, are however gradually replacing recitals by chamber music concert programmes, and they are wise. As to quartet concerts the ensemble of the Kneisel Quartet has been as great an eye-opener in this branch as the advent of Dr. Richter sixteen years ago was to orchestral music. The ordinary Popular Concert Quartet party can claim an average experience of half a century apiece, and it is well that they should occasionally make way for younger men.

The most successful of the season's orchestral concerts have again been those devoted to Wagner's music and directed by German conductors of the Richter and Mottl stamp. M. Lamoureux's orchestra, too, gained such artistic success as practically to frighten away M. Colonne. The Sunday Concerts will have a better chance when a proper payment of the bandsmen may secure adequate rehearsals. As to the Philharmonic, the non-arrival of the three stars, Paderewski, Sembrich, and Rosenthal was a piece of ill-luck. The amateur bands are gradually creeping up. The Stock Exchange orchestra give performances which would be a credit to many a professional organisation; and I do not desire to hear better playing than that last Wednesday by a party of ladies of the aristocracy under the bâton of the Countess of Radnor; who, in the old Henry Leslie days, many of us recollect as that gifted musician and conductor, the Viscountess Folkestone. This party, who, among a string band and chorus of about 180, boast over fifty ladies of title, blithely took the guineas at St. James's Hall on Wednesday, and on the following night went down to the East End, where they found a working-class audience, at threepence a head, just as critical and even more appreciative.

My surmise that before the autumn was out the names of many people would be mentioned in print as possible entrepreneurs of Covent Garden has already come true. A dozen names have, quite without authority, cropped up this week. Three of them are, of course, obviously hopeless, for Mr. D'Oyly Carte, Mr. George Edwardes, and Messrs. Gatti are the last people in the world to embark on such a speculation. I have also been confidently informed that no fewer than four gentlemen have "got the lease," which is, it seems, news to Mr. Faber, the ground lessee. Meanwhile, the lease of Covent Garden is still for sale, and any one willing to pay the price may make his deposit to-morrow morning. At the present moment it seems possible that the American and London enterprises may be merged, under the general direction of Mr. Maurice Grau and under a committee of subscribers represented by Mr. Higgins. But there are obvious difficulties in the way of such an arrangement; and also between now and March many things may happen.

Meanwhile the memorial to Sir A. Harris unaccountably hangs fire. The correspondence, supported chiefly by dramatic and musical artists and theatrical tradesmen, seems to have been stopped by the Daily Telegraph, a paper which, whatever its faults, has its finger on the pulse of the middle-class public. I believe, however, the matter is not to be dropped. This week a committee will probably be appointed to collect the money, and the proceeds of the gala night at the Opera on the 27th will doubtless go to the fund. What shall be done with the cash can be decided after the collection is complete. The public evidently do not think much of the statue idea, and, indeed, to place it in Drury-lane, the lease of which expires in five and a-half years, or in Covent Garden, which any year may become a potato market, would be manifestly absurd.

"Mefistofele," which has been waiting for Mme. Calvé, was given at Covent Garden last week with a—for the most part—familiar cast. Miss McIntyre was, at any rate, an excellent Margaret, and although no successor has yet appeared to Signor Nanetti, yet M. Edouard de Reszke sang very finely the music allotted by Boito to the emissary of Satan. "Carmen," which also had waited for Mme. Calvé, was sung last week by Mme. de Lussan, of the Carl Rosa troupe. This week we are to have Massenet's "Manon," with Mme. Melba, and perhaps "Les Huguenots."

Mr. Hedmondt will probably hire Covent Garden for a short season in the autumn, chiefly for Wagner's operas in English. Wagner's advanced works are, I am told, the property for stage use here for some years of Harris's executors, and although there may be some doubts whether "Faust" and "Carmen" are strictly copyright as against managers who have mounted them before, yet practically the whole of the Jean de Reszke repertory is in the executors' hands. These sole rights ought certainly to be extinguished (or surrendered for a consideration) on death, or relinquishment of management. If Lady Harris liked (which, happily, she is not at all likely to do) to refuse to grant licenses to perform, it would be an awkward fix not only for our leading operatic tenor, but also for Wagner lovers generally.

Mr. Daniel Mayer's concert agency, which has been for some time in the market, has now passed into other hands. Down to the time of the actual transfer on Friday week, it was supposed that the new man would be Mr. Görlitz, M. Paderewski's secretary. But Mr. Görlitz left on Saturday to organise a tour for his wife, Mme. Sherwin, in South Africa, and the purchaser of the Mayer business is Mr. Adlington, of the firm of Muir, Wood, & Co., Glasgow. This means that the agency will be carried on exactly the same as before, with Mr. J. D. Maclaren as manager, and with the indefatigable Miss Josephs and the old staff. Otherwise, we believe, Mr. Maclaren would have started on his own account, and most of the leading artists, with whom he is very popular, would probably have followed him. Mr. Daniel Mayer meanwhile will not be idle, for he is looking after his Erard pianos and his Resonator.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Two interesting books on Persia I have lately read, Dr. Treacher Collins' "In the Kingdom of the Shah" (1) and the "Persia Revisited" (2) of General Sir T. E. Gordon, give a favourable picture of the late Shah, though neither was written under the influence of the shock of horror produced by his assassination. His assassination was itself indirectly due to his Majesty's magnanimity, since he had spared Jemal-ed-Din, its instigator, who, by the way, had taken refuge in the very shrine where his instrument afterwards murdered the Shah. It is true that the Shah made a false start at the beginning of his long reign by having his brother-in-law and Grand Vizier — the ablest and honestest Minister modern Persia has had—bled to death. No sooner was the crime committed, however, than it was repented of, and the repentance took the characteristically Eastern form of marrying the murdered Minister's infant daughters to the two sons of his remorseful master. Henceforward the Shah seems to have shown himself a singularly sagacious and beneficent despot, with the result of an advance in the civilisation of Persia which surprised Sir Thomas E. Gordon on his second visit. The improvement, however, has not yet extended to medical science, which, according to Dr. Treacher Collins, is in an infantile condition. The doctor was hurried off on the very day of his marriage to attend the Shah's eldest son for an affection of the eyes, and his account of the state of medical science in Persia reminds one of Voltaire's exhaustive classification of physicians—"those who kill you, and those who let you die." "The art of prescribing," says Dr. Collins, "consists of giving a hot remedy for a cold disease, and a cold remedy for a hot one. . . . . A favourite method of treating inflammatory affections of the eye is by fumigating them with the smoke from burning asses' dung." And he sums up their system in the verse wherein the famous Dr. Lettsom expressed his whole art:—

> When patients come to I,
> I physics, bleeds, and sweats 'em;
> Then, if they choose to die,
> What's that to I? I lets 'em.

The author of "The Best Tour in Norway"—now in its third edition—has been encouraged by its success to take us "to fresh woods and pastures new" in that country. Woods and pastures seem to be the distinctive features of this "New Ground in Norway" (3), i.e., Southern Norway, which "is essentially a green land, richly fertile in timber and foliage; possessing, so to speak, a clothed wildness in striking contrast to the more naked savagery of the north." It will certainly not be Mr. Goodman's fault if there should be no partial diversion of the stream of tourists—flowing now to the Western Fjords and to the North Cape—towards Rinerike, Telemarken, and Sæterdalen; for nothing can be more tempting than his descriptions of the places and of the people of the South. One of the most interesting chapters of the book is that entitled, "Ibsen at Home," though Mr. Goodman's portrait of the self-conscious poet is a little disillusioning. "If Dr. Henrik Ibsen is regarded by a certain class of tourists as a sort of show, he really has only himself to thank for it; for he makes himself very much en évidence. Everybody who visits Christiania asks every one else, 'Have you seen Ibsen?' and, indeed, it is difficult to avoid seeing him. At a certain hour, shortly after the usual time for aftensmad, there is to be observed slowly sauntering down the Carl Johans Gade a somewhat solidly-built man, a little below the middle height, dressed in a suit of black broad-cloth, with coat buttoned across the chest, wearing the neatest of gloves, walking with one hand behind his back, and carrying an umbrella in the other, who, with keen, watchful eyes surveys the passers-by, and now and then salutes some acquaintance, or one of the many strangers who greet him, by lifting his glossy silk hat. And in that hat he keeps a small mirror which he produces occasionally, together with a little comb, in order to touch up his bushy grey hair and spreading whiskers. Dr. Ibsen's hair and whiskers are, in fact, characteristic of his remarkable physiognomy, of which a hawk-like nose and firmly-compressed lips are peculiar features." If not more interesting, more varied at least in its interest is Major A. F. Mockler-Ferryman's "In the Northman's Land" (4), a most pleasant chronicle of travel, sport, and folk-lore in the Hardinger Fjord and Fjeld. In his modest preface the Major says that his book is meant principally for the newcomer who knows nothing of Norway, and even to him he apologises for the elementary guidance occasionally given. For my own part, however, I would not wish a word away of this interesting mélange, while the chapters on the reindeer and the stalking thereof are particularly enjoyable. "In all kinds of sport," says the Major, "and especially in big-game shooting, the real enjoyment depends on the amount of difficulty and labour required for success;" and he would be an exacting voluptuary who craved more of these essentials of "real enjoyment" than reindeer stalking supplies. "Multa tulit fecitque, sudavit et alsit." Apropos of sport of this kind, Mr. W. A. Baillie-Grohman, whose "Camps in the Rockies" gave you such pleasure years ago, has just published, under the title of "Sport in the Alps" (5), an account of the chase of the chamois, red-deer, bouquetin, roe-deer, capercaille, and black cock, with personal adventures and historical notes, and some sporting reminiscences of H.R.H. the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. This delightful book helps you in some measure to understand the fascination the sport it describes had for the Duke, who a couple of hours before he was struck down himself had slain two royals, and whose ruling passion was so strong in death that his last unconscious words were, "Let the drive commence!" For fifty-six years H.R.H. had shot his forests, and the incredible number of deer driven up to his rifle which he slaughtered in that time would provoke a cynic to pronounce upon him the epitaph Teufelsdröckh composed for Count Zachdarm, surnamed "The Great." "Qui dum sub lunâ agebat, quinque mille perdrices plumbo confecit." Talking of Teufelsdröckh, I see "Sartor Resartus" (6) has appeared in the "Nineteenth Century Classics Series," which Mr. Clement K. Shorter has been selected to edit—an admirable choice. This cheap and handsome edition of "Sartor Resartus" has for its frontispiece a very fine portrait of Carlyle, while it is prefaced by an introduction from the pen of Professor Dowden, and by the letter John Sterling addressed to Carlyle on the first publication of the work in 1835.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—I am sure you will envy me immensely when I tell you that I have seen—actually seen with these very eyes—the sweetly pretty wedding frock in which Princess Maud of Wales is to become Princess Charles of Denmark. It has been made by Mesdames Berthé & Yeo, and consists of white satin, woven at Spitalfields, and does that centre of industry great credit, not only by reason of its delightful texture, but on account of the beautiful tone of white, with nothing chilly or wan about it. As befits a young and happy bride, it is in a warm and blithe tone of ivory white, and where the folds overlap each other the under ones show this lovely ivory tint to perfection. The skirt spreads out in a Court train four and a half yards long at the back. In front and at the sides it is bordered with a double ruche of white chiffon with sprays of white jasmine, orange blossom and myrtle laid in between. The bodice is in folds of satin most becomingly disposed about the figure and caught in closely to the waist by a silver belt sewn with brilliants. Round the shoulders are folds of chiffon with sprays of the bridal flowers, and at the back there is a bow of the chiffon with a spray of flowers drooping carelessly over it. The sleeves are puffings of white chiffon, and between these a spray of the flowers is embroidered. It is a sweet dress, and pretty Princess Maud-Charlotte-Mary-Victoria will look delicious in it.

I must tell you about some other gowns of her trousseau, selecting those that are quite the sweetest. One is a white satin evening dress, with a lovely little bodice covered with white silk muslin, embroidered in a design resembling cobwebs. These are worked in cream-coloured silk outlined with silver sequins, and in the centre of each web is a large pearl, sewn round with sequins. Over the top of the bodice, front and back, is turned down a single fold of black net, embroidered in diamonds in outward-tending lines like the veinings of a leaf. The sleeves are white silk muslin, and there is a most becoming little belt of black satin sewn thickly over with brilliants.

The bride-to-be is very fond of a light tone of pinkish mauve, which suits her softly-brilliant complexion extremely well. Another favourite colour of hers is citron. A dress also made by Mesdames Berthé & Yeo is black broché silk with a bodice of Irish poplin in citron. There is a wide pleat in front with three jet buttons, and epaulettes and boléro of fine black lace. And another gown is mauve glacé silk of the pinkish shade I have referred to, striped with satin of the same tone. High to the neck, there is a berthé-shaped trimming of fine needle-run point d'Alençon sewn with topaz, amethysts, and brilliants. Folds of similar jewelled lace cover the collar.

I believe I have already mentioned that high dresses are now always worn at the play by the smartest sets, and when full-dress is necessary, on account of going on somewhere afterwards, the evening cape or fichu is retained. A sweet little theatre gown has been made for the Princess in a rose-petal shade of pink Roman satin, the high bodice crossed with lines of fine black lace insertion, as well as the sleeves, which are long enough to reach the wrists and fall over the hands in points. The collar is folded pink chiffon with another collar of one fold of the same turned down over it and edged with narrow black lace. This is a particularly pretty arrangement, which I know you would admire and immediately copy.

Besides these, the same firm, who have made for Princess Maud for many years, as well as for her sister and mother, have provided morning gowns in sprigged muslin and fine flannel, gracefully trimmed and beautifully finished, besides a quantity of delicate lingerie, much of which is marked with a double "M," interlaced, and a Royal crown. The Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund has also embroidered some very fine handkerchiefs of Irish lawn for Princess Maud in the same way, and they have made for her a lovely lace collar as well.

Madame Duboc, of Clifford-street, Bond-street, is contributing two most charming tea-gowns to the trousseau. One is in yellow moire velours made with an embroidery of silver sequins on the shoulders and down the centre of the back in a tapering line fitting closely to the figure, the moire flowing out from the yoke on either side of it. The full sleeves have a cascade of deep cream-coloured lace falling over them. A white satin belt surrounds the waist, left visible by the outward flow of the pleats. The other tea-gown is pink flowered silk crêpe made over cream-coloured glacé silk, with yellowish lace arranged in rippling cascades about the neck and shoulders. The back is en Watteau, and there is a deep collar of the cream-coloured silk bordered with the yellowish lace and a ruff of the same. Of several ruffles one is in écru Valenciennes, another in mauve chiffon with laburnum flowers, and a third is cream-colour with mauve poppies. Yet another is black with mauve roses.

A very pretty ruffle in pale pink silk poppy petals is provided by Graham & Son, Mount-street, who also have made morning gowns in pale tones of silk in a texture that recalls the crinkling of cream on a deep milk pan. One of these, in pale blue, is bordered all round with a ruche of blue marabout feather. A wide-shaped belt of blue moire finishes it at the waist. This firm is supplying very dainty jackets in a mixture of silk and wool of English make. One or two are white, others in pale tints, and all are trimmed with lace in varied ways, the full sleeves drawn in at the wrists with ribbons to match the silk. Silk petticoats in cream, pink, or blue are flounced and trimmed with torchon or Valenciennes.

Busvine has made the riding-habits, which are of the length now customary, just covering the stirrup foot. The skirts are plain, of course, and the jackets for the most part fit tightly to the pretty little figure, the well-known skill of this king of cloth appearing in their perfect cut. The waistcoats are chiefly made of fancy drill, one with a small, neat pattern in blue, another in pink, and so on. A covert coat has strapped seams, and, though tight at the back, is straight in front, and has a velvet collar.

We noticed, in looking at the riding-boots supplied to the trousseau by Atloff & Norman, of Bond-street, that a plug is introduced in front of the heel to prevent the stirrup from slipping. Blocks at the ankle and above it prevent the stirrup leather from galling the flesh. Very high, strong boots are provided for shooting and climbing. For cycling the goloshes are patent leather with blue cloth tops, or brown goloshes with stockinette tops made very high, and resembling gaiters. For evening wear are the daintiest possible shoes of gold or silver kid bronze, embroidered with iridescent sequins, blue satin worked in steel, white satin embroiderd in silver, or in pearls and gold sequins, and satin shoes to match all the evening gowns.

Redfern has made a number of very sweet gowns for the trousseau. A greyish-blue canvas, lined with pink and blue shot chené silk has revers and a wide, folded belt of black satin, the former being edged with cream-coloured lace. There is a vest of pale blue and white striped chené silk flowered over with small pink blossoms. Another very chic dress is in green shot glacé with a pin-spot in black. A vest of rich gold brocade is introduced, and the tight sleeves are rucked black chiffon over green. Three tabs of the silk fall over each shoulder, edged with green crystal trimming, and a similar trimming finishes the sides of the bodice where they touch the vest. A deep, black satin belt finishes this smart gown at the waist.

A navy serge coat and skirt are made with a pale pink lawn fancy shirt trimmed on the collar and down the front with Valenciennes. The navy blue Eton coat is made with white cloth revers, and is such a lovely cut, clinging closely in to the figure.

We admired very much another of the trousseau gowns in a summer tweed, light of texture and very cool in colouring, being a mixture of faint blue and white. It was made up in skirt and open coat, with a full basque at the back; and to be worn with it were several shirts and blouses. A cape of fawn cloth, lined with shot blue and green and rose striped silk, had round the edge at regular intervals ornamental tabs of blue velvet, over which the fawn cloth was cut away. Similar tabs trimmed the front and the collar, which was high, but cut in one with the cape itself. Another cape was in black cloth trimmed with lines of gimp down the front and on the seams, and made with a very high collar, spreading out in a point at either side of the chin.

If you want something peculiarly smart and dainty, and yet workmanlike, in yachting gowns, so as to be in readiness for Cowes, come up to town and go to look in at Redfern's in Conduit-street and see the frocks he has made for a new play. They are all composed on the same theme, the details being infinitely varied. Some have blue serge zouaves over white skirts, while others are chiefly blue with relief of white braid, and all look so smart and neat as to be most tempting.

Sir John Hutton's handsome daughter, Winifred, had a sweetly-pretty wedding on Monday afternoon at the parish church of St. Marylebone, which was beautifully decorated with palms, flowers, and tropical plants. The bridegroom was Dr. Alexander Carson-Smyth, and the bride's brother was best man. There were four groomsmen besides, an old and sensible fashion revived, and one that should be dear to the heart of bridesmaids, so often did it lead to other marriages in the days when it was practised, to judge from the novels of the period. Two small train-bearers were picturesque in white satin sacques and Dutch bonnets to match.

The cheap sales are cheap this year. I have never seen anything like it. Redmayne has some wonderful brocades, suèdes, coloured silks, glacés, brocaded satins, chiné silks and satins, foulards, taffetas, and black silks at very low prices, and among them some perfectly lovely "Chameleon" peau de soie, a delicious material shot in three colours, which ought to be reserved for the wear of youth and beauty. Their grass lawns, plain and otherwise, are being offered at very low prices. Cloaks, capes, coats, and pelisses are being sold at half price. They are this season's models, so that they are perfectly fresh and up-to-date, a point in which Redmayne's particularly excel, notwithstanding their "popular prices." I admired their coloured batiste dressing-gowns, pale mauve, blue, or pink, trimmed with black embroidery, and only 25s. each. In the costume department there are abundant bargains, light glacé silk costume skirts being very much reduced, and black satin dress skirts being sold at a little over half their ordinary price.

You should have seen the crowd round the blouse department, like flies on one of those dreadful "catch-'em-alive-ohs." Shirts and fronts, contiguous, were also surrounded, and sunshades, marked down, shared in the boom. With our usual prudence and foresight we had sent for a catalogue of the sale beforehand, had carefully studied it, and marked what we wanted; and, armed with it, found our way to the various departments without loss of time. We secured some dress-lengths of shot alpaca and fancy grenadines on highly advantageous terms, and came away well pleased with ourselves.

So your friend wants to know where he can have corsets made. I can't tell him, I am sorry to say. Surely he knows some man who wears them and from whom he can procure the necessary information. But perhaps he would not like to ask questions on the subject. Perhaps his corset-wearing acquaintance would deny the soft impeachment. Shall I ask Esmeralda for an address for him? Is he very anxious? If so, wire me, and I will write "haste, post-haste" to relieve his mind on so important a subject.

The Theatrical Bazaar at Queen's Hall was great fun. There were so many pretty faces, lovely figures, and sweet voices that a high charge ought to have been made for mere admission. The object is to found an orphanage for the children of actors. Mrs. C. L. Carson, of whose good works in the cause of charity I have often written you in connection with the Theatrical Ladies' Guild, is one of the founders, and Mrs. Clement Scott is the other. The stalls were really pretty, and were free from the hackneyed sameness of which one is so tired at ordinary bazaars. At a pale pink tent in the centre stood Mrs. Bancroft, looking charming in black moire with creamy lace about the shoulders, and a bonnet with shaded roses in it. Mr. Lionel Brough was most energetic in the sale of some small articles in a basket. I could not see, or have forgotten, what they were. He looked immensely serious over it. Miss Fanny Brough, in a blue satin skirt, a green chené silk blouse, and a blue and green hat, was blithe and brisk, as is her wont. Mrs. Carson wore a very becoming arrangement of white and black. Blue-eyed Miss Boucicault complained that some of the people she asked to have a dip in her lucky bag were cross with her. I can't think how they could have been. Everybody wanted to stare at Trilby, who looked most charming in a white muslin, spotted with blue, and a hat with roses in it. A sort of chiton in fawn cloth fell over the shoulders. Mrs. Bernard Beere, fragile of aspect after her long illness, was picturesque in a Worth gown of black satin or moire, with a graceful arrangement of lace about the bodice, and a hat with many snowy plumes. Miss Violet Vanbrugh wore white, her hat garlanded with green poppies, and trimmed with white feathers. Miss Esmé and Miss Vere Beringer made a very striking duet as they went about together, one in Only seven days now remain of Madame KATE REILY'S Sale, 11 & 12, Dover-street. All the remaining Gowns and Mantles have been still further reduced, and are all this season's models.

SKATING. RIDING. CYCLING.—An elegant and graceful up-to-date figure is produced by the easy and perfect fit of the ingenious and appropriate Stays built by Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London, W.

white, the other in yellow. How much prettier are pretty women off the stage than on!

Miss Olga Nethersole was most sumptuously attired in a dinner-gown of pleated yellow crêpe and white satin, cut square at the neck, and revealing pearls and diamonds. Her immense hat was crowned with many ostrich plumes. Mrs. Charles Compton, her soft dark eyes animated by the light of active benevolence, had a most amusing arrangement, consisting of a plank, down which dolls turned head over heels. Their faces were made to represent Mr. Irving and Mr. Toole.

There was a feeling of hilarity in the air. Every one looked blithe and gay; and with it all there was plenty of work done for the orphanage.

And now to turn to matters culinary. If you try these "Croustades à la Marinière," I am sure you will agree that they are a charming little entrée. First make the croustade cases in this way:—

Mix 2 oz. of flour with the yolk of an egg, a pinch of salt, and sufficient cold water to make a smooth, elastic paste, roll it out very thin, cut it into rounds with a round cutter, and with them line a dozen small Madéline moulds, using a wedge of the trimmings of paste to press them into shape, fill the cups with fine tapioca that is mixed with a little lard, and bake them a nice golden colour. Turn out the moulds very carefully, and free the cases from the filling. Now blanch the soft roes of four or five mackerel by boiling them for ten minutes in salted boiling water, drain them carefully on a cloth, cut them in even dice-shaped pieces and put them into a little good white sauce that is mixed with a little cream, the yolk of an egg, a dessertspoonful of chopped parsley, a little lemon juice, and a little salt and pepper. Fill the croustades with the prepared roes, put hard-boiled yolk of egg that is passed through a wire sieve on the top, dish them on a napkin, and garnish with fried parsley.

If you have an "ice bombe" mould, try this recipe:—

Pack the bottom of the mould in well mixed ice and salt, then line both halves of the mould with vanilla ice cream and fill the centre with frozen bananas. Put a strip of buttered paper round the join, and imbed the mould in ice and salt for two hours. For the vanilla ice, put the yolks of 4 eggs into a basin, pour on half a pint of boiling milk, in which has been dissolved 4 oz. of sugar, stir on the stove in a stewpan until thick, then whisk until cold; strain into a basin, flavour with essence of vanilla, and mix it with a gill of whipped cream. For the banana mixture, make a syrup with 8 oz. of loaf sugar and half a pint of water; when it is sufficiently boiled, strain, add the juice of an orange and 6 ripe bananas; cut into slices with a silver knife, put them into the freezing machine and turn slowly until nearly frozen, then stir in a gill and a half of whipped cream and a dessertspoonful of maraschino or curaçao, turn the machine again until the fruit is frozen to a creamy consistency, but not a solid mass.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

Cravenette

Is the Name given to all Goods Waterproofed by the CRAVENETTE CO., LTD.

It is no malodorous air-tight material like rubber-coated Cloths, giving one a Turkish bath with one's own vapours. Nor is it a fabric covered with a thin fragile scale of water-repelling chemicals which crack and crumble with wear, giving the cloth a dusty look and destroying its waterproofing qualities.

CRAVENETTE WATERPROOFED COATINGS, CLOAKINGS, SERGES, SILKS, and all DRESS FABRICS are unlike any waterproof cloths ever before placed on the market. They are indistinguishable in appearance or odour from the same goods not waterproofed.

They are perfectly porous, and consequently hygienic.

They never change in appearance nor in rain-repelling quality.

They may be had in all the newest fabrics both in heavy and light weights. The latter serve also as Dust Protectors, and are cool and indispensable for summer wear.

Always see to it that goods purchased for Cravenette are so stamped. Absence of the stamp may be taken as evidence that the goods are not genuine.

The Cravenette Co. does not proof or stamp any goods that are not of a thoroughly reliable quality. "Cravenette" proofed cloths are obtainable both in made-up garments and by the yard at all the leading drapers.

KINGSCLERE.

By JOHN PORTER. Edited by BYRON WEBBER. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"To the lover of sport this handsome volume will afford an abundance of entertainment. The volume, moreover, is a substantial addition to the history of the British Turf."—Daily News.

"There have been many books on racing matters published within the last few years, but in 'Kingsclere' we have the most important contribution to Turf history. Everyone concerned in racing will read it with intense interest." —Morning.

TRAVEL AND TALK.

By Rev. H. R. HAWEIS, M.A. With Portraits. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"These two attractive volumes are a cultured observer's records of a hundred thousand miles of travel, and they include such diverse experiences as a conversation with Oliver Wendell Holmes and a talk with a Fiji cannibal, a discourse on music and morals and an estimate of Mormonism, a eulogy of the learned girls of Vassar College and an appreciation of the swarthy belles of Honolulu. Mr. Haweis is a discerning traveller and a capital talker, and he talks as familiarly of a San Francisco opium den, the extinct moa, South Sea missions, hummingbirds, butterflies, and wild buffaloes, as of the intellectual life of Boston and New York. In his capacity of lecturer and preacher, Mr. Haweis came into close acquaintance with most of the cultured men and women of the cities and towns which he visited, and he gives much information that is new and personal concerning Emerson, Holmes, Longfellow, Phillips, Brooks, Lowell, Howells, Mrs. Bigelow, Mrs. Stowe, and other eminent persons in whom his numerous readers will be interested. It is altogether an exceedingly diverting, refreshing, and instructive work."—Daily Mail.

"A GREAT BOOK."

The Seats of the Mighty.

By GILBERT PARKER. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 6s. Third Edition.

"A REALY FINE NOVEL."

"The best thing he has done; one of the best things that anyone has done lately."—St. James's Gazette,

"In 'The Seats of the Mighty' he shows the matured power which his former novels have led us to expect, and has produced a really fine historical novel."—Athenæum.

THE CENTRAL FIGURE OF THE BOOK.

". . . The great creation of the book is Doltaire. . . . His character is drawn with quite masterly strokes, for he is a villain who is not altogether a villain, and who attracts the reader, as he did the other characters, by the extraordinary brilliance of his gifts, and by the almost unconscious acts of nobility which he performs."—Athenæum.

"Doltaire fascinates you.—Black and White.

"Doltaire is a fascinating presence."—Standard.

"ENTHRALLING IN EFFECT."

"A work of fine solidity and finish. The story is most enthralling in effect, most skilfully told, being compact of that kind of realism which is the romancer's wine of history, and of the magic that is the romancer's first gift."—Daily Chronicle.

"The fine talent of Mr. Parker has never wrought more finely."—Globe.

"A FINE AND BEAUTIFUL ROMANCE."

"The story is very finely and dramatically told. . . . In none of his books has his imaginative faculty appeared to such splendid purpose as here. Captain Moray, Alixe Gabord, Vauban—above all, Doltaire—are clearly conceived and finely drawn and individualised."—Scotsman.

"A fine and beautiful romance, woven with extraordinary power."—Liverpool Post.

"A GREAT BOOK."

"Mr. Parker's latest book places him in the front rank of living novelists. 'The Seats of the Mighty' is a great book."—Black and White.

"WILL RANK AMONG THE CLASSICS."

"The story deserves the very highest praise, and will in time rank among the classics of English fiction."—Western Morning News.

The Chartered Company.

The PIONEERS of EMPIRE; being a Vindication of the Principle and a Short Sketch of the History of Chartered Companies, with special reference to the British South Africa Company. By AN IMPERIALIST. Crown 8vo, with a map, 1s.

A BOOK FOR THE DAY.

"A useful, readable book; the case for the Company is neatly put."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"'An Imperialist' is a writer who thinks strongly and argues vigorously in favour of the principle of Chartered Companies, and who has very evidently an intimate knowledge of the working advantages of that principle as practically applied in South Africa. His book is an opportune one at the present moment, when discussion on the subject is so rife, and his readers will find in it an array of admirably marshalled facts in support of the patriotic work accomplished by the British South Africa Company."—Daily Mail.

AN OPPORTUNE WORK.

"An excellent and opportune work on the various Chartered Companies which have exercised their influence in creating the British Empire. We earnestly commend it to all persons who wish to get a clear idea of the work of Chartered Companies in general, and of the British South Africa Company in particular."—African Review.

"He writes of the British South Africa Company with minute knowledge and with great force. The nature of the problems with which the Directors have had to contend, and the extent of the success which has attended their efforts, are carefully set forth, and this chapter forms a most interesting contribution to a subject on which a good deal of ignorance prevails. His case is fairly and logically argued, and forms a very strong vindication of the British South Africa Company."—Scotsman.

DUKE-STREET and RYDER-STREET, ST. JAMES'.—By order of the Mortgagees.—On the Crown Estate.—An important Block of Residential Chambers, with shops on the ground floor, occupying a convenient and central position between Piccadilly and Pall Mall, in the midst of Clubland, and in the heart of fashionable London. The premises are known as the St. James's Residential Chambers, and are situate at the corner of Duke-street and Ryder-street, to which they possess commanding frontages of about 110 feet and 120 feet respectively, and cover an area of about 10,300 square feet. They have a good elevation in stone, are of fireproof construction, and fitted with hydraulic passenger and service lifts, and comprise ground floor, basement, and five floors over. On the ground floor are secretary's office, porter's room, entrance-hall with separate entrances from Ryder-street and Duke-street, lavatories, &c. Also eleven capital Shops, known as Nos. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, and 42A, Duke-street, and Nos. 2A, 4, 6, 8, and 10, Ryder-street. The first, second, third and fourth floors are divided so as to form 57 suites of chambers, especially planned to meet the requirements of the neighbourhood, and comprising 25 double suites, each consisting of sitting-room, bedroom, bathroom, and w.c.; and 32 single suites, consisting of bedroom, bathroom, and w.c. On the fifth floor are two studios, ample servants' accommodation, brushing rooms, lavatories, &c.; and in the basement, kitchen, store-rooms, cellarage, and offices suitable for the requirements of an establishment of this description. There is also a yard at the rear with brick-built erection containing four men-servants' bedrooms. The gross rentals of the shops and chambers, including the estimated rental of a few suites at present unlet, amount to upwards of £7,000 per annum. The property is held for a term expiring January 5, 1961, at a ground rent of £1,435 per annum. There is also included in the sale a Leasehold Redemption Policy to secure the payment of £48,000 on December 25, 1960; and a Policy in the British Law Fire Office for £3,000 to secure rent in case of fire. The purchaser will have the option of taking at a valuation such of the furniture, fixtures, and fittings, linen, china, and property of the Mortgagors as he may require. An inventory will be produced at the sale.—Messrs.

DEBENHAM, TEWSON, FARMER & BRIDGEWATER will SELL the above important PROPERTY, at the Mart, on Thursday, July 23, at 2. Particulars of Messrs. Bompas, Bischoff & Co., Solicitors, 4, Great Winchester-street, E.C.; and of the Auctioneers, 80, Cheapside.

"A Juror: I don't think he knows where he are. (Renewed laughter.)"

From The Lancet, May 23rd, 1896.

AT AN INQUEST.

We extract the following paragraph from the Daily Mail of May 16th. Surely the coroner did not really allow this scene to take place?

Yesterday, during the holding of an inquest at Shoreditch, a doctor witness said he could not say the actual cause of death.—The coroner: Then go and make a post-mortem examination.—On his return the doctor said there was congestion of the lungs, but he could not say whether that or suffocation was the cause of death.—A juror: I don't think the doctor knows what he is about.—The doctor: Oh, yes, I do.—Another juror: I don't think so. I've been in the Army Medical Corps and know a little.—The doctor: And I've been an Army surgeon.—Another juror: Are you a doctor?—The doctor (indignantly): Most decidedly.—The foreman: Well, you are a funny one. (Laughter.)—A juror: I don't think he knows where he are. (Renewed laughter.)—The coroner said that the doctor was a duly qualified man, and was giving the jury his opinion.—Eventually the doctor said that the cause of death was natural.—A juror: At last! (Laughter.)

The following statement, which appeared in The Lancet in 1892, shows that "Medical Education at the present day" must perforce turn loose on Society many a practitioner, who, as the above-mentioned intelligent Juror in Shoreditch said—"don't know where he are."

"The great danger of Medical Education at the present day is that raw youths with wholly unformed minds and destitute of any correct ideas regarding observation, evidence, and reasoning, should be set to dissect snails, mussels, and frogs, to look down microscopes, and to handle test-tubes, and come to imagine that little else is necessary."

SUMMER HEAT AND OBESITY.

SUMMER heat, with the out-door enjoyments which come in its train, is a source of unmixed delight to all whose physical condition is sound. The full feast of pleasure to which hospitable Nature at this season invites mankind is not, however, for those whose infirmities forbid them to undergo, without serious discomfort, a considerable amount of bodily fatigue. To those in particular who are the victims of excessive corpulence, the arrival of the genial summer warmth serves chiefly as a painful reminder that, for them, the delights of long woodland rambles, the climbing of mountain tops, and all the adventurous ways of flood and field are prohibited joys. The palpitating heart, the reeling brain, and the possible deadly sunstroke, which are the concomitants of obesity, banish all the pleasant anticipations which once came with the advent of the glad summer-tide. How much of this deprivation of enjoyment and positive misery is absolutely and easily avoidable may be learned by consulting Mr. F. Cecil Russell's "Corpulency and the Cure" (256 pages), a little work whose popularity is proved by the fact that its 18th edition has just been issued. This fact, too indicates, in some degree, the wide area now covered by Mr. Russell's wonderful success as an expert in the reduction of excessive fat. His process, which is absolutely safe and pleasant, is so rapid in its operation that any over-corpulent lady or gentleman can easily get rid of all unnecessary weight in a very few weeks, so as to be able, before the autumn is with us, to enjoy the delightful feeling (and the appearance too) of renewed youth and energy. Mr. Russell makes no mystery of the nature of his curative preparation — apparently miraculous as are its effects in simultaneously reducing weight and increasing appetite—the consequently larger amount of food being consumed with impunity. He prints, therefore, his recipe in his singularly suggestive book, which may be obtained post free, by sending three penny stamps to his offices, Woburn House, 27, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C. — Gloucester Standard.

EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS IN THE Treatment of Obesity

OUR corpulent readers will be glad to learn how to positively lose two stone in about a month with the greatest possible benefit in health, strength, and muscle by a comparatively new system. It is a singular paradox that the patient, returning quickly to healthy state, with increased activity of brain, digestive, and other organs, naturally requires more food than hitherto, yet, notwithstanding this, he absolutely loses in weight one or two pounds daily, as the weighing machine will prove. Thus there is no suggestion of starvation. It is an absolute success, and the author, who has devoted years of study to the subject, absolutely guarantees a noticable reduction within twenty-four hours of commencing the treatment. This is different with other diseases, for the patient in some cases may go for weeks without being able to test whether the Physician has rightly treated him, and may have derived no real or apparent improvement in health. Here, we repeat, the author guarantees it in twenty-four hours, the scale to be the unerring judge. The treatment aims at the actual rout of the disease, so that the superfluous fat does not return when discontinuing the treatment. It is perfectly harmless. We advise our readers to call the attention of stout friends to this, because, sincerely, we think they ought to know. For this information, we may say that on sending three penny stamps, a book, "Corpulency and the Cure," 256 pages, containing a reprint of press notices from some hundreds of Medical and other journals (British and Foreign), and other interesting particulars, including the "recipe," can be had from a Mr. F. C. Russell, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.—Extract from The Belfast News Letter.

Prepayments will be accepted on Allotment under discount at the rate of Two per Cent. per annum.

PROSPECTUS.

The River Plate Trust, Loan and Agency Company, Limited, 52, Moorgate-street, E.C., are authorised by the Company to offer the above-mentioned Debenture Stock for subscription.

The interest will be payable half-yearly, on 1st January and 1st July in each year. Scrip Certificates to bearer will be issued against Bankers' Receipts and Allotment Letters, to be exchanged on completion of all payments for the Certificates of the Debenture Stock.

The Debenture Stock will form a first charge on the whole of the Company's Stations and property, and will be secured by a Trust Deed to be executed by the Company in favour of the River Plate Trust, Loan and Agency Company, Limited, as Trustees for the Debenture Stockholders.

Where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full, and if a smaller amount of Debenture Stock than that applied for is allotted, the balance of the deposit will go towards the amount payable on allotment.

Default in payment of any instalment will render the allotment liable to cancellation, and previous payments to forfeiture.

The Company's Electric Lighting Stations, already in operation, are in the cities of La Plata (the Capital of the Province of Buenos Aires), and Rosario, the principal commercial port of the Province of Santa Fé. A well-equipped station is in course of construction by the Company in the City of Tucuman, the Capital of the Province of that name, and the centre of the great sugar industry of the country. This Station is now nearly completed.

Each of these three stations undertakes the supply both for the public service and the house-to-house lighting.

The further Capital raised by the present issue is chiefly for the purpose of carrying out the erection of a Station in Buenos Aires, for which the requisite authorisation has been obtained. The population of Buenos Aires is over 600,000, and by reason of its importance and of its climate it is a city peculiarly suitable for the Electric Light.

The present Company is the successor of a pioneer Company, the River Plate Electricity Company, Ltd., whose expenditure up to 31st December last in establishing the business was £205,284. 11s. 2d., which includes preliminary expenditure and interest, less profits earned; but the greater part of this outlay represents the land, buildings, mains, and apparatus of the existing Stations.

The Lighting Receipts of the two Stations already at work have increased from £14,816 11s. in 1892 to £23,911 14s. 7d. in 1895, and the gross profit thereon from £3,928 16s. 2d. to £11,124 8s. 11d., notwithstanding the fact that these years have been perhaps the most trying ever experienced in the River Plate for the classes who constitute the customers for Electric Light.

The net revenue of the pioneer Company last year—after providing for all general expenses, which bear heavily upon a business in its first development—was £10,050 17s. 2d. Since the close of these accounts, further important Contracts have been obtained, which will, it is estimated, bring the net Revenue of the present Company up to £15,000 or £16,000 (including that from the Tucuman Station) so soon as the plant now in course of shipment and erection is in operation. These figures do not include provision for depreciation, which is estimated at £3,000.

The present revenues acquired and arranged for may, therefore, be put at £12,000 net, and that of the Buenos Aires Station at not less than the same amount. The net results of the four Stations would thus not fall short of £24,000, without counting on anything from Tramway Traction, for which there is a large field in Buenos Aires alone.

The interest of the Debenture Stock being £6,250, it follows that there will be ample margin of security.

The price to which the Securities (especially the Debentures) of Electric Supply Companies in English cities has now advanced, indicates that these have become a favourite investment with the British public.

The foregoing particulars are furnished by the Company, and certified by the Company's Officials.

Copies of the following documents can be seen on application at the Office of Messrs. Ashurst, Morris, Crisp, & Co., 17, Throgmorton-avenue, London, E.C., namely:—1. The Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company. 2. The form of Trust Deed in favour of the River Plate Trust, Loan and Agency Company, Limited, as Trustee for the Debenture Stockholders.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the River Plate Trust, Loan and Agency Company, Limited, 52, Moorgate-street, E.C.; the Brokers, Messrs. CHILIAN FIVE PER CENT. LOAN

Issued in accordance with the Laws promulgated on the 20th of December, 1895, and on the 8th of June, 1896, for the completion and equipment of the Railways authorised by the law of the 20th of January, 1888, also for the works at the port of Talcahuano, for the cable to Punta Arenas, and for such other Public Works as may be sanctioned by Special Laws. The Treasury Bills for £2,000,000 issued in February, 1896, in anticipation of the present operation, are to be repaid out of the proceeds of the said Loan.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHILI having authorised the issue of the above Loan, Messrs. N. M. ROTHSCHILD & SONS will receive subscriptions at their Office.

The Bonds will be to bearer in sums of £1,000, £500, and £100 each, with coupons for interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, on the 1st of January and on the 1st of July, in London in pounds sterling; and in Santiago, Paris, Berlin, Hamburg, Amsterdam, and Brussels, at the Exchange of the day.

Scrip will be issued, with a coupon due on the 1st of January, 1897, for £2. 10s. per cent. representing the first dividend.

The price of issue is £95. 10s. for every £100 nominal capital, payable as follows:—

£95. 10s.

Payment in full may be made under discount at the rate of Two per cent. per annum, on any Tuesday or Friday after the Scrip has been issued.

Allottees will have the option of paying the Instalments or of paying in full, either in Cash, or in Chilian Government Treasury Bills of the Issue of February, 1896, subject to discount at the rate of Two per cent. per annum.

The Loan will be redeemed by an accumulative Sinking Fund of one-half per cent. per annum, to be applied annually by purchase of Bonds when the price is under par, and when at or above par by drawings. The redemption of the Bonds, by means of the Sinking Fund, will commence in July, 1897, but the Government reserves to itself the right to redeem the whole or any portion of the Loan at any time, on giving six months' notice.

Subscription Lists will be opened on WEDNESDAY, the 8th of JULY, and closed at or before Four o'clock on the same day.

Application must be made in the annexed form, and accompanied by a deposit of 5 per cent. on the amount applied for. If the allotment should not require the whole deposit, the surplus will be returned; and if the deposit be insufficient for the first Instalment on the amount allotted the balance required must be paid forthwith.

In case of no allotment being made, the deposit of the applicant will be returned.

Failure to pay any of the instalments, when due, will render all previous payments liable to forfeiture.

The Script, after payment of the last instalment, will be exchanged for the Bonds as soon as they are ready for delivery.

Subscription Lists will also be opened in Hamburg, Amsterdam, Brussels, and Antwerp.

New Court, July 6th, 1896.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire three special Mining Leases in the Waitekauri (Upper Thames) Mining District, New Zealand. The Leases are known respectively as the Edwin Norman (30 acres), the Edwin Norman No. 2 (30 acres), and the Edwin Norman Extended (29 acres 0 roods 26 poles). The total area of the united leases is 89 acres 0 roods 26 poles, and they are situated on the central portion of the well-known auriferous belt extending between Waitekauri and Karangahake. The property is about 40 miles from the capital, Auckland, and a few miles from a Railway Station.

The Leases are located almost midway between the well-known Golden Cross Mines, belonging to the Waitekauri Gold Mining Company, and the equally rich Crown and Woodstock United Leases, near Karangahake. There is little doubt that the wide and rich reefs which have been opened up in the tunnels of various properties North and South, also extend throughout the Edwin Norman Leases.

Mr. J. McCombie, M.E., Mining Manager of the Woodstock United Gold Mining Company (one of the original prospectors of the well-known Waitekauri Mine), has reported favourably on this and the adjacent properties. The Report of Mr. W. J. Hollis, a First Class Certificated Mine Manager and Manager of the Sovereign Gold Mines, who has been acquainted with the properties for eighteen years, is also appended. Both these experts are thoroughly practical men, giving an opinion upon a district with which they have been associated for a long period.

The hilly and precipitous character of the country is favourable for economic mining. The area of the properties is extensive enough to furnish occupation for a very large crushing plant, or, if sub-divided, for several mining companies. The Directors have decided to give this proposal of sub-division early consideration, and thus afford shareholders in the present Company prospects of obtaining the very large profits which always accrue to a parent company.

The report of Mr. Hollis proves that a number of strong lodes traverse the Leases in a north-west and south-east direction, having a westerly dip, and probably extending throughout the entire length of the properties. These Lodes vary in thickness from eighteen inches to fifteen feet. Mr. Hollis refers to one as being upwards of 26 feet wide, which is paralleled by another running 20 feet in width some 10 chains distant. Four other reefs running 1½ feet, 2½ feet, 2½ feet, and 4 feet in width, have been traced by the outcrops, so that these six ore bodies alone will give lode matter upwards of 56½ feet in width and about 700 feet of "backs" as soon as a tunnel is completed.

The valley which partially bounds the Edwin Norman leases, furnishes unusually advantageous facilities for ensuring a cheap and rapid development of the property as soon as the first tunnel has exactly located the position of the various lodes. It is estimated that taking only the lodes which have already been discovered and will then be "in sight" above the tunnel, the total ore reserves of the mines will be sufficient to keep a 50-stamp battery employed for many years.

In the Golden Cross the average value approximates very closely £6 per ton, and several parcels of ore obtained from tunnels run on the extension of these lodes, only some 60 chains north from the Edwin Norman boundary, yielded from £4 to £10 per ton. The practically undisturbed character of the district is fair ground for the inference that the ore on these mines will prove equally rich. The 10 stamps at work on the Waitekauri crushed 136 tons during March for 676 ounces of bullion, or an average of 4 oz. 18 dwt. 4 gr. of bullion per ton. It is believed that the value of the reefs on the Edwin Norman leases will prove as rich as other mines in this district.

Dr. August Scheidel, Ph.D., General Agent and Consulting Engineer to the New Zealand Mines Trust, thus refers to the physical and economic features of the Waitekauri and Karangahake Gold Belt on which the Edwin Norman is situated:—"The properties are located on the spurs branching from the main chain of mountains which runs from north to south on the middle line of the Coromandel Peninsula. These ranges are covered with a dense forest, and offer many facilities for mining; they give large backs on the reefs at short driving distance, and provide excellent timber for mining and construction work, as well as firewood and water power for mining and milling.

"The geological formation is that of the Hauraki Goldfields generally, and consists of solid andesites, and of andesites in a more or less advanced state of decomposition, in which are embedded quartz lodes of strong compact formation. The solidity and the undisturbed character of these distinguishes them favourably from the reefs of the more northern part of the Peninsula, and promises well for their continuance and permanency. The quartz, as far as known, is free, or almost free, from base admixtures; the gold is free but mostly exceedingly fine, and chemical methods, such as the cyanide process, have to be applied to save a high percentage."

"Stewart R. Stewart, Esq., the well-known mining agent at Waihi, writing from Auckland on the 22nd February, 1896, refers in a private letter to the mine in the following very satisfactory terms:—"Knowing the Waitekauri district so well as I do, I can vouch for the bona fides of the Edwin Norman, and am quite certain of its turning out a very valuable property. In the face of the complete data regarding the mine in your possession, it is not necessary that I should say anything further, except that as a sound investment, I know few I should prefer before it."

W. Hutchinson, Esq., the Mining Engineer of the New Zealand Crown Mines, thus refers to the Edwin Norman leases, under date of September 4th, 1895:—"I am pleased to say you have every facility both for water power and battery close to the mine, and no difficulty for a tramway. I was also speaking to one or two friends of mine who know the mine well, and they think a lot of it, as you have the same run of gold as in the Golden Cross. Since you left here there has been another big rush on the goldfields, every available piece of ground between Karangahake, Owarahai, Waitekauri, and Waihi, and away over past Teawah has been pegged out, and the Government has extended the goldfields boundary to nearly double the size."

From the foregoing statements it will be seen that the working facilities at the Edwin Norman are exceedingly good and will enable machinery and mining plant to be easily transported to the claims. A large supply of timber exists on the property for mining and other purposes, and will afford an ample supply of fuel. Another economic factor of great value for the development of this property is the large amount of water which is obtainable quite close to the claims, and a special water claim has been secured on Mangakari Creek, which skirts the boundaries of the leases.

It is proposed to reserve 20,000 shares for working capital, although the Directors are advised, in view of the favourable mining conditions existing on the property, as well as the ample power available, that a lower sum will be quite sufficient to put the mine in a high state of development. The requirements for the working capital include:—

A low level tunnel and air shaft,
Tramway,
Trucks and equipment,
Mining tools,
30 stamp mill, cyanide and assay plant,
Water race and turbines,
Manager's house and smithy, and it is estimated that the cost of these will not exceed £12,000.

With a plant of this character, working only 300 days in the year, the total crushings would amount to 36,000 tons per annum. On this basis, the estimated value of the ore, after deducting working expenses, depreciation and management charges, should leave a handsome profit for the shareholders.

The purchase price has been fixed at £55,000, payable as to £25,000 in fully-paid Shares, and the balance in cash or fully-paid Shares at the option of the Directors. Mr. Brunton will also pay all expenses up to the first allotment of Shares, including the transfer of the property, with the exception of transfer duty and fees.

The following contract has been entered into, namely, an agreement dated the Second day of July, 1896, between A. B. Millar, E. C. Martin, C. J. Saunderson and W. Campbell, by their attorney of the one part, and W. Brunton of the other part, and the Company will on its incorporation enter into an agreement between the said A. B. Millar, E. C. Martin, C. J. Saunderson, and W. Campbell, by their attorney of the first part, the said W. Brunton of the second part, and the Norman Proprietary Gold Mines, Limited, of the third part. Besides the above-mentioned, there are other contracts to which the Company is not a party, which may be contracts within the meaning of Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. Applicants can have further information as to these contracts, but in any case will be considered to have had, for all purposes, full notice of such contracts, and to have waived any fuller compliance with the said Section in reference thereto.

Mr. Brunton, being one of the Vendors, is interested in the above contract, and will not join the Board until after allotment.

The reports, plan, and contract, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association, may be seen at the office of the Company's Solicitors.

Application for shares should be made on the form accompanying prospectus, and sent, with amount payable on application, to the Company's Bankers.

It is intended to apply for a Stock Exchange Settlement in due course.

If no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full, and if the Shares allotted be less than the number applied for, the surplus of the deposit will be appropriated towards the amount due on allotment, and the balance (if any) returned.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of the Company and from the Company's Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THEIR NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

Seeing that Parliament will probably be up in about a month, I think the time has come when the following competition may be held with advantage. The usual Prize of Two Guineas is therefore offered for

THE BEST ORIGINAL SUGGESTION OF A TOPIC CALCULATED TO SERVE WELL AS A SUBJECT FOR "SILLY SEASON" CORRESPONDENCE IN THE NEWSPAPERS.

Competitors may send in more than one suggestion, and all answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, July 20.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 907.

The prize in this competition has been divided between BEGINNER and OROYA for the following suggestions:—

As our modern fancy fairs are so hackneyed and cost so much for decorations and attractions, don't you think it would be an excellent innovation if one could, for the good of the cause, prevail upon eligible young men to be stall-holders? What a saving of expense it would prove. No decorations, &c., would be needful then, and what crowds of enlightened females would push their mites into the coffers of these pious young men. If it were only practicable, I am certain the bazaar would pay.—Beginner.

Apportion off at one end of the room or marquee a space as large as you can afford, with an exit at the farther end, so that those who enter may not return the same way. Drape the entrance, and fix over it in large white letters upon a red ground the words, "To the Swimming Match." Get a pretty and fascinating young lady attired in a nautical dress to station herself at the entrance to draw the fee for admission to view the performance, which is produced as follows:—Have in the centre of the room a table, and upon this place a large bowl of water, and in the bowl a lucifer match, and there you have at once "the swimming match." This would, I think, cause endless fun, even to those who have unwittingly parted with their half-crowns in the aid of charity.—Oroya.

"Ah! Mon Dieu!" cried Monsieur, as he strolled through Hyde Park,
"Bicycling has driven John Bull tout mad stark;
Croquet? Where is dat? By the priests so adored,
Delicieux, said old maids—though "de jeunesse" were bored;
England—It loves noting dat's new—so 'twas said;
France! Dat is the contrie by novelties led;
Golf! Dat seems to be dead—voted tedieux and slow,
Having none of (de swells said) de right sort of go;
It's biking dey'll have—cost just what it will,
Joints broken or smashed—dey'll race down de hill!
Killed? What do dey care? 'Tis part of de fun,
Let's bike on for ever—till judgment-day come!
Money's wanted abroad (so say Cecil Rhodes),
None of ours shall he get for his blessed railroads!
Oh! Bother de Kaiser! Dis fuss about shares;
Plague take all de hospitals, ruines and scares;
Quite callous dese English to all but dese bikes,
Royal functions, fêtes, dinners—what tout le monde likes;
Say dese John Bulls—dere vinegar—biking's champagne,
Tastes sweeter dan absinthe—cures each single pain;
Utopia, dey call it. 'Tis heaven! 'Tis bliss!
Vanity? No! King Solomon never meant dis;
What he meant, you Frenchman, was women or drink;
Xcessive devotion to cards—or de rink!
You're not such a muff as to think he meant bikes, Zounds! Ciel! Mon Dieu! There's a bike gone to spikes!"

SHORT SIGHT.—This form of defective vision is, no doubt, alarmingly increasing, but many kinds of defective vision are constantly mistaken for short sight merely because clearer vision is obtained by bringing an object closer to the eyes. If such are tested with ordinary short-sighted spectacles the mischief is greatly aggravated, and serious and permanent injury is done to the sight.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen has cut down her visit to London (her only one during the present year) to one night. Her Majesty will come up to Buckingham Palace on Tuesday in time for luncheon, and she is to return to Windsor on Wednesday, as soon as the wedding-party and guests have been got rid of. All the people (including the Royalties) who have been at the marriage will drive off to Marlborough House about three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. The Queen goes to Osborne, with Princess Beatrice, on Friday, the 24th, and on Monday, August 24, her Majesty will proceed to Balmoral.

There will be only a small attendance of Foreign Royalties at the wedding next week, as several personages who had been quite expected to attend are not coming over for various reasons.

An imaginative evening journal informs its readers that "the real labour" in connection with the arrangements of the Royal wedding is undertaken by Sir Fleetwood Edwards, Lord Edward Pelham Clinton, and Sir Dighton Probyn, which is quite untrue. As a matter of fact, nearly the whole of the work is being done by Sir Spencer Ponsonby Fane and his subordinates. Everything connected with the ceremony and the procession is in the hands of the Lord Chamberlain, while the Lord Steward is responsible for the luncheon, and the Master of the Horse for the carriage arrangements. The same journal describes Sir Henry Ewart as "the Grand Equerry," an official altogether unknown at our Court.

It was Sir Augustus Paget who arranged the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales, for which he was entirely responsible, the preliminary steps for their betrothal having been taken solely in consequence of his representation. Sir Augustus received much assistance in the last stages of the affair from the late Duchess of Cambridge, who was an aunt of the Queen of Denmark, and intimately acquainted with the whole family, whom she had often met at Rumpenheim, the château of the Landgrave of Hesse, near Frankfort.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and Princess Victoria and the Duke and Duchess of York are to be the guests of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon at Goodwood House during the race week, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck will probably be included in the party of Mr. and Mrs. James, at West Dean Park.

A family party will be entertained by the Duke and Duchess of Westminster at Halnaker, and there are to be full houses at Petworth, Eartham, Drove, Burton Park, West Stoke, Dale Park, Walberton, Cowdray Park, Leigh Park, and other country places in the neighbourhood.

The Duke and Duchess of Fife are going to Scotland next week for the season, and they will spend a month at Duff House, Banffshire, before proceeding to their new residence in Upper Deeside for the autumn.

Last week's Levée was a small one, and lasted for only fifty minutes, which was lucky, inasmuch as the heat in the State apartments of St. James's Palace was stifling, and the atmosphere of the Throne Room soon became quite dangerously offensive. A number of persons had forgotten the Court mourning for the Duc de Nemours, and they were turned back, except some individuals whose attendance in the Throne Room was indispensable, and whose irregularity in coming to the Levée improperly attired excited the wrath of the Prince of Wales and of the Duke of Coburg. The Levée was anything but "smart."

Lord Lawrence and Captain Malcolm Drummond are to be the Lord and Groom in Waiting on the Queen from next Tuesday until her Majesty goes to Osborne, and they will be in attendance at the Royal wedding.

I am glad to hear that the lowering of the subscription, especially as regards country members, has already produced good results at the Junior Army and Navy Club. The new rules have only been in force since June 1, and during the last three weeks more than 100 candidates have been put on the list. One very promising feature is that several old country members who, owing to infrequent visits to town, did not think it worth their while to continue their membership at the old rate of subscription, have signified their intention of rejoining.

The advocates for altering the exclusiveness so long attaching to the Royal Botanic Society are to be congratulated on the success which has rewarded their persistency. The Saturday musical promenades having proved a success, it is now suggested that they should be continued after the period originally named. This proposal has been supported by Sir J. Blundell Maple, M.P., who warned the Council that the renewal of their lease in about six years' time would largely depend upon the steps taken to render the gardens available to the general public. He was of opinion that in addition to the Saturday musical promenades the gardens should be open to the public every day of the week, no pains being spared to make them a popular pleasure resort. This is sound advice which the Council will do well to ponder. Their neighbour the "Zoo" makes no attempt to exclude the public in order to secure for the sons and daughters of its Fellows a private lawn-tennis and croquet ground.

Returning from Henley last week, I read in an evening paper an opinion to the effect that if the popularity of the Regatta ever declines, it will be the fault of the natives of Henley, the argument being that these good people are in danger of killing the goose for the sake of its golden eggs. In this view I heartily concur. On arrival at Henley I was desirous of proceeding to that delightful spot, the enclosure of the Isthmian Club. A friend advised me not to drive, as the flymen were charging 10s. for the journey—something under a mile. By the advice of another friend I walked down the tow-path to a point immediately opposite the Isthmian Club, and asked a waterman to row me across. He said that the charge would be 5s. I demurred, and applied to another, with whom I eventually compromised for 3s.—being 1s. for each member of my party. Later in the day I endeavoured to charter a boat to row me from the Isthmian lawn to the Island and back. He demanded 10s. a head, i.e., 30s. for my party. He subsequently reduced his terms to one sovereign, but he did not come down to any figure within the reach of my modest means.

Assuming that the rent of houses and apartments, and the price of the necessaries of life are on the same scale as the above charges, it is evident that Henley Regatta will before long become a function for millionaires only. With regard to watermen and flymen, the matter is one which the local authorities ought to take under their control by means of a fixed tariff, and such an arrangement would add immensely to the comfort and pleasure of visitors. No reasonable being minds paying extra prices on race-days, regattas, and other such occasions. If the ordinary rates were even doubled, no one would complain. But no one likes to be robbed and blackmailed, even though he be out for a day's pleasure.

Another point in connection with Henley Regatta in which there seems to me room for improvement is the railway arrangements. A scrimmage at the railway station on the return journey is more or less unavoidable at a small country station like Henley; but it need not take place at Paddington on the way down Between 10 and 10.30 last Thursday morning there was a wild scramble for places as the Henley trains were backed into the station, and it was with a feeling of thankfulness that one secured standing room without serious damage to person or clothing. I met one lady who had had her dress irreparably damaged in the scrimmage, and it is astonishing that no serious accident occurred from the crowd boarding the trains while in motion. This sort of thing is preventable. It arose at Paddington from despatching all the trains from opposite sides of one narrow platform, on to which were packed at one time enough people to have filled three trains. Another objectionable practice is that of reserving nearly all the first-class compartments in one train for private individuals and clubs, which causes the unprivileged public to rush wildly to and fro in search of carriages, and greatly aggravates the confusion. It would add to the comfort of all parties if all these reserved carriages were made up into one train, and despatched from a separate platform. Henley Regatta is, perhaps, the most delightful and enjoyable of all our national open-air festivities, and everything ought to be done that forethought and experience can suggest to make it a joy for ever.

The Leicester Show of the Royal Agricultural Society has proved a great success. There were 146,277 paying visitors, against 100,310 at Darlington last year, and 111,658 at Cambridge in 1894. The takings at the gates were about £10,620, which is by far the largest amount since the show at Windsor in 1889.

Fox-hunting is all very well, but in a case between allotments for working men and coverts for foxes the latter should go to the wall. Such, however, does not seem to be the opinion of Lord Harrington. An inquiry has been taking place before the Derbyshire County Council respecting certain lands belonging to Lord Harrington which the Eaton District Council want to obtain for allotments. The representative of Lord Harrington said that his Lordship was very anxious to meet the wishes of the working men of Long Eaton, but that he had made a fox-covert over five acres not far from the land wanted, and he was averse to giving it for allotments. On this Mr. Butler, J.P., a member of the District Council, made the following observations, in which, I should fancy, most people will concur:—

He much regretted that Lord Harrington had thought fit to consider the fox-cover in preference to the convenience of giving working men land for allotments. And he was perfectly surprised so much had been made of the objection—instead of mentioning it with bated breath. At the close of this century he trusted notice would be taken of the fact that working men were refused land for allotments because of a fox-cover having been put in the vicinity.

The residents in and about Mildenhall, Suffolk, have a very legitimate grievance, which ought to be abated. All the land belongs either to Lord Bristol or to Sir Henry Bunbury, who let it for shooting purposes. These tenants, or rather their keepers, are in the habit of laying down poisoned meat in all directions, in order to kill any dogs that may wander in or near the plantations, most of which are open to the public. Amongst those who have lost dogs in this way are Mr. George Ord, M.P., Mr. Parker, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Selous, and Mr. Walter Godfrey. It is possible that the shooting tenants are not aware of what is being done by their keepers; if not, they would do well to make inquiries on the subject, and put an end to this monstrous abuse. If continued, the only way to stop it would be to form an Anti-Poison League, and, in any case where a dog is poisoned, at once to commence proceedings.

How grateful ought to be the Landed Gentry for the Government that has been vouchsafed to them! They are to be charged half rates on their land; the land tax is to be reduced; if they have pictures and suchlike objects, no death due is to be charged on them; and next year their subscriptions to the schools of the Church of England are to be reduced, as the community is to take upon itself the duty of inculcating the tenets of this Church upon the young rural population. Why are they to receive all these favours? Because the community has returned a Parliament the majority of which holds to the creed that the more the land is held by a number of favoured individuals, the better it will be for the nation. Other property may fluctuate, but the incomes of landowners are sacred: if they go down owing to economic causes, the reduction is to be made up for them from the public purse. They are the Brahmins and we are the Pariahs. It is for us to work, and for them to be secured an existence of wealthy repose, hunting and shooting, eating and drinking, racing and gambling. It must sweeten our toil to think to what a noble purpose the result of our toil is devoted.

It is proposed to erect a monument to Sir Walter Scott in Westminster Abbey, and many people are wondering how it is that he has remained so long without a monument in a place which is crammed with statues and busts of very much less eminent or worthy men. It is not generally known that some years ago an attempt was made to place a memorial to Scott in the Abbey. A large sum was raised, and a very beautiful marble medallion of Scott was executed by Sir John Steel, but the work did not commend itself to the over-fastidious taste of the Dean and Chapter, who stupidly rejected it, and it would be interesting to learn what has become of it. If it is decided to place a bust in the Abbey, let it be a copy of Chantrey's admirable representation of Scott, which is in the library at Abbotsford.

HEAT, HORSES, AND HATS.

Whilst melting Londoners perspired
And icebergs hailed in yearning sonnets,
Two horses—this is fact, pray mark!—
Were seen on Tuesday in the Park
Sheltered by large straw bonnets!
Defiant of the tropic heat,
They gaily did their task allotted,
As down to Albert Gate, and then
Without an effort back again,
Right cheerily they trotted.

Oh, prithee, what d'you think of that,
My brother, vested and cravatted?
What do you think, long-suffering man,
Who go about 'neath Fashion's ban,
Black-coated and top-hatted?
You than a horse, it would appear,
Are stronger deemed to be, and tougher;
For Fashion's unrelentless law
Denies to you the hat of straw,
And cares not how you suffer.

And what think you, O Soldier bold,
As at each royal palace entry,
You face the sun's solstitial glare,
In coat of red and skin of bear,
And duty do as sentry?
What think you of the martinets
Who, though the air grows daily hotter,
Oblige you, spite of your disgust,
Like one who is in blankets truss'd,
Half comatose to potter?

And constable upon your beat,
Say, prithee, what are your opinions
About the way that Scotland Yard
Continues still to disregard
The feelings of its minions?
Think you 'tis fitting you should still
In your tight-buttoned tunic swelter?
How like you still to fume and fret
Whilst even beasts of burden get
A large straw bonnet's shelter?

The following colossal piece of impudence, lately addressed to a well-known lady, is of interest for several reasons. From his account of himself, the writer appears to be the same Graham whose performances were lately noticed in Truth, and whose address was so badly wanted by the printers and staff of the Twentieth Century, to whom he was and is indebted. I fear, however, that it would be idle for these creditors to seek him at Long's Hotel. From inquiries that I have had made at that establishment, it appears that he has never stayed in the house, and is only known as an individual who occasionally drops into the smoking-room and takes refreshment. Doubtless, on one of these casual visits he has made use of the hotel stationery in order to obtain a presentable address for the prosecution of his further designs upon rich simpletons. I trust that no millionaire has yet been entrapped; though, had this happened, it might have eventually proved to the benefit

As the matter upon which I am addressing your ladyship is merely one of business, I trust I need not apologise for the want of an introduction, more particularly as it is more or less a literary affair, and if you interest yourself in that line you doubtless know my name as the writer of the series of articles in the Nineteenth Century, entitled, "Chats with Jane Clermont," spoken of at the time in the Times as "the leading literary event of the season;" "Side-lights on the Second Empire," in the Fortnightly, "Guy de Maupassant," &c., &c., some of which are shortly appearing in book form. Pray excuse this palaver, but I must introduce myself somehow, and let me get to the point. I want to start a monthly review on a very ambitious scale, called the Twentieth Century. I should rather say re-start it, as I brought it out last year, but owing to the failure of the publishers it had to be suspended. I wish to cut out the Nineteenth Century, and have already announced the title that the proprietor thereof was so serenely counting on, and make this review the equal of the Revue des Deux Mondes, or more so, for I intend to include among the contributors the most distinguished people in every branch throughout the world, including the royalties of the respective countries. To do this fancy cheques are required. To provide the fancy cheques—or rather to provide the means to meet them—a millionaire is required, and the millionaires—Astor, Beit, &c.—seem nowadays to have a fancy for financing reviews. Rightly or wrongly, I have been told that (without mentioning names) your ladyship can exercise influence in that respect, and that is the raison d'être of this letter. If I am wrong, or you do not care about the matter, you have merely to tear up this and cast it into the waste-paper basket. If, on the other hand, you entertain the proposal, I should be glad to hear at your earliest convenience, fixing an appointment for me to call, and, if you wish, bearer would take me your note (if you are in when he calls). Finally, I need scarcely say that this would prove an extremely lucrative business for any one who worked the oracle for me. A letter to above address will always find me; but the season is far spent, and if anything is to be done it should be done at once, and, of course, all particulars would have to be given in an interview.—I am, your ladyship, yours faithfully, WM. GRAHAM.

I was surprised on Monday morning to see in that enterprising and excellently edited paper, the Daily Mail, a virtual reproduction of a paragraph published in the previous Wednesday's TRUTH. To show the state of the case, I give the two paragraphs side by side :—

Daily Mail, July 13.	TRUTH, July 9
Princess Maud is to get £4,000 a year out of the allowance which was granted by Parliament for the family of the Prince of Wales. The Crown Princess of Denmark is to make an allowance of £10,000 a year to her son. It is well known that the Crown Princess very much objected to the marriage at first, both because, very naturally, she greatly disapproves of first cousins marrying, and because she had quite made up her mind that in time Prince Charles would become the husband of the Queen of the Netherlands, who so far is, of course, the greatest match in Europe.	As a matter of fact, Princess Maud is to have £4,000 a year out of the allowance which was granted by Parliament in 1889 for the family of the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Crown Princess of Denmark is to make an allowance of either £10,000 or £12,000 a year to her second son. . . . It is well known that the Crown Princess does not like the marriage, as she had quite made up her mind that Prince Charles would become the husband of her relative the Queen of the Netherlands, who is, of course, the greatest match in Europe.

Had the Editor of the Daily Mail desired to "lift" information from TRUTH without acknowledgment, which I do not suppose is likely, he would not have waited till Monday to use something that he might have had the previous Thursday. The conclusion, therefore, is that some unprincipled person has been trading in second-hand goods.

English papers are shabby enough in quoting from one another without acknowledgment, but they are mild offenders in this respect by comparison with our Colonial contemporaries. There is at least one paper at the Cape which in every issue seems to give facts or remarks from TRUTH as its own original productions. Possibly the Editor thinks that his readers will never notice it. But I can assure him that he is mistaken.

I am aware that poets claim a licence, though why they are unable to retail draughts from the Pierian spring without one I have never quite understood. But even a poetic licence must have its limits, and I certainly think these limits have been exceeded by Poet Ball, who, in addition to being an "Honourable Artilleryman" of Massachusetts, is a bard not without honour in his own country. At a recent banquet given to himself and his comrades at Finsbury Pavement, Poet Ball recited an ode of his own composition, in which he remarked that

> The thunder from our cannon
> Reverbes along our shore.

Now, I can assure Poet Ball that thunder from the cannon, even of an "Honourable Artillery Company," never "reverbes," at least, not on this side of the Atlantic. We should as soon expect a deliberator to "delibe," or an enumerator to "enume." For my own part, I sincerely hope that this Boston bard will in future "repude" all such inexcusable mutilation of good old English words. All I can say is that if he does not, I shall, on evidence of his next offence, "objurge" him much more severely than I have this time.

Mr. Arthur Roberts, assisted by Miss Decima Moore, Mr. Eric Thorne, and a few others, is trying a kind of German Reed entertainment in the provinces. It is a move in the right direction. The people want to see and hear as much as possible of Arthur Roberts in a limited space of time. But he has not severed his connection with the Prince of Wales' Theatre, and will be back there after the summer holidays.

The beautiful dolls representing various actresses in popular characters, and dressed by them, which were so attractive at the Actors' Orphanage Fund Bazaar, may be seen all this week in the vestibule of the Empire Theatre, by the kind permission of the management. The show is well worth the attention of charitable mothers and intelligent children, and when I have said that on each afternoon a popular actress will lecture on the Doll Show, and that the proceeds go to the Actors' Orphanage, I need add no more. On the last day of the Doll Show (Saturday) the dolls unsold will be disposed of by auction.

At the City of London School, on one of the sultriest days of last week, two small boys were arraigned by their form-master for the heinous crime of appearing in school without waistcoats. One of them is said to have mitigated the indelicate exhibition by wearing a sash, but the other revealed the full indecency of his shirt-front and braces. Consequently the pair were sent before the head master for punishment in the approved form. I trust that no pedagogue from the City of London School will pay me a visit during the present hot season, for I fear that his modesty would receive a severe shock. It is my frequent practice to sit not only waistcoatless, but coatless, and I have, at times, so far disregarded all propriety as to turn up my shirt sleeves at the same time. So lacking, indeed, am I in natural modesty, that I feel in no way aggrieved when one of my clerks enters my presence with his shirt-front unconcealed by a waistcoat. By rights I should, I suppose, hand such a reprobate over to the police.

The Campbell College at Belfast, which was founded by the munificence of the late Mr. Henry Campbell, has not begun its career very auspiciously. It is less than two years since the school was opened, and already grave troubles have arisen. Within the first twelve months one of the two co-principals relinquished his post, and the sole control of the College passed into the hands of his colleague, Mr. J. A. M'Neill. A few months later there were serious manifestations of discontent and resentment among the boys, and the differences of opinion which occurred between the Principal and the chief members of his staff as to the causes of this unfortunate state of things and the means by which it should be remedied culminated in the resignation of the three Senior House Masters. This has been followed within the past few days by the resignation of four more masters, making a total of seven who have taken that step in about two months. In a statement by the three Senior Masters, which has been circulated in pamphlet form, they attribute the unsatisfactory condition of the school to the Principal's want of organising power and tact and sympathy in dealing with boys, and above all to his lack of experience and training in a public school.

Before the pamphlet was issued, the trustees of the College—or rather two out of the three—refused a hearing to the masters, and since its appearance neither they nor the Principal have vouchsafed any reply. But it is quite certain that unless some satisfactory reply is forthcoming to the charges which are made, public confidence in the management of this public school—the best endowed in Ireland—must be greatly shaken. In many quarters there is, I understand, a strong feeling that a general inquiry should be held by the proper authorities in Ireland with a view to ascertaining whether the wishes of the founder of the College are being, or are likely to be, properly carried out under the present constitution of the Governing Body.

A few more hints for the headmaster of Harrow. A gentleman who has been studying my remarks on the Harrow Prize Essay, writes that the lack of idiom and the faulty grammar, however bad, are less deserving points for criticism than the subject matter of the theme." Roman education, he points out, may mean that of any period from the time of Numa Pompilius to that of Justinian, and "Greek education" that of any of the peoples known to us under that name at any period of their existence, including educational systems as diverse as those of Athens and Sparta. There seems a good deal in this, and when I see boys at public schools set to puzzle their brains with discourses in a dead language on such vast and ill-defined subjects I cease to wonder that I learned so little when I was at school.

English Churchmen as a body will hardly, I imagine, approve of the conduct of Dean Farrar, under whose rule at Canterbury, Roman Catholic pilgrims to the tomb of St. Thomas have been deprived of the privileges of worshipping in the cathedral hitherto allowed them. The Canterbury pilgrim under the Farrar régime is mulcted in 3d. a head, and is hurried past the spots sacred to the memory of the saint in charge of a verger, to the accompaniment of a monotoned descriptive recital, like any other tripper who comes to see the show. At Westminster Abbey, Catholic devotions at the shrine of Edward the Confessor are permitted, as they have hitherto been at Canterbury, without offence to any right-minded English Churchman, and with advantage to the mutual respect and goodwill of Anglicans and Romanists. But Dean Farrar apparently does not approve of such kindly tolerance. Perhaps it is his way of discountenancing anything savouring of "Reunion." At any rate, it is a signal repudiation of the doctrine of the continuity of the life between the English Church and that of the Church of whose endowments, buildings, and holy places it has come into possession.

The Rev. Montague James Taylor, who died the other day at the age of ninety, was for more than half a century a most familiar figure at the Oxford and Cambridge Club, and he was long the highly efficient and very popular chairman of the committee, to which office he was many times re-elected. A portrait of Mr. Taylor, by Mr. Ouless, now hangs in the dining-room of the club.

The name of the Rev. William Hamilton Turner will be honourably remembered in Somersetshire, for the deceased gentleman was a staunch Free Trader and Liberal in days when a clergyman, who openly professed such principles in a Tory neighbourhood, was regarded as little better than an Atheist, while an Atheist was then looked upon as being many degrees worse than a murderer. Mr. Turner, who held the living of Banwell for fifty-eight years, was a most genial and charitable man, and an Evangelical of the old school. He was esteemed and liked by all classes, but his political views in times when party spirit ran high were very obnoxious to his parishioners, nearly all of whom were Tories. He was presented by the Dean and Chapter of Bristol in 1838 to the Vicarage of Banwell, which is one of the best livings in the diocese (about £600 a year, with residence), and he held it under no fewer than five Bishops of Bath and Wells.

In 1798 certain inhabitants of Westminster formed themselves into a Volunteer Corps to resist Napoleon should he invade the country. With all respect for these heroes, it is perhaps fortunate that their ability to vanquish the French Emperor was not put to the test. It would seem that the Countess Grosvenor gave the corps a flag, and in 1887 this flag was, at the request of the Westminster Volunteer Regiment, solemnly hung up in St. Margaret's Church. It is to my mind absurd that a battle flag that has received the "baptism of victory" should be exhibited as a trophy in the temple of a Church that preaches peace on earth; but it is one shade more absurd, that a flag which has never seen a battle, should be hung up in a church. That eminent legislator, Mr. Tomlinson, parishioner and warrior, has gone to law with the Rector of St. Margaret's to prevent him from removing this Volunteer flag from before a painted window in the church, the light of which the Rector considers that it obscures. Well I, like Mr. Tomlinson, am a parishioner, and I object to the flag being exhibited at all in my parish church: first, because I do not think a church a fit place for battle flags; secondly, because—admitting that such flags should be exhibited in churches—this is not a battle flag. As a parishioner, I tender my thanks to the Rector for having taken it down.

CHARITY À LA MODE.

Vide Lord Salisbury's speech at St. James's Hall on Thursday last.

'Tis not unpleasant, we admit, to find the Premier preaching,
And echoing the very truths that we've for years been teaching:
Betwixt Lord Salisbury's views and ours whatever the disparity,
At least we both assess alike the worth of Modern Charity.

For years we have been pointing out what now the Marquis mentions,
For years we've felt, and have expressed, his lively apprehensions;
So now his help we gladly hail, as one prepared to venture
Society's besetting sin in scathing terms to censure.

There was a time when Charity's own impulse was omniscient,
When doing good for good's own sake was deemed to be sufficient;
But nowadays it's ceased to be a pure and pious passion,
Charity up-to-date is but a freak—a fad—of fashion.

'Tis not enough to plead the cause of poverty and sorrow,
Charity now the motley suit and showman's drum must borrow;
'Tis Charity's set purpose now not to make tear-drops trickle,
But our self-love to titillate, our vanity to tickle!

'Tis not enough to try and move men's hearts with tales of anguish,
'Tis not enough to tell them how the sick unsuccoured languish;
If you would have them give that aid which to salve mortals' hurt is meant,
You first must promise them a chance of lavish self-advertisement.

Do good by stealth, forsooth! Not they. No! to attract the gapers,
They take good care their every gift is published in the papers;
Not only does their right hand know what 'tis their left is doing,
But they to all the world shout out the course they are pursuing.

Of every dole they grant they make a showy demonstration,
Their charity means self-display, their alms spell ostentation;
Upon themselves, at any cost, the public's eye they 'd rivet,
And if it pays to give a cheque, effusively they give it!

And even those not vain like these will only yield their treasure
To those who gratify their whims and feed their love of pleasure;
Vainly you tell them of the poor who paler grow and thinner—
They will not feed the hungry till they've had a guinea dinner.

If you would orphans aid, don't try Society to harrow
By bare recitals of the truth, that course were far too narrow;
Statistics will small purpose serve, and no one will deplore them,
Until a Royal chairman at a banquet 's bungled o'er them.

A hospital may be in debt that perils its existence,
But think you making known that fact will bring it prompt assistance?
No! if you'd make the public give support both wide and hearty,
You must get up a Fancy Fair, or run a Garden Party.

Before the needed funds can reach the treasury depleted,
The public to a Carnival of Nonsense must be treated.
Folly must reign unchecked awhile 'midst scenes too oft degrading,
Whilst Charity, be-patched, be-rouged, goes wildly masquerading.

Before the hands of Help can soothe the pillow of the dying,
The duchess must in style and talk the barmaid be outvying;
Ere Pity can its heaven-born rôle of succour be fulfilling,
The actress must ripe strawberries kiss and sell them at a shilling!

The widow must unhelped remain, though want her efforts baffles,
Whilst ladies in the smartest gowns arrange illegal raffles;
The sick must sadly suffer on, left to their own devices,
Whilst sirens sell most worthless things at quite preposterous prices.

Not that we would too hotly chide such ways of money getting,
For often ill-considered means good ends may be abetting;
And 'twould be rash the present mode 'neath censure harsh to smother
Till we are sure 'twould be replaced, and promptly, by another.

Yet, surely something should be done, directly and sincerely,
To prove our "Charity" is not a light amusement merely;
Something to show that when our alms we merrily are chinking,
It is not of ourselves alone we selfishly are thinking!

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Fund for sending poor and sickly London children into the country for a holiday:—G. W. B., £2; J. K. T., 10s. 6d.; E. C. M., £10.

Mr. E. J. C. Morton, M.P., asked a timely question in the House of Commons last week on the case of Sergeant Sayers, of the 2nd Berks Regiment, dealt with in TRUTH of the 2nd inst.; but, unless the reporters have done Mr. Morton an injustice, his question overlooked the most material point in the case, and Mr. Brodrick (or those who prompted him) adroitly took advantage of this in framing the reply. "It is perfectly well known," said Mr. Brodrick, "to every sergeant in the Army that no man detailed for a duty can exchange it with another man without permission." But the whole point of Sayers's defence was that he believed he had permission, and there was ample evidence that he had good ground for so believing. This is simply a question, not of military discipline or of the usual practice in the Army, but of the value of evidence, and no impartial judge could say that on the evidence there was not a doubt in this case of which Sayers was entitled to the benefit, by every principle of law and justice. It is to be hoped, therefore, that Lord Lansdowne will yet be better advised than to refuse to look into this case on its merits, more especially in view of the many deplorable occurrences recently reported from this particular battalion.

With reference to the decision to keep the 2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment in the Portsdown Forts through another winter, statements are made to me which call for the notice both of the General Officer Commanding the District and the Officer Commanding the battalion. It appears that, the Colonel having approached the General on the subject of staying in the forts, the General requested him to take the opinion of his officers on the point, with an intimation that the decision should follow the wishes of the majority; that the Colonel reported that he had done so, and that the officers voted for moving by a majority of one, but that one of those in favour of moving was so junior that the Colonel did not think his vote should count; and that upon this the General decided that the battalion should remain in the forts. Now, I would suggest that Colonel Hayne should be asked whether he consulted any of the Subalterns, and whether he consulted the whole of the captains. On what I take to be good authority, I am told that he did not, and that, had he done so, the preponderance of opinion in favour of leaving the forts would have been decisive. In military circles these will, I think, be regarded as very serious allegations, and, having been publicly made, they ought to be decisively answered.

Some of my friends in the 2nd Wiltshire seem to be exercised about something that the Broad Arrow has said on the retention of the battalion in the forts. I really do not care what the Broad Arrow has said, and I never met with anybody in the Army who does. The Broad Arrow exists, as I understand it, for the purpose of proving that our military administrators are above criticism, and that if a civilian has the temerity to think otherwise, the Service must go to the dogs. For this reason whenever TRUTH says that so-and-so is black, the Broad Arrow at once pronounces that it is white. This is a simple and harmless form of journalism. It does not hurt anybody, certainly not me, and if a struggling Service journal can provide itself with a column of "copy" in this way every week, and so prolong its existence, I am the last to object. When, however, a military reader asks me to expend sixpence in order to see what such a journal is saying about TRUTH, I must ask to be excused. Having assisted my contemporary to the extent of a column of copy, I think that I have done enough.

From one or two letters received in response to a query in reference to secret societies in the Army, I gather that the only official regulation on this subject that has ever been issued had reference to Orange Lodges, which were tabooed for a time about forty years ago. An officer writing on the subject remarks that it is not the policy of the War Office to issue definite instructions on matters which are better left to the individual good sense and right feeling of officers and men. This sounds very well, but one has to look at the way it works in practice. There can be no doubt that Freemasonry in the Army is credited with a great deal of the favouritism and injustice of which soldiers complain, and looking at the nature of this particular society, it seems almost inevitable that it should have this undesirable result.

A bitter complaint on this subject is penned by a sergeant in a Line regiment now in Ireland. "Up to the beginning of 1895," writes this warrior, "we were the happiest of happy families. Then Freemasonry was introduced, and what a change! Every one who has not joined is made to feel that he is not wanted in the regiment." I quote these remarks because the writer says that he has always been an admirer of Freemasonry, and that were he in civil life he should get himself initiated into the mysteries without delay. But he thinks that Freemasonry is incompatible with the due and impartial maintenance of military discipline; and I am inclined to think so too.

A statement reaches me that a naval officer, hitherto standing well in the Service, has been suddenly sent to an unimportant ship on the Australian station for no ostensible reason, and that the true cause at the bottom of what is evidently a mark of official disfavour is that he is credited in official circles with being the author of the articles in TRUTH upon the case of Surgeon Lea. Low as is my estimate of the intelligence of the Lords of the Admiralty as a body, I can hardly believe them to be so supremely foolish as this statement would imply—though I doubt not, after what has already passed, their capability of any act of malignant spitefulness against an officer suspected of such an offence. If, however, there prevails at Whitehall any such impression respecting the authorship of the articles on Surgeon Lea's case, I shall be happy to publish a few more articles on the same subject, which will convince any competent observer that the writer is still at large and unmuzzled.

Every requirement for Furnishing tastefully at least expense is amply illustrated in the Galleries and Catalogues of HAMPTON & SONS, Furnishers & Decorators, Pall Mall East, S.W.

THE HERNIA INSTITUTE, 489, Oxford-st., London, W., absolutely CURES RUPTURE in from three to six weeks. Highest testimonials. Pamphlets and consultations free.

I had been in hopes that the M.P. who terested himself on Mr. Lea's behalf last year would ere this have brought this atrocious case before Parliament. Should this not be done, it will be a matter for regret to the whole Service. Apart altogether from the individual wrong done to Mr. Lea by the sentence of the court-martial which tried him, the tactics subsequently adopted for the purpose of defeating inquiry, and the outrageous misrepresentation of the facts placed before Parliament through Mr. Goschen, and reiterated through the mouthpiece of official slander in the Service Press, combine to make the case a monument of the unscrupulous methods to which officialdom resorts to escape the admission that a wrong has been officially committed. The House of Commons exists primarily as a check upon administrative abuses of this character, and there never was a Service scandal in which its functions more urgently required to be exercised than in Surgeon Lea's case.

The instances lately given in TRUTH of unreasonable delay in the transmission of telegrams pale before a case reported from Cirencester. A firm in that town despatched to London a telegram on an important matter of business at 12.54 p.m. on May 23, and the telegram was not received until 6.10 p.m. on May 26. No explanation of the delay has been offered, and the money paid for it has not been refunded. Such an occurrence is disgraceful in the highest degree to the Post Office, and more especially to the higher functionaries, who refuse to make even the small reparation of refunding the money. The blame for such occurrences rests not upon the clerk, probably overworked, by whose error the telegram has been mislaid in transmission, but upon the vile system of sweating and slave-driving in force in the Department; and it is time there was some searching Parliamentary inquiry into the whole administration of the Telegraph and Postal service.

A further illustration of the official attitude in the case of delayed telegrams is afforded by a recent case in which a telegram sent from Glastonbury to an address in Australia took fourteen days in transmission. In reply to a complaint, the following letter was received :—

General Post Office, London, July 8, 1896.

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 17th ultimo, I beg leave to inform you that the telegram in question was not delayed by this Department.

Before further inquiry can be made on the subject of your complaint, it is necessary that the Department should be furnished with the message form which was delivered to the addressee.—I am Sir, your obedient servant, J. H. BISCOE.

The addressee, as I have said, is in Australia, and the chances are that the message form delivered to him has long since been destroyed. But, whether it is or is not, what can be more monstrous than to make the production of this form a condition precedent into any further official inquiry into the cause of the delay?

Yet another example of the same sort of thing, On June 8 an officer living at Edinburgh sent a reply-paid telegram to the office of the P. & O. Company in London, asking for information respecting the arrival of a certain ship. He received no reply, and on inquiry of the Company, was informed that they had no trace of the telegram being received. On June 12 the officer wrote to the G.P.O. stating the facts, and asking for an explanation and a refund of his payment. 1s. 5½d. He received the usual printed acknowledgment of his letter, and having heard nothing more at the end of a fortnight, he wrote again, calling attention to his first letter. This letter remained absolutely unanswered. On July 2 he wrote a third time, asking this time how many more reminders it would be necessary for him to send before receiving the explanation and refund which he had asked for on June 12, and the reply that was dispatched to him on July 4 was nothing more or less than a replica of the original formal acknowledgment sent on June 15. Unless the whole administrative system of the G.P.O. is rotten to the core, it cannot be possible to take from June 12 till July 4 to discover whether a particular telegram has or has not been sent from Edinburgh to London. The truth seems to be that the official form No. 7, "I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the — inst., which shall receive attention," is a mere official impertinence which "Your obedient servant, S. Walpole, Secretary," uses for the purpose of choking off the public when they are unduly inquisitive about the blunders of the Department.

Several communications have reached me with reference to the case of a junior clerk in the Savings Bank Department who has recently gone out of his mind, as mentioned in TRUTH of the 2nd inst. As to the fact, there seems now no room for doubt; and among other clerks in the department there is equally little doubt that this young man's sad fate is the result of the merciless slave driving which goes on in this office. It would be well if his relatives were to make further inquiry into the subject, with a view to bringing the matter before higher authority. Among other things, I hear that for several days before he was finally removed, the unfortunate clerk's condition was perfectly obvious to his fellow clerks, but the officials of the Department do not seem to have felt any responsibility in the matter, and the young fellow was allowed to continue attending the office, until one evening he got into trouble on the way home, and was taken to a Police Station on a charge of assault. This certainly does not point to any considerable degree of solicitude for the welfare of their subordinates among the senior officials of the department.

An application is now before the Sheffield authorities, I am told, for the issue of a licence as a marine passenger broker to the man Henry Howden of that town, whose name will be familiar to my regular readers. The application is presumably the outcome of a recent Board of Trade prosecution, in which Howden was charged with a breach of the Merchant Shipping Acts by acting as a passage broker without a licence. The matter is of considerable public interest from the fact that Howden is the local agent, or catspaw, of the notorious Canadian Farm-Pupil Association, of which James Aspdin, of Pendock, Tewkesbury, is the presiding genius; and, unless I am mistaken, the Board of Trade prosecution was prompted by the desire of the Canadian Government to put a stop to the swindling traffic in "farm pupils" carried on by Aspdin & Co. and others of the same class. It is highly desirable that the Sheffield authorities should be fully informed of all these facts before any official licence to carry on this iniquitous traffic is granted to Howden. Ample information for the purpose will be found in the various articles on the Canadian Farm-Pupil Association which have appeared in TRUTH during the last two or three years, and I shall be pleased to place the articles at the disposal of any Sheffield Town Councillors, or other officials, who may desire to see them. I hope to supplement my recent article, "James Aspdin Unmasked," with some further particulars of this individual's farm-pupil operations, as soon as other demands on my space allow me the opportunity of doing so.

SUFFERERS from all liver and gouty complaints, unable to visit the Spa, reap great benefit from taking the Carlsbad Waters or Sprüdel Salts (Löbel Schottländer, Carlsbad, on wrapper). Of all Chemists, and INGRAM & ROYLE, LTD., 52, Farringdon-street.

If a man dies in Aberdeen and his family are too poor to buy a coffin and bury him, the corpse must remain above ground until it has reached such a stage of putrefaction as to become a nuisance and danger to health, and then—and not until then—the interment will be carried out by the public authorities. This is the pleasant state of things revealed in a story published by a local evening paper last week. A man named Carr died, and his widow, being without any means to provide for the funeral, applied to the poor law officials. They said that as the deceased had not been in receipt of parochial relief, it was no case for them, and referred her to the sanitary authority. At the Sanitary Department she was told that "they did not bury people until they were stinking." This condition was fulfilled after the body had been lying uncoffined for two days, during sultry weather, in the small room occupied by the widow and her children, and then the sanitary authorities provided a coffin—which was so small that the decomposing corpse had to be squeezed into it—and the funeral took place. It is stated that this scandalous affair is to be brought under the notice of the Town Council, and it will be interesting to see what that body has to say on the subject.

The performers on the beach at Eastbourne pay, I understand, a regular weekly sum to the town authorities for the right to occupy their respective positions. One troupe of six performers, who have been regularly paying £1 a week in advance, have been ordered off the beach by the Chief Constable. Why? The reason given to me is that the troupe recently dismissed one of their number at a week's notice on what they considered sufficient grounds, and that on this the Chief Constable took his action. The incident requires the attention of the authorities, and unless some more satisfactory explanation can be given, the Chief Constable has clearly exceeded his authority. He has no concern with the domestic affairs of any company of performers, and even if one of the company alleged that he had been wrongfully dismissed, the aggrieved individual has his remedy in a civil court.

A recent prosecution of a fisherman at Newcastle has served to direct attention to the extraordinary claim to exclusive fishery rights in the tidal waters of the Tyne which is made by Earl Percy. It would seem that this claim is based on a charter granted by Edward III.; but the validity of the charter is questioned; and a writer in the Newcastle Daily Leader cites a passage from "Stephen's Commentaries" to show that in the time of Edward III. such grants of fishery rights could "no longer be made by the Crown, being prohibited by King John's Great Charter, and the second and third confirmation of it in the reign of his successor." A local correspondent tells me that the measures which have been taken on behalf of Earl Percy have excited a great amount of feeling in the district, and it is to be hoped that some authoritative decision will be obtained as to his title to the fishing in the Tyne.

By the way, a curious point is raised in the article in the Leader. How does it happen that Earl Percy, and not his father, the Duke of Northumberland, appears as the claimant of these fishery rights? It is suggested that there has been a transference of the ducal properties; and if this is true, it would be interesting to know when such transfer took place, and what effect it will have in regard to the payment of succession duty.

At Portsmouth Quarter Sessions, on Friday, before the Recorder (Mr. G. D. Warry, Q.C.), four cases were tried. In each one Mr. G. Taylor Warry, the Recorder's son, appeared as counsel either for the prosecution or for the defence. Mr. G. T. Warry was also briefed for the prosecution in another case in which the prisoner pleaded guilty, and he was furthermore retained to make an application in connection with a poor-law appeal. The objections to sons practising at the Bar before their fathers have been so frequently stated in these columns that it is hardly necessary to add anything to the foregoing statement. It will, I hope, help to convince the Bar Committee of the desirability of extending to the sons of Recorders and Chairmen of Courts of Quarter Sessions the salutary rule which was some time since adopted with regard to the sons of Judges.

While it is some satisfaction to see that Mr. H. C. Burdett's recent account in the Times of the horrible scene he witnessed at Colchester Station has impelled the R.S.P.C.A. to take up the question of the treatment of cattle in course of transit by rail, I must say that the prosecution at Colchester last week appears to have been conducted in a curiously half-hearted and unconvincing way. Surely, if ever there was a system of cruelty to dumb beasts which the Society ought to rigorously combat, it is that revealed in the evidence in this case. The defendants' counsel contended that there could be no conviction unless it was shown that wanton cruelty was inflicted on the animals without any good or necessary purpose being served. Is it, then, a good and necessary purpose within the meaning of the Act to save railway companies the expense of fitting up their cattle trucks with partitions to partly isolate each animal, which would almost entirely prevent the cruelty complained of? The Bench apparently held that it is, for though they agreed that the method of transit was "a most grossly cruel one," they dismissed the summonses. However, as the result of the prosecution, the President of the Board of Trade is giving his attention to the subject, and I trust that he will be able to persuade the railway companies to improve their arrangements. If they will not do so voluntarily, there will have to be legislation to compel them.

The S.P.C.A. officials might also turn their attention with advantage to the treatment of poultry in transport between Ireland and London viâ Waterford and Milford. A passenger by this route deposes to having seen several hundred fowls and ducks taken on board by this route landed at Milford next morning, and transferred to the train, without having received a drop of water on the journey. Presumably they would get none from the time they were packed in their crates until they reached London (if then), which would be a period of at least thirty-six hours and possibly longer. This means much needless and preventable suffering, which ought to be stopped.

The latest craze has received a thrust below the belt from a most unexpected quarter. At a first glance it would appear rather out of place for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to fall foul of the modern cycle—the human animal being generally capable of taking pretty good care of himself. But Mr. Colam contends that in too many cases the cyclist is unable to enjoy his novel amusement unless his favourite dog is in attendance, the consequence being that many of the latter die rather than stop when following their masters, whilst the less faithful are lost "in hundreds" all over the country through their inability either to go the pace or follow more leisurely by scent. This is a sweeping charge against the humanity of the man on wheels; but Mr. Colam has forgotten to explain why, if he is certain of his facts, he failed to use the powers entrusted to his Society for punishing the cruelty of the offenders.

No one will find fault with the sentence passed upon George and Susan Wheatley at the Clerkenwell Sessions, for the wilful neglect and ill-treatment of their two children, aged fourteen and fifteen respectively. The female prisoner was, it is true, only their step-mother, but it is difficult to conceive how the common instincts of humanity could have allowed the most perfect stranger to watch such cruelty being perpetrated, day by day, without interference. Neither the boy nor the girl enjoyed the best of characters; but, whatever their offences, the punishment inflicted by the male prisoner was perfectly horrible, and would, in the opinion of the medical man who examined them, have proved fatal if much longer persevered in. Under such circumstances, the penalty of eighteen months' hard labour in each case can scarcely be called excessive.

The truth of what I have frequently said as to the magistracy treating the protection of property as of more importance than the protection of the person is neatly illustrated by two little cases which are contributed to my Legal Pillory this week from Ipswich. A man who goes home drunk, and, in accordance with his amiable custom, beats his wife and knocks down both her and her baby, is let off by the Ipswich Solons with a penalty, including costs, of 19s., while immediately afterwards they impose a penalty of £1. 5s. 6d. on a drunken woman for doing eighteenpenny worth of damage to a public-house door. At Ipswich, therefore, it is cheaper by six and sixpence to assault a woman than to damage a door. As usual during a spell of hot weather, sentences for sleeping out have been exceedingly numerous in the country districts, and those given below are only a tithe of the cases brought under my notice. In such weather, many poor homeless outcasts sensibly deem it more wholesome and agreeable to lodge in the open air than in a stuffy and malodorous casual ward; but chuckle-headed justices have somehow come to regard this as a heinous offence, and they almost invariably punish it with a term of hard labour:—

Ipswich Police-court. Before Colonel J. H. Josselyn and Mr. R. D. Fraser. Frederick Wisbey, charged with assaulting his wife. Defendant went home under the influence of drink and struck his wife about the face; she ran into the street with her baby in her arms and he followed her and threw them both to the ground. He had ill-treated her for years. Fined 10s. and 9s. costs.

Monmouthshire Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. S. C. Bosanquet and other magistrates. William Townsend, convicted of stabbing Ann Anderson. One month.

West Derby District Police-court. Before Messrs. J. B. Morgan and J. Hignett. Thomas Bracken, charged with assaulting Sarah Cannel. Defendant flung a piece of brick at the woman, striking her on the ear, and inflicting severe injuries. The Bench said the defendant had had a narrow escape; had the missile struck the woman an inch or so higher on the temple she would have been killed. Fined 20s. and costs, or fourteen days.

Airdrie Sheriff-court. Before Hon. Sheriff Watt. John Brannigan and Patrick Brannigan, convicted of assaulting a married woman, named McKnight, by knocking her down and kicking her. Fined £1 each.

Sheffield City Police-court. Before Messrs. W. G. Blake and J. E. Bingham. George Whitely, charged with ill-treating his son, aged 9 years. Defendant beat the lad severely about the head and the upper part of the body with the buckle end of a collier's belt, inflicting a number of cuts and bruises. Ordered to pay the costs and bound over.

Ipswich Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Jane Catchpole, charged with damage to a public-house door to the extent of 1s. 6d. She was under the influence of drink. Ordered to pay the damage, 1s. 6d., and fined 10s., and 14s. costs—altogether £1. 5s. 6d., or fourteen days.

Norfolk Adjourned Quarter Sessions, Lynn. Before Lord Walsingham and other Justices. William Hubbard (73), charged with lodging in the open air and being an incorrigible rogue and vagabond. Two months.

Louth (Lindsey) Police-court. Before Messrs. J. G. Sewell, T. C. Garfit, Dr. Fawssett, and the Mayor (Mr. Sampson). George Taylor and Hubbard Reeson, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being in unlawful possession of game and nets. Fined £5 each, and 15s. costs.

St. Columb Police-court. Before Mr. Arthur Williams. Edwin Trebilcock, charged with sleeping out. Fourteen days.

Ashford Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Sayer, E. Cock, J. Jones, and W. G. Handcock. Walter Friend, charged with trespassing in pursuit of rabbits. Fined £1, and 18s. 6d. costs.

Spittlegate (Grantham) Police-court. Before Sir Hugh Cholmeley, Bart., Lieut.-Colonel Parker, and Mr. J. G. Thorold. William Spurr, John William Kitson, and John W. Leach, charged with sleeping out. Spurr, fourteen days; the others seven days each.

Mortlock's China and Glass Business, Oxford-st., has entered its 150th year, being founded by John Mortlock in 1746. It is carried on by John George Mortlock, the great-great grandson of the founder, who solicits patronage and recommendation.

Halesowen Police-court. Joseph Hipkiss and Adelaide Hipkiss convicted of assaulting Elizabeth Brookes. The female defendant struck Brookes and knocked her down, and the man then kicked her. She sustained injuries which necessitated medical attendance. Fined 12s. 9d., including costs.

Paisley Police-court. Before Bailie Fisher. Patrick Duffy, charged with assaulting Thomas Porter by striking him with a hammer, knocking him down and kicking him on the head and face, whereby he was cut and wounded to the effusion of blood, two of his teeth were loosened, and he was otherwise injured, causing him to be confined to the infirmary for several days. The defence was that the accused mistook Porter for another man. Fined 21s.

Aberdeen Sheriff Court. William Dickson, convicted of assaulting William Thain by beating him with his fists, felling him to the ground, knocking him into a ditch, kneeling upon him, and again beating him. Fined 15s.

Kettering Police-court. Before Mr. J. J. Roughton and other magistrates. John Mabbutt, charged with poaching. Three months, and a further three months in default of finding sureties.

Burton Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Parker, F. A. J. Coxon, and T. Turner. Annie Keys & George Ellis, charged with stealing a quart jug, value 10d., from a public-house. The woman one month, the man two months.

Totnes Borough Police-court. Before Mr. B. W. Hayman and Dr. Haines. George Tapper, charged with sleeping out in the open air. Fourteen days.

Wymondham Police-court. Before the Rev. J. E. P. Bartlett. James Lock, charged with sleeping out in the open air. Seven days.

Lambeth Police Court. Before Mr. Hopkins. William Johnson, aged 61, charged, under the Prevention of Crimes Act, with being found on enclosed premises for an unlawful purpose. Prisoner, who was an old offender, was found in a back garden. Twelve months.

Suppose that a poacher, armed with a revolver, had a struggle with a gamekeeper, armed only with a stick, and that in the struggle the gamekeeper was shot and killed. What would be the fate of the poacher? Would it be of any avail for him to say that he did not know how his weapon went off? I do not think so. He would either be hanged for murder, or sentenced to a long term of penal servitude for manslaughter. Now consider the case that lately occurred at Warwick, where the positions of the parties were reversed. The poacher carried a stick, the gamekeeper a revolver, and the poacher was shot dead. At the inquest, which was held the same day, evidence was given by the gamekeeper, William Barnes, and his son, who was also present at the affray. William Barnes deposed that he was attacked by the poacher, that he called to his son for assistance, and that all three got entangled in a net and fell down. "While I was on the top of him" (the poacher), continued Barnes, senior, "I was struggling hard to keep him down. I had the revolver in my right hand. I felt something give the net a pull, and then the revolver went off." The son said that after they fell he made haste to get up and pull the net clear of their feet; "directly he pulled the net he heard the sound of a pistol." On this evidence the coroner's jury found that the death of the poacher was "purely accidental;" and next day the magistrates expressed the same opinion, and discharged Barnes, senior, from custody.

A solicitor at Warwick informs me that the facts have been brought under the notice of the Home Secretary—presumably with a view to a further investigation. I do not myself see how the case can possibly be re-opened after the verdict of the jury and the decision of the magistrates. At the same time I fancy most people will be of my opinion, that what has been treated as an accident on the part of the gamekeeper would undoubtedly have been held to be manslaughter on the part of the poacher.

By way of contrast to the foregoing case, I may mention that I have had a letter complaining of the hard treatment a gamekeeper on an estate near Perth has received at the hands of the Sheriff at Perth. According to my informant, this gamekeeper found four men taking young rooks from a rookery in his employer's grounds, and "in defending himself he knocked one of them down." For this the keeper, being summoned for assault, was fined £1, while a charge against the men under the Wild Birds' Protection Act was dismissed, apparently on the ground that though they were removing the young rooks from their nests they had not actually got the birds into their control or possession when detected. But the aggrieved gamekeeper has overlooked one most important consideration. It was not a Game Law case. If he will confine himself to looking after "the sacred birds" he will probably never have any reason to complain of a lack of support from the dispensers of justice.

I have received the following letter from the Editor of the Leeds Express. All I have to say about it is that a little more rapport between the "literary" and managerial departments would be a decided advantage to the paper. I have heard before now of a newspaper being edited by its advertisement manager, but I never heard of this arrangement being permanently profitable to the proprietor; and I doubt whether any greater success is likely to follow where an advertisement manager is responsible for the insertion, without the Editor's knowledge, of half a column or so of "pretended" editorial matter, tending to seriously compromise the paper. Where the distinction between the "literary" and "advertisement" departments of the Leeds Express begins and ends will, after the following letter, be left in doubt, and I would suggest that, in order to let the reader know where he is, all matter emanating from the latter department should in future be distinguished by the mark "Advt."—a practice which has much to recommend it:—

Leeds Express Office, July 10, 1896.

Literary Department.

To the Editor of TRUTH.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me a few words of correction concerning your reference to the "post-card advertisement" at Leeds. The "advertisement" was, as the apology subsequently issued stated, absolutely and solely the work of the Advertisement Department of the paper. The Editor had no cognisance of it whatever.

The same holds true of the pretended editorial "commentary" which, as you say, "decidedly aggravated" the offence.

That was inserted without the Editor's knowledge, and in his absence; and the following issue of the paper contained a paragraph (appended) disclaiming the matter.

Your remark therefore that "A Provincial Editor" (why the cheap sneer at "A Provincial Editor?") "may regard this sort of thing as a joke," is a mistaken assumption so far as I am concerned.—Yours faithfully,

Thos. H. Hardman, Editor.

The following is the paragraph referred to in Mr. Hardman's letter. Apparently the "mistaken assumption" that the Express is edited by its editor has been widely prevalent in Leeds. But, no doubt, after this lucid "disclaimer," the position of affairs is now better understood:—

Shakspere enjoined us to "speak by the eard." Many Leeds people have now altered it to speak "of" the eard. As Miss Reeve used to sing, "You know the sort of eard I mean." Some of them write about it, too. Those who have addressed their remarks to me have made a mistake. I would politely request them to address themselves to the Commercial department, which is the department concerned. For the same reason I must decline the invitations I have received to personal interviews.

The following statement is startling, if true:—

Nineteen thousand purses were left in cabs last year. Four thousand were stolen in omnibuses between December and March. Sixty per day (average) are snatched from the hand, and thousands are lost—left in shops and trains—daily.

In view of these statements the Hon. Mrs. Pery, of Kinvarra, Co. Galway, sends me a purse which she has patented under the name of the "Safe" purse. It is attached to the wrist by means of a strap, with a loop to go over one of the fingers, so that it cannot be either dropped, laid down, or stolen, and yet the fingers are left free for any other purpose. I do not know what authority Mrs. Pery has for her statistics, but whether they are accurate or not, some of my lady readers may like to know of her purse. I must say that the feminine practice of always carrying the purse about in the hand is a reprehensible one from every point of view, and a specially expensive one from the point of view of those who have to keep it filled.

Apropos of my remarks the other day on the importance of dentistry in schools under public management, I have received a very instructive "Handbook on the Teeth," by Mr. Walter Whitehouse, L.D.S., of Victoria-street. I can recommend this little book to all my readers, for they will find in it in compact form a great deal of information about teeth and dentistry which every one ought to possess, though I fear few do.

In an unguarded moment I remarked the other day that, though I would not give ladies votes, I would certainly let them have tea and strawberries. This has brought me many protests and denunciations from advanced representatives of the other sex. When I spoke it was in a bonâ-fide belief that tea and strawberries are more beneficial and desirable than votes; and I am grieved if it should turn out that the majority of women are of a different opinion. That some of them are I know only too well, and it was quite unnecessary for them to write and inform me of the fact; but I am confident that they will always be a minority, and I yet hope that many of them will live to realise their mistake.

One of the strangest arguments for enfranchising the unmarried female householder that I have yet heard is put forward by a lady who writes to me on the above subject, and writes, I am bound to say, very politely, and with a spirit of toleration towards the benighted male which not all of her disfranchised sisters manifest. She tells me that married women influence their husbands to a great extent, and thus are able to vote through them. How little the unmarried know of the relations of the sexes in the married state!

I have received a long letter from Captain Philip H. B. F. Salusbury, in reference to Lord Salisbury's statement in the House of Lords last week concerning the serious allegations of outrages on British subjects which that officer has made against the authorities of the Congo Free State. The letter complains of various misrepresentations on the part of the Prime Minister, and particularly that, while he was unable altogether to deny the truth of the charges, in his efforts to whitewash the Congo State, he did not scruple to cast a reflection upon Captain Salusbury by alluding to "statements" to his prejudice which he said had been "published in Belgium." Lord Salisbury has since been asked for details of the statements to which he referred, and challenged to produce any evidence of blameworthy conduct by Captain Salusbury during his service under the Congo State. To this no reply has been vouchsafed. But there is nothing extraordinary in his lordship attacking a man without being able to justify his attack. It is a way he has.

Mr. John Skelton will shortly resign his office as Vice-President of the Local Government Board for Scotland, and I hear that he is to be succeeded by Mr. Anstruther, M.P. The St. Andrews Burghs Liberals will do well to be prepared for a contest. The appointment for which Mr. Anstruther is to quit the House of Commons is worth £1,200 a year.

For the benefit of my Welsh readers I am asked to mention that a Welsh National Testimonial to Mr. Thomas Gee, of Denbigh, is now in course of promotion in recognition of the many public services of that veteran Radical. Mr. Samuel Moss, J.P., of Chester, is the hon. secretary of the Committee. Although it is nominally a Welsh testimonial, I doubt not that there are many Anglo-Saxon Radicals who will be glad to contribute, and I should think it not unlikely that their contributions will be as gladly received.

of expert evidence. Therefore, two gentlemen who were connected with the piercing of the St. Gothard Tunnel have been appointed experts, on condition that they are not required to make a local investigation; consequently, a third expert is to be appointed, who is to proceed to South Africa. I trust that this will expedite matters, for it is really full time that the Arbitration Tribunal should pronounce its decision.

I hope that the proceedings at the Chicago Convention will bring home to Mr. Balfour and other Conservative bimetallists their mistake in aiding and abetting tampering with the standard of money. It signifies little what that standard may be, provided that it be invariable. In the United States the Western States are producers of silver, therefore they want the free coinage of silver, which would give them a market for all that they produce. The "Populists" want to repudiate all monetary obligations, and, with this end in view, they propose at once to oblige all to receive payment in a depreciated currency, which practically would enable all who have borrowed a dollar worth 100 cents, to pay it back in one worth sixty cents. Silverites and Populists have, therefore, made common cause in a scheme which would entirely ruin the credit of their country, for who would trust another with a dollar if this other might by law pay it back in little more than half a dollar? Credit being thus at one fell swoop destroyed, no one would be the gainer. Lenders would demand a higher interest on loans to cover the risk of further repudiations, whilst what now costs one dollar would cost very nearly two. My only wonder is that these strange political economists do not see that it is as well to be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb, and that they do not propose a ratio between gold and silver of one to one.

Well indeed may the well-informed American correspondent of the Times in America talk of a "silver craze," but we shall always be subjected to these crazes so long as people will not realise that currency is only a measure by which the relative value of one object to another is estimated, and thus the transactions between man and man are simplified. A farmer in one of the Western States of America finds that the sale price of his produce is lowered owing to a hundred causes. He imagines that he can meet this by reducing the value of the currency. Never was there a more absurd illusion. If he got more currency for his produce, he would have to pay more for all that he buys. His monetary position would, therefore, not be changed, except that from the fact of substituting silver for gold, the value of the currency would be perpetually falling, because the supply of silver is practically unlimited, and the law would insist on all produce being purchased by the Government, and converted into coin. When Mr. Bryan, the nominee of the Chicago Convention for the Presidency, says that the people are being crucified on a golden cross, he might as well say that they are being crucified on a barometer, and that if it be enacted that storm is henceforward to be fair weather on the dial of the barometer, every farmer would be secured fair weather.

I can understand a person holding that one generation is crushed by the volume of debt incurred by preceding generations, and that, consequently, this volume should be arbitrarily reduced. But then he ought to frankly demand the reduction. To reduce it by halving the value of legal tender, on the ground that this is a mere question of currency, is the grossest of hypocrisy.

My idea of a sound system of taxation is this. Every one ought to be allowed to accumulate during his lifetime what he pleases, but when he dies there ought to be a maximum that he may leave to relations or friends, all in excess of this maximum going to the State. Take, for instance, Mr. Astor. It is said that he possesses about fifty million pounds. Evidently he cannot spend the interest of this amount. In a given number of years, therefore, if this money from generation to generation remains in the hands of one single individual, it will become five hundred millions. Neither the individual nor the community will benefit by this. Therefore, I would meet it by handing into the public treasury most of Mr. Astor's fifty millions on his death. How would this harm him? He would have ceased to exist. If the State took 99 per cent. of his money on his death, he would still have five hundred thousand pounds to dispose of, and on this sum his heirs or heir might rub on very comfortably.

I am glad to see that an amnesty has been offered to the natives of Rhodesia; but I would have the Colonial Office go a step further and invite a conference at which the natives may have an opportunity to state the grievances under which they consider that they have suffered, and at which a modus vivendi between them and the settlers may be arranged. Rhodesia is as large as Spain and France. There are three or four thousand "European" settlers, most of whom are gold prospectors and dealers in very mythical mining claims. These people want the Matabele to be "wiped out," in order that prospecting may go on without danger. The other natives, they hope, having less backbone than the Matabele, may be forced to work for the whites. This scheme is a barbarous one, and ought never to be permitted. The offer of amnesty has, it is stated, caused great indignation amongst the "settlers," and they clamour for a policy of vengeance and "wiping out." For my part, I cannot forget that the Matabele are the native inhabitants of Matabeleland; that they obviously have been treated—to use the mildest term—hardly, and that a native race ought not to be destroyed in order to furnish a crew of speculators with an opportunity to roam at leisure over a huge district, for the purpose of finding some traces of gold which may be floated in London as a company. Surely the country is large enough to give to the Matabele a reserve, in which they may live and thrive according to their lights.

The dual control of Earl Grey acting as a subordinate to the dethroned king, Mr. Rhodes, and Sir Frederick Carrington acting as the representative of the Imperial authority, does not work well. All military and civil power should be concentrated in the hands of the latter, the Company, of course, providing the means. A huge issue of debentures has been decreed by the Directors. These, I presume, will be taken up by the financial ring that ran the shares up to 800 per cent. premium. To this I have no sort of objection, provided that they retain these debentures in their own hands, and do not fool innocent investors into taking them. So long as the Company has money, or can get money, it must pay for everything; when its resources are exhausted, it will have to surrender its Charter, for it will be unable to fulfil the conditions under which it holds it. This will occur as soon as it can borrow no more; for, to suppose that it can pay all claims on it owing to the war and the raid, its heavy annual administrative charges, and interest on this issue of debentures, out of a non-existent revenue, is obviously absurd.

I see it stated that the Radicals are protesting against Mr. Chamberlain being the Chairman of the investigating Committee. Far from this, the Radicals would have him Chairman of the Committee. One of the statements put forward by the friends of the Company is that Mr. Chamberlain knew of the raid before it occurred, and tacitly encouraged it. For this I have not seen the shadow of a shade of evidence. I believe it to be absolutely untrue, and that the charge has been made is additional ground for investigation. The aim of those who have urged the inquiry is that the exact facts in regard to the Company and its doings may be known, and that Parliament, with a full knowledge of these facts, may take the whole situation into consideration.

The report of the Land Commission of Matabeleland, with accompanying correspondence, which has been just presented to Parliament, shows that, when the Chartered Company conquered Matabeleland, it assumed the proprietorship of all the cattle. Some of these cattle were the personal property of individuals, and others belonged to the nation. These latter were called King's cattle, and they were distributed amongst the kraals, the inhabitants of which were allowed to milk them, but might not kill them without the permission of the King. In December last it was decided that a portion of them should be returned to the Matabele; and it was explained to them that the Company would retain 32,000 and return 40,930. So far, however, as I can gather from a telegram of Earl Grey, dated June 23, this alleged distribution only took place in February last. Earl Grey states that when the arrangement was explained to the Matabele they expressed "themselves well satisfied." This satisfaction seems to have been doubtful in view of the fact of the outbreak that occurred. Then came the rinderpest, when large numbers of the cattle were ordered to be killed.

To confiscate the entire cattle of a nation on the plea of conquest never has been dreamt of in any previous case of conquest. The troops of the Chartered Company were collected by means of engagements promising "loot" to all who enlisted, and the cattle seem to have been the "loot." I wonder what would have been thought if, after France had ceased to resist the Germans, the German Emperor had issued a decree declaring all French cattle to belong to him, had a year later given the French back a portion of them, and had then announced that all Frenchmen were satisfied with this equitable arrangement.

I have been greatly bewildered by the various accounts in the papers of Mr. Rhodes's share in the battle (or battue) at Thabas Imamba. What did this gallant warrior really do towards the slaughter of the Matabele? At first I thought he must have been chiefly occupied in the congenial business of looting the natives' cattle. This was when, on Wednesday, I read the statement of the special correspondent of the Daily Chronicle that "Mr. Cecil Rhodes, under heavy fire for fifteen minutes, captured one herd of cattle himself"—himself, mind you. Then I learned from the Central News telegram that "Mr. Rhodes saw a great deal of the fighting." That was puzzling, because it might mean either that he took an active part in shooting down the Matabele, or merely that he looked on at the sport from a safe distance. On turning to Dalziel's message, however, I read that "Mr. Rhodes fought well in Sunday's battle." This seemed to settle the question; but not for long. On Saturday I came across the following passage in a further telegram from the correspondent of the Central News:—

> During the fight at Thabas Imamba, Mr. Rhodes, refusing arms, simply carried a switch. The officers throughout the hostilities had fears for his safety, as his daring led him into very exposed positions. Once the ex-Cape Minister got into an exceedingly hot corner, and sang out, "Jove, they are close." Assistance, however, promptly arrived.

Finally, on Monday, Reuter informed a wondering world that > in the action at Thabas Imamba Mr. Cecil Rhodes was fired at by a Matabele from a distance of only eight paces, but was not hit.

We are to understand from these veracious correspondents, then, that the valiant Rhodes went into battle, captured a herd of cattle all by himself, and fought well armed only with a switch! Was there ever such a hero?

TORY CODLINS AND RADICAL SHORTS.

THE warmest friend of the present Administration would hardly assert that it has done well during the current Session. It began with a programme which its members must have known could only pass if the Session lasted above a year, and at the same time it announced that a prorogation in time to shoot grouse was a principle so sacred that, no matter what occurred, the Session must end in the middle of August. The programme was an exhaustive scheme of spoliation of the many for the few. The Education Bill, which was designed to hand over the education of the rural districts to the Church of England at the cost of the community, was so outrageous that it had to be withdrawn, for it could not stand in the light of discussion. The Rating Bill has been passed. On the plea of relieving agriculture, the Bill has made a present to the landlords of half of their rates, and it has included in the favoured landlords, not only those who own land the value of which had fallen, but land whose value had risen. Not satisfied with this, the Tory Finance Bill exempts rich men from the operation of the Death Duties in respect to many millions owned by them, and reduces the Land Tax to a vanishing amount. Abroad the Government has drifted into a Soudan Expedition against the advice of Lord Cromer, and, with a meanness almost incredible, has saddled India with a portion of the cost, although a Hindoo has as little to do with the valley of the Nile as an Egyptian fellah with the plains of the Ganges. The Session will close with a Government possessed of a huge majority in Parliament utterly discredited as business men. The Unionists may pull themselves together before the General Election, for that is far off. But if an election were to take place now, their majority would, to say the least, be considerably reduced. To what did they owe their victory of last July? In part to a Conservative reaction, but mainly to their predecessors having so muddled everything that the electors thought that the fire was better than the frying-pan.

But whilst the Unionists are doing all that they can to lose popular favour, we are doing nothing to gain it, beyond a vague endeavour to suggest that if the Liberals muddled, so do the Unionists. "Short is the man, not Codlin" will hardly put Short in the place of Codlin. The Liberal Party just now is very much in the position of the Democratic Party in America, as revealed at the Chicago Convention. The Silverites there, having captured the Convention, and having got hold of the "machine," seek to impose on all Democrats the silver heresy. So here, a clique has captured the Liberal machine, and would impose on the Party views in regard to foreign and domestic policy, which are in direct contradiction to all its traditions. Jingoism, with its corollary of huge armaments, may be to the advantage of the country. But this is not the tradition of Liberals. A scheme of government which practically converts Party rule into a choice between two rival bands of aristocrats may also be to the advantage of the country; but here, again, this is not the creed of Liberals. Radicals require something more than a see-saw between Short and Codlin. Let us suppose that there were a General Election to-morrow. The Unionists might get a majority, when things would remain as they are. But if the Liberals were to win, in all probability the Queen would send for Lord Rosebery. We should therefore be confronted with much the same Government as brought the Liberal Party into discredit last year—a Government more Jingo in foreign politics than Lord Salisbury and his friends, and powerless in domestic politics owing to the House of Lords. The doctrine of the Liberal wirepullers is that the Party ought to subordinate every principle to getting in, and, when in, to subordinate every principle to staying in. My objection to the doctrine is, that a majority cannot be obtained under such conditions, and that, if it could, no one would profit except those who may secure to themselves salaries for a year or two.

If one thing is more certain than another, it is that, whether the Liberals are in a majority or in a minority in the House of Commons, they are equally powerless so long as the Unionists can fall back on their permanent majority in the House of Lords. This is why I always have been, and always shall be, for a concentration of effort on the part of Democrats to sweep away that branch of the Legislature. But is the Liberal Party prepared to do this? The Party is, but its wirepullers are not. Our Brahmins, it is true, deal in vague generalities about a reform of the Lords. During the last Parliament we were told that we were, after a weary sand-ploughing, ultimately to go to the country on a resolution embodying such a reform as would render the Lords innocuous. But our Brahmins never agreed amongst themselves as to what this resolution was to be, because most of them would not accept any resolution that would have proved acceptable to Radical opinion outside the Cabinet. To abolish the House of Lords is a revolution. Its consequences would go far beyond a mere change in the composition of Parliament, for it would make the people masters, not only in the Legislature, but in the Executive. The House of Lords is the fortress of privilege, and all those who either personally profit by privilege, or who dread Democracy, naturally object to this fortress being levelled to the ground. Some of them, like Lord Lansdowne in his speech to the London County Council last week, openly demand that it should be strengthened; others try to curry favour with the Radicals by pretending to be with them, but are determined, under a pretence of doing something in the way of reform, to see that nothing really is done which would weaken the lordly barrier against popular rule. Never was a revolution effected by officialdom. Therefore, if it is to be effected, it must come from the people imposing their will on those who pretend to speak for them. I would have the next General Election fought on these issues: That the House of Lords be abolished; that no Liberal Government henceforward take office without a distinct understanding with the Crown that, if the Lords prove recalcitrant, they are to be coerced into obedience by the creation of a sufficient number of Peers to swamp their opposition; and that all future Liberal Governments are to be composed exclusively of the elected representatives of the people. Surely the Irish might assent to this programme. It was the Lords, not the Commons, that threw out the Home Rule Bill, and so long as the Lords can constitutionally throw out a Home Rule Bill, such a Bill never will become law.

Radicals have the future of Democracy in their own hands. If they deem that the electoral struggle is to be, whether this or that gang is to be in office, because one may be ready to throw a few more Democratic crumbs to them than the other, by all means let us humbly and submissively bow the knee to officialdom. Let us accept with gratitude any Peer whom the Queen may select as our Leader. Let us turn our backs upon the policy of Mr. Gladstone in regard to armaments and our foreign relations at the bidding of the Leader whom her Majesty vouchsafes to us, because from the Court view he is a "safe man." Let us with reverence and respect contemplate the barrier which breaks the Democratic wave. If, on the other hand, we are not prepared to be led like a blind man by any dog, and if we really are desirous to bring to an end a system of aristocratic rule, in which a Tory Government with power alternates with a Liberal Government without power, we must realise that the first step towards putting an end to this is to knock down the stone wall within which we are confined, instead of prancing about in our prison and braying like a jackass in a pound, and knocking our heads against the wall as a protest to the wall's existence. He who wills the end must use the means to attain it. The means to attain our end are not mere rhetorical claptrap and pious opinions, but a perception that those who are not with us are against us, and a determination to sweep away everything that bars our advance. Whether we have one Chamber or two Chambers is a mere detail. The essential is that no man shall henceforth be a Legislator who is not elected thereto by the votes of his fellow-citizens.

THE POSITION OF THE KILBURN SISTERS.

Four weeks have now elapsed since the publication of the result of the TRUTH inquiry into the work of the Church Extension Association and the Kilburn Sisters. So far as I am aware, no answer of any kind to the TRUTH article has been put forward in any quarter, nor has any intimation appeared that such an answer is in contemplation. On the contrary, the Sisters have issued in the interval a large quantity of circulars, renewing their appeals for cash without any allusion whatever to the subject, and the Church paper which has hitherto made itself their mouthpiece has, alone among Church papers, refrained from the slightest allusion to the TRUTH article. To all appearance, therefore, it is the intention of the Sisters to allow this formidable indictment to pass in silence, and to go on their way, if they are allowed to do so, as if nothing had happened. The question then arises, Are they to be allowed to do so? That question it will be for the subscribers to the Church Extension Association to answer, and I trust there will be little difference of opinion among them as to what the answer should be.

The position of the Kilburn Sisterhood at the present moment is this: Various allegations against their work having been published in the Press and elsewhere, and having been commented upon in TRUTH, the Sisters came to me, after having consulted competent advisers, representing that I had been misinformed, and offering to satisfy me that this was so. They must be presumed, therefore, to have had the fullest confidence in my desire to do them strict justice. A course of inquiry was agreed upon between them and me. The inquiry was pursued accordingly up to a certain point, when a demand, unjustifiable in itself, and inconsistent with all that had gone before, was put forward by the Mother Superior, failing my compliance with which the investigation was to stop. As a consequence, it did virtually stop, and I was referred to a lawyer, who, after having reversed the whole relation of the parties by calling upon me to prove to him and his clients that the allegations made against them were true, closed the negotiations by informing me that if any further criticism of the Sisterhood appeared in TRUTH, he should commence proceedings for libel upon the observations which had appeared in TRUTH before the Sisters invited me to investigate their work. Disregarding this threat, I published the article which formed the Supplement to TRUTH of June 18. In that article, after describing all that had passed, I discussed in detail the whole of the allegations against the work of the Sisters, and gave, with full reasons for the conclusions arrived at, my opinion that in all material particulars the allegations were well-founded, and that the Sisters were practically unable to furnish a reply under any single head. At the same time I made public for the first time a great deal of evidence as to the treatment of children, and even grown-up girls, in the orphanages, which, unless disproved, must destroy all confidence in the management of these institutions, and the competence of the Sisters for the work they have undertaken. All this I published, I think I may confidently say, without hostility of any kind towards the Sisterhood, and with every possible endeavour to give full weight to everything that they had said in their own defence during my negotiations with them, and to every argument that could be used on their behalf. It cannot be contended by any but the most bigoted partisan that I have shown the slightest animus towards them, or in any way departed from the position of an impartial investigator of the case which they themselves desired me to assume.

This, then, is the indictment which the Sisters seem to think is best met on their side by absolute silence. It is not for me to estimate the significance of my own conclusions; but if any reader of TRUTH feels any difficulty in arriving at that point, it should be sufficient to refer him to the practically unanimous opinion of the Press, of all shades of opinion, in London and the Provinces upon the effect of the TRUTH disclosures. For the guidance of Church people, I think it only right to cite specially the opinions expressed by the most authoritative Church paper, the Guardian, and by the most influential organ of the more advanced High Church Party, the Church Times. It would not have surprised me had these journals attempted to extenuate the effect of the TRUTH report. Instead of that they have both pronounced upon the Mother Superior and her advisers a condemnation which seems to me, coming as it does from such a quarter, far more severe than anything I have myself ventured to say. I will ask my readers to study more especially the observations of the Guardian, which appeared on June 24:—

If it promised to be of the slightest avail we should appeal to the Mother Superior on the ground of the grave trouble and disgrace which her action is bringing upon other Sisterhoods and upon the Church at large, as well as upon her own community. But the experience of the Editor of TRUTH does not encourage us to do this. When the head of a great organisation first invites an inquiry, then throws difficulties in the way of its prosecution, and finally threatens with the penalties of libel those whom she has asked to conduct it, and the witnesses whose evidence they have taken, there can be no room for remonstrance or argument. All that we can do is to ask those of our readers who are contributors to the works carried on by the Kilburn Sisters to read the extracts given to-day, or, better still, the supplement to TRUTH of last Thursday, and the Charity Organisation pamphlet. They may reply, no doubt, that these are only ex parte statements, which leave their confidence in the Sisterhood quite unshaken. But though an ex parte statement cannot be final and conclusive, it constitutes—when it relates to a matter of public concern—a case which those against whom it is directed are bound to meet. If these charges are true, money sent to Kilburn had very much better be thrown into the nearest pond. The sum affected by this unpleasant doubt is said to be some £35,000 a year. Those out of whose pockets it comes may, of course, be wholly indifferent to the use to which it is put. In that case they will not be made uneasy by the charges brought by TRUTH and by the Charity Organisation Society; but if they have even the slightest desire that their money should do good to others they will decline to send any more until the Superior has submitted the whole history and management of the Sisterhood, and the works carried on in connection with it, to the test of an impartial investigation by the ecclesiastical authorities to whom she professes—at least we suppose so—to owe religious obedience. There is no reason to doubt that the Bishop of London would institute such an investigation if he were asked, though he might now demand some adequate assurance that those to whom he entrusts it shall not be prosecuted for libel if the Superior is not satisfied with their conclusions. So long as the Sisterhood decline to make this request they must not wonder if their unwillingness to do so exposes them to grave suspicion, and leaves us no choice but to warn those who have hitherto maintained their work of the responsibility they will incur by maintaining it any longer.

The Church Times is a paper from which, if from any, some apology for the Sisters might have been expected, and it is certainly not a journal which will be credited with any undue partiality for TRUTH or its editor. It guards itself, indeed, against accepting the TRUTH statements unreservedly, and "hopes that some of them have been exaggerated," but for the rest it speaks to precisely the same effect as the Guardian,—indeed, the agreement between the opinions of the two writers is very remarkable:—

Sisterhoods, like Cæsar's wife, ought to be above suspicion, considering the implicit faith we are inclined to repose in the integrity of the Sisters, and the absolute correctness of their administration of public gifts. After a careful consideration of the painful controversy aroused by the charges brought against the Kilburn Sisters, we feel bound to reiterate the opinion that these ladies have pursued a course damaging not only to themselves, but to all similar communities . . . . . If the confidence of Churchmen is to be restored, the Sisters should at once, before it is too late, unreservedly place their case in the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities, giving them absolute permission, without fear of pains or penalties, to look into the whole of the management of their institution from the beginning, as regards the works in which it has engaged, religious, philanthropic, and commercial and the methods it has employed. It is simply childish, if not worse, to ask for an inquiry, then to put obstacles in the way of those conducting it, and then to threaten them with prosecution for libel.

The above observations were penned within a few days of the publication of the TRUTH article, and when there was still ground for expecting that if the Sisters did not adopt the advice tendered them by the Church Times and the Guardian, they would at least make some show of an attempt to rebut the imputations upon their past conduct. That expectation must, apparently, now be abandoned. The Sisters have neither signified their intention of traversing the conclusions of TRUTH, nor of placing their case in the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities. Nor is this in any way surprising. To those who remember that when the Archbishop of Canterbury himself undertook to conduct an inquiry into certain phases of the Kilburn work, it was only to find himself thwarted by transparent artifices culminating in his summary removal from his position of patron of the organisation, it will be no matter for wonder to find that the Mother Superior and her advisers should prove as indifferent to the appeals and remonstrances of representative organs of Church opinion, as they had previously shown themselves to the voice of the Church itself, uttered officially through its chief prelate. To me, at any rate, this is only what was to be expected. I am one of the few, be it remembered, who have had the privilege of personally discussing their position with the Mother Superior and her most trusted advisers. Taking advantage of the position they had given me, as an investigator in whose independence and friendliness they had confidence, I urged again and again upon the two Sisters whom I interviewed, as well as upon the Mother Superior herself, the desirability of submitting themselves—not necessarily in their religious life, but at any rate in their charitable undertakings—to the surveillance or inspection of some outside personage or authority in whom the public at large would feel confidence. The suggestion, as I have already recorded, was received with scant favour, and the impression conveyed to me was that the Mother and the governing Sisters were supremely satisfied with themselves and everything they have done, and would brook nothing whatever in the shape of outside interference with their work, whether from cleric or layman. In that attitude, I take it, they are now confirmed. In a weak moment these amiable ladies thought that the Editor of TRUTH might be trusted to conduct a superficial and perfunctory investigation of their work, and to whitewash them as soon as he found that they were raising and spending a vast amount of money in some sort of charity. But they found that he wanted to know too much, and that he declined to say that statements, primâ facie authentic, were false, until he had evidence to that effect before him. So they threw over the Editor of TRUTH as they had previously thrown over the Archbishop of Canterbury, and tried to frighten him into holding his tongue. That having failed, they mean to show now that they despise the Editor of TRUTH, and care nothing for his opinion nor anybody else's. They will go their own way, and trust to time, which is stronger than journalists or archbishops, to help them out of their present troubles. That, so far as I can gather, is the present frame of mind of the Mother Superior and her colleagues.

It remains for the public to say whether this policy shall or shall not succeed. The public, giving some £35,000 per annum in cash, and an unknown amount beyond in kind, to the work of the Church Extension Association, hold the key of the situation, and I have far too much confidence in the general good sense of the public to doubt what the result will be when the situation is clearly understood. The advice, therefore, which I would give to all who have hitherto subscribed to the Church Extension Association, or in any way supported the work of the Kilburn Sisters, is that given so clearly and wisely in the above extract from the Guardian. No further support of any kind should be accorded to the work of the Sisters until two conditions have been fulfilled: (1) that the whole of the allegations placed on record in TRUTH of June 18 shall be refuted to the satisfaction of a competent and independent tribunal; (2) that a constitution shall be adopted which shall have the approval of the ecclesiastical authorities, and which will afford to the subscribing public the security that the whole of the work, including the financial administration, is under the supervision and approval of some outside inspector or "visitor" in whose good sense and sound judgment confidence can be felt. These conditions are indispensable, because by their own conduct and attitude in the face of the charges against them, quite as much as by the weight of evidence and argument on the various points at issue, these ladies have forfeited all title to the confidence of the public as administrators of the alms of benevolent Church people. The observation of the Guardian that "if these charges are true, money sent to Kilburn had very much better be thrown into the nearest pond," is well within the mark. Money given in support of a charitable institution standing in such a position as the Church Extension Association now occupies is worse than wasted. The successful maintenance of such a charity is an encouragement to all ill-managed charitable institutions to persevere in their evil courses, and in the present instance it means the maintenance of what has become, as both the Church papers which I have quoted declare, a scandal in the Church and a danger to other Sisterhoods.

Let me repeat once more what I have said over again, that in making these remarks, and in giving this advice to Church people, I am actuated by no spirit of animosity to the Sisters of the Church, any more than is the Guardian in giving the same advice. There is a great organisation at Kilburn, possessed of vast resources, and capable when properly controlled and directed of achieving infinite good. The Sisters as a body are not, to the best of my belief, responsible for the errors, and worse, that have been committed, for the responsible management of the affairs of the community is not, directly or indirectly, under the control or inspiration of the whole body; indeed, I believe that a great number of the Sisters know little of the truth upon any points that are in dispute. It is to the advantage, therefore, of the Order, equally with all those who should reap the benefit of its vast power for good, that its constitution and administration shall be radically reformed. There are those whose sectarian prepossessions may lead them to distrust all Sisterhoods. I am not one of them. Nothing would please me better than that the time and trouble I have devoted to this matter should result in the Kilburn Sisterhood being remodelled, and entering upon a new and long career of usefulness. But it is now clear that such a result can only be arrived at by the prompt withdrawal of all public countenance and support from the Sisterhood as it now is. For that reason before all others, I ask the public to withhold their support.

LEIGH SAMPSON—HIS ALIASES AND HIS GHOSTS.

The name of this individual will be familiar to many readers of TRUTH. Some years ago he attracted attention in these columns by the numerous circulars he issued in the character of a distressed artist in search of patronage for the support of a mother and sister dependent upon him. Not only did he issue these appeals, which might have been excusable had the facts alleged in them been true, but he adopted the plan of sending pictures "on appro." with his circulars, which pictures the recipient was expected to pack up and return, if he was not disposed to become a patron. Sampson protested strongly against my criticism; so strongly, indeed, that he went the length of calling on me late one night, and challenging me to fight a duel with him. Finding this method ineffectual, he appealed to my benevolence, pathetically beseeching me not to deprive him and his relatives of the means of earning a livelihood. As the result of this appeal, I sent a representative down to talk the matter over with him, and Sampson so worked upon the tender feelings of my representative that we arrived at an understanding that, if he would abandon the features in his circulars which were objected to, I would say nothing more about him.

It is a melancholy thing to have to admit that one has been humbugged, but I am bound to say that I am afraid this man Leigh Sampson has got at the blind side of me. It is so often my duty to warn my readers against allowing their benevolence to get the better of their judgment, that I feel a peculiar pain in confessing that I have myself fallen a victim to a too susceptible nature, and an undue confidence in the truthfulness of a fellow-creature. If it is not so, a great weight will be lifted off my mind; but at present I fear the worst. The case stands thus. I have been in communication with several artists and one or two picture dealers, who tell me that they have known this man Sampson for years, not as a painter, but as a picture dealer in a fairly good way of business. The artists have, in fact, all been in the habit of selling their work to him as a dealer. They tell me that his real name is not "Leigh," but Levi Sampson—a much more suggestive name. In one instance, at least, he also seems to have posed as the representative of a firm styling itself Sampson & Son.

All these artists have, I think, sold their pictures to him unsigned. One, at any rate, has sold to him large numbers of unsigned pictures, and has afterwards seen these pictures with the signature "Leigh Sampson" upon them. I am also told that Sampson himself is absolutely incapable of painting anything which could be called a picture.

Now, these are allegations very easily brought to the test. There are two questions to be decided. First, whether Sampson is, in the ordinary sense of the term, an artist at all; secondly, whether, in the appeal issued by him in the character of a struggling artist, he has really been offering for sale his own work, or those pictures which he had bought in the manner above described. If either of these questions is decided against him, Sampson is a fraud and a humbug. There is already considerable reason for doubting his honesty. A year or two ago he made special appeals to people to buy his pictures, on the ground that he had received an appointment as art teacher at the Cape, and was unable to take it up for want of the means to pay his fare. Quite recently he has been trading in the same way upon a representation that he had received an appointment as art teacher at Adelaide. He has declined to be interviewed by a representative of a South Australian paper, in connection with this alleged appointment; and in a private letter to me he has declined, on absurdly insufficient grounds, to satisfy me that the statement is genuine, by informing me of the name of the institution from which he has received his appointment. Only the most credulous will under these circumstances believe that the appointment is anything else but an invention. Further, he has recently assumed the name of "Donald Sampson," for the purpose, apparently, of recommending himself to Scotchmen, to whom he has been offering his pictures, and on the same principle he has been adopting the name of "Lloyd Sampson" when appealing to Welshmen. That is obviously the act of a thoroughly unscrupulous humbug, and lends colour to the allegation that his name of Leigh Sampson is itself a fictitious one, assumed for the purpose of hiding a Hebraic origin. The man who can resort to tricks of this kind is presumably capable of doing the same thing on a larger scale.

Now Mr. Sampson has no ground for suggesting that I am not ready to do full justice to him. To all appearance I have hitherto dealt with him only too tenderly. I therefore now offer him an opportunity of clearing up, if he can, these imputations upon his honesty. I offer to place at his disposal a room in this office, and invite him to come here and paint a certain picture under my eye. I say a "certain picture," because there is one particular picture which I am specially anxious to see Mr. Sampson reproduce, and which he can have no difficulty in reproducing, if he is an honest man, for the simple reason that about forty or fifty replicas of this particular picture signed by him, and purporting to be his work, have recently been sold. For Sampson, therefore, to come here and paint me yet another replica of this picture ought to be the simplest thing in life, and the work of only a few hours, and it will have the effect of entirely setting at rest the doubts which I feel respecting Sampson's qualification as an artist. Mr. Sampson has of late been extremely anxious to win my good opinion. He has called at this office; he has requested me to insert a statement from him as a paid advertisement; he has even pursued me with long, whining letters at my private address. He can therefore have no excuse for refusing to avail himself of the perfectly simple and reasonable offer which I make. If he does refuse to avail himself of it, he will convict himself of being the swindling impostor which it is alleged that for years past he has been.

LIFEBOATS AND L. S. D.

In consequence of the paragraph in last week's Truth intimating my intention to discuss this week the controversy over the removal of the Lifeboat Saturday Fund headquarters from Manchester to London, I received from Mr. Hinde, the Organising Secretary of the Fund, an offer to give me any information I might desire, which offer I, of course, at once accepted. As the result of this, I have heard pretty fully the official side of the question, and I have been enabled to see an advance proof of a pamphlet about to be issued setting forth that side of the case. The conclusion at which I arrive is that, in its present stage, the matter is not one calling for any lengthy notice in Truth. Briefly, the facts are these. Mr. Charles Macara, of Manchester, the founder and manager for many years of the Lifeboat Saturday movement, which has lately been bringing in over £20,000 per annum, has resigned his position as head of the organisation. Prior to his doing so, the headquarters of the movement were last year transferred to London, where they are now directly under the control of the National Lifeboat Institution. It has been lately alleged in Manchester, in public meetings and in the Press, that the result, as shown by the figures, has been an enormous increase in the working expenses, without any material addition to the gross returns—in other words, a large diminution of the net results; and at the same time it was suggested that Mr. Macara had been shabbily treated, and that the move to London was made in opposition to his wishes. The other side replied that Mr. Macara remained at his post till the end of 1895, and was responsible for everything done in that year, and, therefore, for the diminution of the net receipts. To this Mr. Macara retorted that he had desired to retire earlier, that he remained against his will, and that, though officially responsible for what was done, he exercised no real control or authority over the administration.

Now this question, so far as it relates to Mr. Macara's personal responsibility for the working of the Fund in 1895, is a purely personal one, which has no interest for me; nor, I imagine, for any one else, unless in Manchester, where Mr. Macara is well known. The question with which alone the public are concerned is whether the removal of the head-quarters to London has been prejudicial or otherwise to the interest of the Fund. This point is but lightly touched in the document that I have received from the Lifeboat Institution. I find there, however, an allegation that the figures put forward at Manchester by the critics of the new régime are garbled, and that a false impression has been created by bringing into the expenditure account for 1895 the whole outlay by the local committees, amounting to about £6,000. If it can be shown that this item was at the same time omitted from the corresponding account for 1894, with which comparison was made, then clearly the critics of the present management have mis-stated their case. Whether this can be shown, I am not at present aware. On the other hand, I have received from a Manchester correspondent the following comparison (in round figures) of the returns for the two years, which are given to me as compiled from the reports of the National Lifeboat Institution :—

Gross collection	£25,300	.....	£23,800
Expenses (local and paid by Institution)	7,000	.....	13,000
Net.....	£18,300	.....	£10,800

The words which I have italicised, "local and paid by Institution," imply that the expenditure of the local committees is included in both accounts. If so, the results of the change of administration have been startling and deplorable. It cannot be a matter of any difficulty for those who have the figures in their possession to show exactly and conclusively which way the truth lies; and I would suggest to the Lifeboat Institution that if they desire to convince the public, their simplest and wisest course is to set out a complete statement of the total receipts and expenditure, local and central, for the two years. Anything short of this will leave the most important issue in utter obscurity.

I turn now to the other matter affecting the Lifeboat Institution, which, as mentioned last week, I have lately had under consideration. It has reference to the charges made by the crews of the National Lifeboat Institution for services rendered in saving property at sea. A statement on this subject has recently been prepared at Lloyd's, which shows the payments made under this head in a very striking light, and which, unless refuted, is calculated to influence very considerably the attitude of the benevolent public towards the lifeboat service as at present conducted. The document gives particulars of a large number of cases of salvage of property by lifeboats during the year 1895. Here are some samples :—

1. A steamer goes ashore near Cullercoats. The sea is smooth and the wind light. A tug and the Cullercoats lifeboat come to her assistance. The lifeboat puts out a kedge and eighty fathoms of wire-rope. The vessel is got off in one hour. The lifeboat crew—apparently before they go to work at all—demand £50 for the kedge and £300 if they float the ship. To prevent legal proceedings and the arrest of the vessel, the steamer's agent gives a bond to the salvors, and settles for payment of £230 to the lifeboat and £400 to the tug. Lloyds pronounce that "under the circumstances of this case, £230 would certainly be enormous for such service as the lifeboat men rendered." Yet £350 was at first demanded.

2. A steamer is blown ashore during a snow squall on a level sandy beach on the Norfolk coast. The Winterton lifeboat comes off, and the coxswain endeavours to make an agreement with the Captain for £2,000 to get the ship afloat. The Captain demurs, but gets the lifeboat men to run out a kedge anchor to hold the ship in position. The coxswain talks in an alarming way about the ship being on a dangerous coast, and says that if the wind comes on badly from the N.E. he will not be able to come alongside; but, in point of fact, the wind dies away three hours after the ship runs aground, and there is no danger of any kind. The same night the lifeboat coxswain, on his own responsibility, sends a message to Yarmouth for tugs to come and help. Two tug-boats arrive next morning, and two others later on, and later in the day a second and larger lifeboat puts out. An hour before high tide an attempt is made by the two tugs to tow the ship off, but she is not moved. She is eventually towed off by four tugs, after three minutes' towing, about an hour before the next high tide. It is suggested that the first attempt was not a genuine one, one of the tugs insisting on towing at right angles to the other, and thereby breaking the hawser. The coxswain of the lifeboat had previously brought his men on board to discharge the coal from the bunkers, but the captain forbade them to do so. When the ship is got off, the lifeboat men insist that she shall proceed to Yarmouth, in order that they may make their claim and put a writ on the ship, and on the captain refusing, they become insolent, and only leave the ship on the captain threatening to carry them away to the Tyne, whither he is bound. When the ship starts, they contrive to surreptitiously leave one of their number on board "as a bailiff." A claim for salvage is made and settled out of Court for £2,050 to all the salvors, of which the lifeboats get £1,020. On behalf of the owners the suggestion made all through this case is that the lifeboat men were simply making work for themselves in order to bolster up a claim for salvage.

3. A sailing-ship strikes very slightly on Puffin Island. She floats off when the tide flows. The lifeboat comes off, and the crew stand by until she is floated, and give the captain some assistance in getting her into a place of safety. For this they demand £50. The owner offers them £6, or 10s. per head. They place the matter in the hands of their solicitors, and the owner eventually settles for £16.

4. A steamer grounds in Cardigan Bay. Two lifeboats come and render her assistance. She is got off without damage, and proceeds on her voyage. The lifeboat men demand £1,000 and place themselves in the hands of their solicitor. The owners consider £250 to be handsome payment, but, on an action being commenced, they pay £350 into court. The lifeboat men accept this on its being increased by a further £10 towards their costs.

5. A steamer carrying cargo and passengers gets ashore on the Goodwins. "Weather moderate." The Ramsgate and North Deal lifeboats come to her assistance, accompanied by three tugs. The passengers are landed, and the Ramsgate lifeboat subsequently makes a claim for £250, and the Deal lifeboat for £300. On the owners refusing to pay, writs are issued, the lifeboats withdraw their claims for life salvage, and the court awards each of them £80. It is alleged that the men of one of the lifeboats, after the passengers had been landed, gave the captain a lot of trouble; that when ordered off the ship on one side, they rowed round and boarded her again on the other, and that the captain had to threaten to throw them all into the sea before they left.

6. A steamer goes ashore on the Goodwins in a fog, and floats off at high water. Two lifeboats come off, and one of them puts out an anchor at the request of the captain. On floating, the steamer is seized for salvage services, and a claim made for £250. The owner states that "the underwriters paid £250 for absolutely nothing, to avoid litigation."

7. A sailing ship with a cargo valued at £280 strands on the Goodwins. The crew leave in their own boat. The Walmer lifeboat picks up the vessel and brings her into Ramsgate. The crew make a claim for £130 for salvage, which is settled for £100 and costs, taxed at £8. 8s. The owner states :—

The solicitor for the lifeboat crew would not say any amount that the lifeboat crew expected. I called on him myself, and could not get him to name a sum ; but the first thing he did was to issue a writ for salvage services rendered for ship and cargo. I then wrote a strong letter to the Secretary of the Lifeboat Institution complaining of the way they allowed the crews of their boats to fleece a poor unfortunate shipowner when he got into trouble. It was only then that they named a sum, namely, £130.

8. A sailing vessel comes to anchor in St. Tudwall's Roads during a gale, and, having lost her sails, puts up a signal for a tug. A lifeboat comes out and takes the crew off. Next morning, the gale having subsided, the same lifeboat puts the crew back again. The Captain remains ashore trying to make arrangements for towage. On returning to his ship he finds that one of the lifeboat men has remained on board under pretence of being ill, and that this man has been advising the mate to get up the anchors and put up signals of distress. On behalf of the lifeboat crew this man then makes a claim for salvage to the amount of £70. The owner refuses to give more than half, and tells them that he will let the law take its course. They eventually accept £35. This, it will be seen, is simply for taking the crew off a ship at anchor and putting them aboard again next morning.

9. A German ship gets ashore on the Knock in "tempestuous" weather. A Margate lifeboat comes off, and her crew give assistance in pumping and jettisoning the cargo. The vessel remains aground for four days, tugs not being able to get her off, and during this period the Walton lifeboat also comes up and gives some assistance in jettisoning and pumping for one day. Another Margate lifeboat also puts off and renders assistance in pumping, &c. After the ship is floated, the lifeboats make a claim for £3,000, the owners eventually settling with them for £2,200.

From facts such as the above—and, as I have said, they are only samples—one conclusion may be drawn with absolute certainty. It is that salvage money is a most important consideration to lifeboat crews, and that in making claims the lifeboat men are generally greedy, and occasionally not over-scrupulous. In nearly every one out of twenty-seven cases referred to in the Lloyd's statement the claims made by the lifeboat men are alleged to have been excessive; in many they are shown by the result to have been unjustifiable; and in several of the cases there are allegations of the men having resorted to improper practices in order to manufacture or magnify their claims, or to enforce such rights to pecuniary reward as they may legally have. The general effect of the evidence is to totally upset the popular conception of lifeboat men and their duty. Instead of bands of devoted heroes ready at every moment to risk their own lives for the good of their fellow-creatures in danger, we see here simply parties of enterprising mariners "on the make," who, whatever the risks of their calling, always keep an eye on the main chance. We all admit that the labourer is worthy of his hire, and when the calling is an exceptionally dangerous one the hire must be in proportion. Moreover, when the law clearly recognises the right of compensation for salvage services at sea, these services must be paid for on the legal scale, by whomsoever they are rendered. But if the chief aim, or one of the chief aims, of the lifeboat service is to earn salvage money, the disinterested heroism with which lifeboat men have hitherto been credited disappears altogether, and with it disappears the chief ground on which public sympathy and public support have hitherto been solicited. The risks which a lifeboat crew run become little more than the risks of a business in which the prizes are sometimes very big. On some portions of the coast, notably along the Downs and around the mouth of the Thames, a lifeboat man's calling ought to be, if one may judge by the scale of remuneration indicated in some of the above cases, an uncommonly profitable one; and to ask the public to subsidise it in the name of charity is more than unreasonable. When the public see a lifeboat crew making their claims to the amount of hundreds and thousands of pounds for attendance on a single ship in difficulties; at once placing themselves in the hands of a lawyer when their claims are questioned; and sometimes pocketing a sum of this magnitude in cases where there has never been a life in danger, either on the lifeboat or on the ship assisted—I question whether the public will open its purse in the lavish manner it hitherto has done for the support of the National Lifeboat Institution.

This is so certain that I am reluctant to lay over much stress upon the point. The Lifeboat Institution, whatever its faults, is undoubtedly a very valuable one, and no single lifeboat on our coasts could be withdrawn, without grave risk to human life in the neighbourhood. One is reluctant, therefore, to say anything that may tend to stop the flow of public contributions by which the lifeboats are at present maintained. But this consideration—a consideration, by the way, which the present managers have made the most of whenever they have incurred hostile criticism—cannot be allowed to permanently stand in the way of the reform of serious abuses. The above facts do point to very serious abuses, and if the Lifeboat Institution is not prepared to reform them, it will become the duty of the public, as represented by the Government, to reform the Lifeboat Institution. As a first step to such reform I would submit with confidence that lifeboat crews should be excluded from all direct interest in salvage money. The interest which they have at present places a most dangerous temptation in the way of men in needy circumstances. To a fisherman or a sailor in a little coast town, with his precarious livelihood, the prospect of earning a substantial share of £500 or £1,000 must necessarily be a great temptation. It may tempt him to chaffer and bargain at a time when prompt action is of vital importance. It may tempt him to take an unfair advantage of a ship in difficulties which is hardly distinguishable from blackmailing, or to resort to misrepresentation and other tricks such as are indicated in the facts cited above. We are not so far from the days when wreckers deliberately decoyed ships to their destruction that we can afford to take for granted that every sailor along the coast is an unselfish hero, or that the uglier phases of human nature are not to be found among the seafaring population, even those of them whose physical courage is beyond question. That bein so, the crews of lifeboats ought to be removed from all temptations to abuse their position. They should clearly understand that it is their duty to go off at any risk to themselves whenever a ship in distress requires their help, and they should be paid accordingly. Any salvage claims which may arise in respect of the services they render should be made by their employers, the National Lifeboat Institution, and the Institution alone should receive the money. The money so paid should go to the general funds of the Institution, and not into the pockets of the men engaged. It may be right and proper that the crews should receive special rewards when they have rendered specially valuable services, either in saving life or property; but these rewards should be given (as many are at present) by the Institution itself, and should be a matter of grace, not of right. Services precisely analogous to those rendered by lifeboat men at sea are rendered almost every day by firemen on shore, but I never yet heard of firemen being employed on such terms as seem to have commended themselves to the wisdom of the National Lifeboat Institution. What would be thought of a fire brigade, in which the men received no regular wages, but were sent out with a fire-engine and left to make what they could for themselves by means of a salvage claim out of any citizen whose house happened to be on fire? The mere suggestion of such an arrangement is preposterous, yet it practically describes the system at present in force in regard to the saving of life and property on our coasts. I am prepared to hear and give full publicity to anything which the Lifeboat Institution may have to say in answer to the facts stated by Lloyds; but I have a very strong opinion that, whatever answer may be given in regard to any specific allegation of extortion or misbehaviour, the public, when it understands what the system is, will peremptorily require that it shall be reformed.

THE RETURN OF ADA REHAN.

Ada Rehan, an artist incomparable in her line, is with us once more. She is to our stage the modern Peg Woffington, the up-to-date Mrs. Jordan. Nominally, of course, the delightful Ada Rehan is what is called an American actress; racially, of course, she is Irish, and with a full store of the delightful humour of her mother-country. She received on her reappearance the heartiest of welcomes, and she both looks and acts better than ever. English audiences show a very sincere admiration and regard for this charming comedy actress. She never fails to please. There is no nonsense about her. She does not indulge in the affectations of the popular actress. She always does her best. She never disappoints her audience. And she works as hard as Sarah Bernhardt, which is saying a good deal.

I have been at the trouble to obtain a few statistics on the subject of the touring capacity of a star actress, and no one who has not visited America and taken one of these sensation trips can conceive the fatigue and boredom that they involve. It is sometimes said that travelling in America is the best travelling in the world. I regret to say that is not my experience. The discomfort of American journeys, say from Chicago to San Francisco, is obvious. Even in what they call "a drawing-room" car, life is a sorry burden. In what they call "a section," it is intolerable, mainly from the difficulty of properly ventilating the cars and sections. Across the Alkali plains, if a window were opened the dust would blind the passengers or send them mad, so the consequences are obvious.

Theatrical touring on the great continent of America is on a stupendous scale in respect of the distances that have to be covered. Miss Ada Rehan who arrived in England in the very best of health, after the smoothest Atlantic passage she has ever experienced, has been away from London since September 14 last. In the ten months that have elapsed she has travelled 20,941 miles. As nearly six months out of the ten were spent in New York, while the towns visited on tour were in nearly every case big enough for at least a week's engagement the distance seems almost incredible. But this last tour of the Daly Company through the American provinces has been the widest which that organisation has ever undertaken. It has covered the ground from New York to San Francisco, from Montreal to New Orleans. One straight journey from New York to St. Louis was a run of 1,172 miles. After the company had finished in Omaha they had to travel 1,876 miles to get to San Francisco, where they next appeared. From Oakland, California, at the conclusion of one engagement they had a journey of 2,357 miles to fulfil their next one at Chicago. Altogether thirty-nine towns were visited, and of the journeys from one to another only five were of less than 100 miles, whilst trips of 400 to 500 miles were less the exception than the rule. But all this travel, diversified only by hard work, has stimulated rather than exhausted Ada Rehan's energies, and she has come back in better and more vigorous health than ever.

The penalty of Ada Rehan's success is that she has to play for everlasting the clever and fascinating widow eternally hoodwinking and checkmating the pursuing man. The Countess of Gucki is merely another version of the old pitched battle between a clever woman and an irrepressible man. The only difference between this play and countless others which were acted to perfection by Ada Rehan and John Drew is that Ada Rehan is dressed in the costume of the early nineteenth century, that she is not an American girl but a German countess, and that, alas! there is no John Drew by her side. Mr. Charles Richman is all very well as what the ladies call a "fine figure of a man;" but as yet he is rather a wooden actor. He makes the pie-crust of comedy with a heavy hand. What our grandmothers called "short crust" cannot as yet come out of his oven. The consequence is that whenever Ada Rehan plumes her feathers and wants to soar she is pulled back. Some one is always clinging to the "guide ropes" of this captivating balloon. In the one pathetic scene in the play a Mr. Edwin Stevens pulls her back; in the one strong comedy scene Mr. Charles Richman reins her up. But for all that it is a delightful performance, and if we cannot be treated this time to Shakespeare or Sheridan we must put up with the Countess of Gucki and Love on Crutches, and such like gentle and inoffensive alterations from, and improvements on, the German text. The great thing is that we have secured Ada Rehan for a few weeks, and when she is in England the sun shines on the theatre she elects to honour. This time it is the Comedy. She brings back with her those kindly souls of comedy, James Lewis and Mrs. Gilbert, ever content to take bad parts and play them uncommonly well. There are no airs and graces in Mr. Daly's company. They are all a happy family, and have a sincere respect for "the governor," as they call him, a governor who is one of the very best stage managers and stage instructors of his time. Being successful, he is necessarily a target for the jealous and envious. This is the way of the world. They twit and taunt him with knowing nothing about Shakespeare, and with vandalism and heaven knows what, when, as all the world knows, he is an accomplished Shakespearean scholar and the possessor of one of the most valuable Shakespearean and dramatic libraries in existence.

Mr. Augustin Daly has done for the stage in America the same kind of good and true work that Sir Henry Irving has done for the stage in England. He has elevated its tone whenever possible, and been responsible for no unworthy work at all. If occasionally the American public demands a Countess Gucki instead of a Katharine, and a Railroad of Love instead of a Viola, it is not more surprising that a Lyceum audience should occasionally ask for a Duboscque instead of a King Lear, or a Jeremy Diddler or Jingle or Robert Macaire instead of a Becket or King Arthur. No great harm is done any way.

At this time of the year London is full of visitors from America. Every bed has been taken at the hotels around Charing Cross, the summer coaches are well patronised, and silent little Stratford-on-Avon echoes to the tramp of many enthusiastic pilgrims. This being the case, it is natural that the most gifted of American artists, or the most ambitious, should desire to try their luck at the English theatres. The Yale crew was seen at Henley, so why should not a pretty and intelligent little actress invite her friends, English and American, to an "At Home" at the Comedy Theatre? The new candidate for histrionic honours is Miss Elizabeth Tyree, a pretty, sweet-voiced and clever young actress. She has been a member of Mr. Frohman's company in New York for some time, and has made her mark in light comedy parts, notably as one of the girls in "The Amazons." But she had ambitions to do something better than girl-boys in clever farces. So she said to herself she would try the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," and the great love scene from "La Tosca," and the letter-writing scene from "The Country Girl," thus giving a kind of tutti frutti of passion, tragedy, and comedy. She was well advised to do so, for she has talent considerably above the average. It is no easy thing suddenly to plunge into the whirlpool of such a play as "La Tosca;" but Miss Elizabeth Tyree did it. I always know when the accent of passion is true, because I feel a cold shiver down the back. Certain actresses I could mention would never give me the cold shiver if they acted for a thousand years. But Miss Tyree "did it in once" as the slang phrase has it. All that she has to do now is to forget that she has ever been taught. Her method is all right, but now she must act and think for herself. She is out of leading strings, the master has gone and she must boldly swim to the shore. This charming lady was ably assisted in all her scenes by Mr. Will Dennis, a versatile young actor. Parts of his Loris Ipanoff, notably a pathetic touch in it of an unnerved and despairing man, were admirable.

That too many cooks do not always spoil the broth is shown in "On the March." It has taken no less than six clever men, three authors and poets, and three musicians to make this appetising soup, and I assure you it is not at all bad. The story is fairly amusing, the music is gay, the girls are pretty and attractive, and taken altogether a very pleasant evening can be spent at the Prince of Wales's Theatre now that it has been temporarily taken in hand by that clever woman of business, Miss Cissy Grahame. But there is one very special attraction in this play, and that is a new and most amusing actor, Mr. Thomas E. Murray. Those who do not at once make the acquaintance of Mr. Fitzallerton Scroggs, the theatrical manager, wilfully miss a great treat. He is not one of your roaring, ranting, bouncing, and blatant low comedians, who make your head ache and your ears split. The essence of Mr. Murray's fun is extreme quietude. In manner he is modest and deprecating, and he has a trick of laughing at his own admirable jokes, literally laughing in his sleeve like a modest and coy maiden blushing behind her fan. I am told that all Mr. Murray's "business," as it is called in the profession, is his own, and I can well believe it, for the man in face and style is a born humourist. He has one bit of business with an excited siphon which is the funniest thing conceivable. The actor pretends to be a man who has seen a soda-water siphon for the first time, and is examining it curiously as a monkey would a loaded revolver. The fun extracted from this little joke is immense. I am told that it has been done before. Very likely, what do I care? I for one have never seen it before, and why should I be cheated out of my honest laugh, I should like to know? Things done before should often be done again—if they are good. But Mr. Thomas Murray is an original humourist, and that is a very rare thing. Among the other attractions in this bright and merry entertainment are Miss Alice Atherton, Mr. Templar Saxe, and Mr. Charles Brookfield, who, in an intense love scene, causes roars of laughter. When the children hear a story that delights them, before the last words are out of the reciter's mouth they say in chorus, "Tell it us all over again." And there are some plays of which we say when we rise from our seats, "I should like to see this again to-morrow." I think "On the March" is one of these plays.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE BONAPARTE LIBRARY.

I SEE that a number of necessarily ignorant persons are making a fuss about the Basque MSS. of the late Prince Lucien Bonaparte. Prince Lucien was not the philologist they imagine. Few persons who are not born Basques know the Basque language, which has no affinity, beyond that of human origin, with any other. Prince Bonaparte, a Basque tells me, learned it from his washer-woman near St. Jean de Luz, and never went much deeper than what she could teach him. He was fortunate enough to get a heavy Civil List pension from the Queen for translating his experiences into the Basque tongue, giving it the name of the "Song of Solomon," and keeping as close as he could to the text of that poem. The Prince had a taste for book-collecting, and went in for those written in "dialects." He was not much deeper—or perhaps so deep—in Italian, Spanish, and English dialects as he was in the Basque. An English laundress would not probably teach as clearly as a Biscayen. The Basque from whom I derive some of my facts says that the Prince was in England and France as the blind leading the blind, when he got upon the Basque tongue and anthology. His Florentine wife, the once beautiful Marianna Ceccaldi, with whom he did not live, would have known more of Corsican dialects. His visits to Corsica were few and far between. She lived there from the uprise of the Second Empire to the date of her death, a few years ago, at the age of eighty-three. The Emperor made her guardian of the house at Ajaccio where Napoleon was born, and of the Napoleonic Museum there. As this house was family property, the Empress was able to confirm her tenure of office. Since 1870 Princess Lucien entirely lived on fees paid by visitors, the husband declining to let her share his fat Civil List allowance. I forget the exact figure of his pension, but it was certainly a substantial sum. What Prime Minister granted it I know not, but I do not hesitate to say that it reflected no credit on him. The Prince was a faux savant, and a mere smatterer. Those who are interested in getting off his library well speak of the Corporation of the City of London as having promised, should a large enough fund to buy it be raised, to accept it as a gift, and add it to the Guildhall Library. I dare say that the promoters of the fund, who still require £2,500, and the Corporation are actuated by the best motives. But what do Aldermen and Common Councilmen know of dialects, and especially of the Basque dialect? I should as soon think of asking them to shed light on cuneiform inscriptions as to give an opinion on the merits or otherwise the Bonaparte Library. Should the Corporation wish for a Basque expertise, I might enable them to secure a reliable one. In the event of the fund that is being collected falling short of the £2,500 still wanted, I learn that the Bonaparte Library is to be sold and dispersed. This seems to me like the carte forcée. Should a sale take place, it must be, we are told, in mid-August—when every one is out of town. Why then? The promoters of the subscription want all the money before mid-July. I do not question the assertion that the books catalogued in a hand list that fills 718 quarto pages are bound sumptuously and are the best editions. But I should like to know what authorities vouch for the value of the MSS. and works in dialects. It does not surprise me that Prince Bonaparte did not in his life-time bring this marvellous collection to the hammer to enable himself to abandon to distressed British authors or their widows, daughters, and sisters the fat slice given him of the Civil List fund. While he was collecting sumptuously bound volumes, William Carleton's daughters were in utter poverty. The late William Bonaparte Wyse was far more learned in dialects than Prince Lucien Bonaparte. But he was unassuming, thoroughly honourable, and died almost unknown to the British public.

The Auto-Mobile Club has fixed its local habitation in the flat in the Place de l'Opéra, where the Washington Club earned the name of Monaco Junior. But there is no gambling at the Auto-Mobile, though I hear that some members wish le petit jeu to be authorised as a pastime. It is hard to think how a Parisian club can get on without it and keep a first-rate chef. The Washington Club paid a rent of £3,000 for the same flat. Baron van Zuylin, husband of the greatest of the Rothschild heiresses, is President of the Committee. Comte de Dion got up the Club. Attractions are offered to men of fortune, in or out of business, who are also men of scientific attainments. The sons of the late M. Emile Menier, of Noisiel and the Parc Monceau, may be regarded as typical members. They go in for trade on a vast scale, as their father did, and for science and sport of a no ordinary kind. Henri, the eldest, has purchased an island, larger than the Isle of Wight, in the mouth of the St. Lawrence, which he intends to develop as a preserving ground for the beaver and all sorts of game which Americans and Canadians are clearing off. In the term "game" he includes the buffalo. The fisheries, coast, and river are splendidly stocked. The owner of this happy hunting ground hopes to introduce European and Californian trout and salmon trout. He will have motor carriages for winter use, there being as yet no hard roads unless on the ice. M. Gaston Menier, who has become a gutta-percha as well as a chocolate king, seems bent on aiding the development of motor carriages and tricycles. He takes an active interest in the Club. A committee rule suggestive of Parisian discrétion should be mentioned. All letters to members are placed, the moment they are delivered, in club envelopes and re-directed. They are then set in the letter-rack. No tell-tale handwriting can then lead to a Comedy of Errors. Theatrephones enable members to listen to theatrical performances. One who often uses them assures me that they are not wholly satisfactory. The eye is filled at the Opera House while the ear is charmed. An imaginative person would easily fill in what passes on the stage. But the effect of business habits is to make one unimaginative. My friend has hit on a plan for keeping the brain busy while the ear listens. It is to read the score while listening. He is surprised to find what progress his musical education has made in consequence. The summer chalet of the Club is in the Bois de Boulogne, where formerly the Pré Catelan was. There are three tennis courts in beautifully-kept grounds, reading-rooms, a skilled chef and dining arrangements that might restore appetite to a surfeited alderman. The Auto-Mobile is not a cock-and-hen club, but members can take their wives and mothers to lunch, dine, and play lawn-tennis at the chalet. These ladies can personally conduct other ladies. The grounds are thus often the scene of informal garden-party gatherings.

The Duc Pomar has lately had eighteen offers of marriage from mothers and grandmothers on behalf of daughters and grand-daughters. A nineteenth offer came from an accomplished widow on her own behalf. It has been accepted, as the Duc Pomar only wants a guardian angel to replace his mother, the late Countess of Caithness.

Some time ago a lady living in South Wales wrote to me about a cycling costume that might be turned at will from an ordinary skirt into zouave trousers. The head of the tailoring department at the Bon Marché did not recommend it. But since I spoke to him on the subject I find that this convertible dress has been a good deal taken up by La Belle Jardinière, La Samaritaine, and La Place de Clichy. They advertise it under the name of La Mexicaine, the price varying from 35 fr. to 50 fr. I inquired the price of one of those costumes of a lady's tailor in the Boulevard Malesherbes. He set it down at £10, but called attention to the high finish, elegant waist, band-linings, and so on. I do not suppose that it can really matter whether these linings are satin, unmixed with cotton, or satin with a cotton wrong side. The garments at the Universal Providers I speak of are really well finished, and, it seems to me, well contrived. At the same time, I should, were I a cyclist, prefer knickerbockers such as are made by ladies' tailors here. They are now sometimes worn in the streets without the cycle, to explain their use. Nobody notices them. I have seen them in omnibuses. I dare say the British Mrs. Grundy would declare them "disgusting." She took that course when ladies used first to climb to the tops of omnibuses. What is really decent on the cycle is what conduces to speed and safety. I have just returned here from a few days' visit to England. I thought the jogging skirts of lady cyclists horrid. The idea of sex was thrust on one's notice by the awkwardness the skirts induced, and the accentuation they gave to points that showed deference for Mrs. Grundy. The French girl, who, to do her justice, is not always thrusting forward the idea of sex, and is not a bit self-conscious on her cycle, wears the knickerbockers with a jaunty grace that is charming. We shall soon have motor tricycles in common use. I expect that they will bring about a general change in ladies' costumes. The motor tricycle subject to this change will be for the elderly as much as for the youthful. It will have the advantage over the cycle of not slipping on "greasy" asphalte or wood paving. By the way, the liability of the cycle to "slip" makes the skirt in use in England most dangerous. The one course by which one can escape from a bad fall when one feels the bike slipping is to get off at once. This is quite easy with the knickers, but not so with the skirt.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE following paragraph, dear Lady Betty, recently appeared in a provincial paper :—

"It is reported in official and well-informed circles that Lord Salisbury has spoken with much severity to Mr. Arthur Balfour with regard to the mismanagement of business in the House of Commons. That the latter is to blame in the matter is generally admitted."

. . . . .

Fortunately, by means of a concealed phonograph, I have been able to secure one of these Cabinet Caudle Lectures :—

"Perhaps, Mr. Balfour, you'll tell me where this is to end? Though, goodness knows, I needn't ask that. The end is plain enough: out—out—out! And I'm not talking of what's impossible. I know it will all happen—every bit of it. You don't see what's wrong? No—I dare say not, but I see it; I see a great many things you don't. What do you say? Only lost a trumpery vote or two? Ha! I hope you'll never come to want the votes you talk so lightly of now. I'm sure I don't know who'd be a Premier! What am I grumbling about now? It's very well for you to ask that! It isn't often I open my mouth, Heaven knows! But you like to hear nobody talk but yourself. Do you know what it costs to obtain majorities; or do you think they fly in at the window? Majorities, indeed! Do you suppose I'm made of majorities?

"Pray, Mr. Balfour—no, it's no use your saying fine words to me to let you alone; I shan't!—pray, do you know the price of votes just now? There's scarcely a vote to be had in the House for less than a Peerage. You wish you were out of office? Oh, yes, that's all very well. I'm sure I might wish it, too. Don't swing your leg about in that way. That will do no good. That won't bring back the lost votes, the lost time, the lost Bills, and the lost popularity. Everybody but you can see how the Party is breaking up. If the Government is upset the failure will be upon your head. But then, sir, then you'll be happy. Oh, don't tell me! I know you will. I've made up my mind to be turned out of office.

"What are you going to do? Going to resign? Don't make yourself ridiculous, Balfour! I can't say a word to you like any other Premier, but you threaten to resign. That's so like you; you'd trample everybody under foot, if you could—you know you would, Balfour, so don't deny it. But you are so hasty. I wish people knew you as I do, that's all. You like to be called strong—and your Party pays for it. But what's that to you? I'm sure I do nothing but scheme and think how to make the most of everything; and this is how I'm rewarded."

The phonograph being necessarily a very small one, the conclusion of the Cabinet Caudle Lecture is not recorded upon the instrument.

The following telegrams from Rhodesia appear to have been suppressed :—

"Encountered the enemy yesterday; killed several hundred natives. Our own loss severe. Rhodes behaved splendidly, rode about with a switch."

"Desperate engagement with the Matabele. Rhodes could with difficulty restrain his ardour. He had sandwiches for luncheon."

"Matabele routed with great loss. Several of our men killed. Rhodes wore a straw hat. Massacred a whole impi. Terrible slaughter. Rhodes remarked that bullets were more effective at 300 yards than assegais."

But why so much about Mr. Cecil Rhodes? Can there be a purpose in pushing his name forward whenever an opportunity occurs for doing so, and who is responsible for the wording of the telegraph messages?

Lord Salisbury has decided to appoint Sir Edmund Monson, at present British Ambassador at Vienna, to succeed Lord Dufferin as British Ambassador in Paris. This decision is a very proper one, for the appointment is not handed over to some individual outside the Service who has had no experience of diplomacy. Moreover, it does not interfere with the promotion of the members of the Diplomatic Service.

Sir Edmund Monson is not a rich man, and he is not a Peer, two circumstances which must militate against him in Paris. All the British Ambassadors in Paris for a period extending considerably over a quarter of a century have been Peers, to wit, mentioning only a few of them, Lord Normanby, Lord Cowley, Lord Lyons, Lord Lytton, and Lord Dufferin. Sir Charles Stuart, the father of Lady Waterford and of Lady Canning, was the last British Ambassador in Paris who held that position without possessing a Peerage. The matter of fortune is, however, a more serious one, for the entertainments to be given and the magnificence to be maintained require the expenditure of large sums of money. Sir Edmund, however, will enter upon his new duties at the head of the most important Embassy in the Service with the good wishes of all his colleagues, and with the knowledge that all of them rejoice that the appointment has been conferred upon him instead of its having, to their general prejudice, been handed over to a political supporter of the Government.

Sir Augustus Paget, who died last week when upon a visit to Lord Salisbury at Hatfield, was a fine example of the diplomatist of the old school, a man much after the style of Lord Blomfield. He belonged to the type of English gentleman which is almost extinct, and it is needless to say that he was popular at every post to which he was appointed, and with every one who served under him. Brilliant diplomatists are very dangerous people. It is their duty to win victories unnoticed. They are polished pickpockets who, for the good of their country, unobtrusively extract whatever valuables they can from the country to which they are accredited.

Both in Arlington-street and at Foot's Cray the late Sir John Pender had brought together a number of fine pictures, and these are to be sold. The sale will take place next spring, and will probably be held at Christie & Manson's.

The following letter has been addressed to me:—

"You frequently allude in your columns to the advantages London has, which if properly cultivated should enable the authorities to make it one of the most beautiful cities in Europe. May I call your attention, therefore, to the scandalously hideous wall which separates Devonshire House from Piccadilly? The general impression produced by this upon visitors who are not well acquainted with London is that Devonshire House is a gaol. The Duke of Devonshire is an immensely rich man, and it is certain that he could well afford to erect a handsome iron railing to replace the hideous wall which disfigures so considerable a portion of Piccadilly. Without mentioning my name to the public you will, upon looking at my card which I enclose, support my statement that I have spent a considerable sum in improving the appearance of the property which I have in London. If I can afford to do this, so can the Duke of Devonshire. I looked upon it more or less as a duty to do what I could in this direction, and it appears to me that it is the duty of the Duke to remove the wall which so seriously disfigures the appearance of the principal thoroughfare of London, and, indeed, of the world. Of course, your contention that flower beds should be made in the Green Park along Piccadilly is correct, and this improvement will probably be carried out next spring.

"A Large London Landlord."

The following incident is typical of West-end life to-day:—

Overheard at a recent ball:

Lady A. to Lady B.: "My dear, how could you go down to supper with that man?"

"That man" was their host!

He sends me the story!—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

A MEETING of the Jockey Club is to be held at Newmarket this afternoon, at which the question of the £10,000 stakes will probably be discussed. The Stewards have the choice of "three courses," as Sir Robert Peel would have put it. They can continue the Stakes as they are, or reduce their value, or give them up altogether. The Princess of Wales's Stakes was first run in 1894, when the owners' subscription was so large that there was a surplus for the winner of £1,916, so the race cost the fund nothing. Last year, however, there was a deficit of £1,662, and this season the fund has been obliged to contribute £1,994, which makes the Princess of Wales's Stakes far and away the most expensive event in all the Newmarket programmes. The Jockey Club Stakes commenced well in 1894 with a surplus of £2,312, but last year £1,277 had to be made up out of the fund, and this season's race will probably be even more costly. It seems to me that the Stewards might continue the Princess of Wales's Stakes, but that the Jockey Club Stakes might be advantageously converted into a two-year-old race of £5,000, on the same lines as the National Breeders' Produce Stakes at Sandown Park. The fact is that the interest of any weight-for-age race for three-year-olds and upwards, which is run in October, must have been thoroughly discounted at Doncaster, and in 1894 the Jockey Club Stakes was manifestly a mere question of health for Isinglass, while last year it appeared to be an equally good thing for Laveno, and this season the Leger running is tolerably certain to indicate the winner at Newmarket.

Very little of the racing at Stockbridge was of any general interest. That Laodamia could win the Cup, if well, was, of course, perfectly apparent, but few people expected to see her "slipped" for an event of this kind, it being generally expected that one of the autumn handicaps would be her "journey," and the eager public had already backed her freely for the Cambridgeshire. The meeting of Omladina and Laodamia would have been a good test of their respective speed, but the Duke of Westminster's filly has been doing no work since Ascot. The defeat of Minstrel in the Hurstbourne Stakes was the sensation of the week, and I fear that the Duke of Devonshire's colt will prove a disappointing beast to his owner, and although excuses were made for his somewhat slovenly finish when he won at Newmarket, there were none for him last week, when he appeared to be quite resolved not to exert himself to any undue extent. I fancy that Minstrel is a colt that will require to have it all his own way when he wins a race, for he evidently has no appetite for a ding-dong finish, and he seemed to collapse in an instant at Stockbridge directly he felt the weight tell at the ascent to the winning-post. I hear that he is now to be reserved for the Astley Stakes at Lewes. Galtee More, the winner of the Hurstbourne Stakes, is an Irish-bred colt, and he is a great credit to Kendal. He ought to be worth following at Goodwood, where he is engaged in the Halnaker Stakes, the Findon Stakes, and the Holcomb Stakes. The colt represents through his dam one of the late Mr. Merry's best strains of blood. Monterey appears to be one of the failures of the summer, to judge from his running last week. There was a prodigious trumpeting about the colt a couple of months ago. After the Hurstbourne it is probable that the best two-year-old which ran at Stockbridge was Brooch, who won the Troy Stakes for the Duke of Westminster, whose colours will be well worth following during the remainder of the season. Brooch is a charming filly, by Blue Green out of Ornament, and her next race will be at Lewes.

Excellent entries have been obtained for the various events at Goodwood, which closed last week. Rampion is in two of the handicaps. Thirty-seven two-year-olds have been entered for the Halnaker Stakes, a race which is limited to maidens at the time of naming. It will take a smart one to stop Galtee More, who has only 7 lb. extra to carry for winning the Hurstbourne Stakes. On Tuesday next entries close for next year's Richmond Stakes and for the Sussex Stakes in 1898, £500 being added to each race, and an owner can "get out" for £3 by declaring forfeit in March, 1897.

Sixty-two animals are left in for the £5,000 race at Sandown Park on Saturday, and I shall plump for the Duke of Westminster's dark filly, Simoon, by St. Simon out of Shotover, whose great promise was notified in Truth several months ago.

As to the Eclipse Stakes, there seems to be a considerable disposition to fancy Regret, but I do not see how the Kingsclere colt can be confidently expected to defeat St. Frusquin after the Newmarket running, as Mr. de Rothschild's steed meets him on only 1 lb. worse terms than in the Princess of Wales's Stakes, when he beat him by a length. It is, however, no "certainty" for St. Frusquin, as Regret may very likely have been benefited by his race at Newmarket, in which case he would have "come on" during the intervening fortnight. Troon also will be more forward in condition than when he ran at Newmarket.

I see it is stated that the Duke of Westminster's colt Orelio (own brother of Ormonde) will be tried next week, as he is to meet "his Goodwood engagement." Orelio will not be tried until the beginning of October, as the Duke intends the colt to make his début in the Middle Park Plate. Orelio has no engagement either at Goodwood or at Doncaster.

The Duke of Westminster's filly, Blue Water, who was the principal two-year-old run at Hurst Park, will have a good chance of carrying off the Great Kingston Plate of £500 at Sandown Park on Friday, as she has made considerable improvement since her début last month, when Canonbury gave her 15 lb. and a beating. Blue Water is the first of the stock of Blue Green, and is half-sister to Rampion, who is a son of Amphion. The yearling relative at Eaton is a colt by St. Serf, which has been named Lomond, and Rydal's foal is by Amphion, and therefore own brother to Rampion, who will be seen winning a good handicap over six furlongs or a mile before many weeks have passed. Rampion will probably carry off the £1,000 three-year-old stake at the Derby September Meeting.

I hear that Florizel II. ran his last race at Ascot, and he will probably be sold to go abroad. The price mentioned at Ascot as having been refused for him was wildly extravagant, being at least three times the intrinsic value of the horse, as would have been generally pointed out if he belonged to a Mr. Smith or a Mr. Jones. Florizel II. won several important races last year, but he was remarkably well in for all the handicaps which he carried off, and in the weight-for-age events he really had nothing to beat.

Tuesday next is one of the great nomination days of the year, on which will close the Derby and Oaks for 1898. It is to be regretted that the Stewards of the Jockey Club do not insist upon the Epsom authorities postponing the entries for these stakes until the Tuesday after Doncaster, when the St. Leger and the Grand Prix close and name. It would be far more convenient and satisfactory to owners for all these events to close at the same time, and there would be a great and obvious advantage in putting off the nomination-day for the Derby and the Oaks until the yearling sales of the season have concluded. The Coronation Stakes at Ascot, and the St. James's Palace Stakes (1898), close on Tuesday. The conditions of both events ought to be revised and in each case the added money should have been increased from £300 to £500. It is preposterous to give only £300 to a stake in which the sweepstakes is £100 each, half forfeit. No fewer than thirteen events at Newmarket close on Tuesday, including next year's July Stakes and Chesterfield Stakes. The continued success of these two races is really a miracle, for not a copper is even nominally added. The owners race for their own sweepstakes alone, and the liability on each entry is £30 in the July and £20 in the Chesterfield. The Hastings Plate of £500 closes on Tuesday, and I shall be surprised if this event obtains the forty entries which are required in order to fill it, for the conditions are idiotic. Why not make this event a stake of £500, entrance £5, the only forfeit if declared by the last Tuesday in October, 1897, and a sweepstakes of £25 each for every horse left in after that date?

It is refreshing to turn to the far more attractive conditions of the great races at Sandown Park (1899) which close on Tuesday, the 28th. These are the Eclipse Stakes of £10,000, for now foals and yearlings; and the National Breeders' Produce Stakes of £5,000, for mares now in foal.

Mr. Brassey is having Pride prepared to run for the Goodwood Cup, and this much-improved horse must have an excellent chance of winning that event if he can beat Count Schomberg, who will have a considerable advantage in the weights. The conditions, so far as the penalties and allowances are concerned, require careful revision, for at present they are most foolish, absurd, and unfair.

There will be a real plethora of racing next week, what with the Liverpool, Gatwick, Leicester, Huntingdon, and Newton meetings all being crammed into six days.

Lord Derby intends to run Canterbury Pilgrim for the Liverpool Cup, and whatever beats her will win. I shall have another opportunity of referring to this race next week. Contract would win this handicap on her best form, but it is doubtful whether Mr. Barnato's horse will get through a thorough preparation. The St. George's Stakes of £2,500 looks well for Regret or Labrador, in the certain absence of St. Frusquin. The Great Lancashire Breeders' Produce Stakes of £2,500 should be won by that unlucky colt, Glencally, if he can beat Alfar, who runs at Sandown Park on Saturday. Shaddock cannot well lose the Knowsley Dinner Stakes of £600.

Never was there a more successful Henley, and it must candidly be confessed that those who have been opposed to foreigners rowing there have been in the wrong on this occasion. The regatta passed off without any unpleasantness whatever, and my rowing correspondent is ready to admit that his old antagonist, "The Tideway Veteran," was quite right in the optimistic views he took as to what this year's Henley would be. This result was in a great measure due to the conduct of Yale. When their coxswain was ill in practice a First Trinity man steered them. They had dusts up with College crews. They kept their boats with the other club boats. In fact, before the regatta began they were no longer strangers but friends. They had no chance of winning the Grand. This they recognised before they started, and they had bad luck in drawing Leander in the first heat. As to the race itself, after half way they were a beaten crew, but they rowed a much longer stroke than they had been used to, and they did not get bustled and lose their form. They are the first American crew that has ever finished a course in this country. The wild scenes of excitement at the finish are certainly overdrawn. There was nothing like the cheering that greeted Eton when they beat Jesus. The fact was, people had learned to respect the visitors, and did not feel it decent to indulge in wild ecstasies of delight because a certainty had come off. No doubt the Yale men have learned a lesson from English rowing, and the next crew Yale sends will really need beating. Sensible Americans do not come here with their eyes shut, and, in the meantime, Harvard will not have a pleasant time if they row Yale again. The Yale visit has done a lot of good. The better side of American sport has been shown to us, and a hearty welcome will greet the next genuine University crew that visits these shores.

If the Americans had only won a heat they would, no doubt, have received the same enthusiastic greeting that the French crew did over their successes in the Thames Cup. They had a good style, but they needed more practice and training. But what a sorry display the Trinity College (Dublin) crew made! It is immaterial whether they belonged to the Rowing Club or the Boat Club. They did not pull their weight, they were short and bucketed. They would have disgraced a second division in the Lents or Mays, and as such they could only discredit their University. Swann, who last rowed at Henley for the Hall in the winning Grand crew in 1886, after six years as a missionary in Japan, sculled splendidly against Vivian Nickalls, and hunted the latter right to the finish in most plucky style. It was the best race of the day, except the good fight of the Caius four, who were the only ones to give London any trouble in the Stewards. Caius well deserved their win in the Visitors' Cup. They showed their victory in the University fours was no fluke, and after the wretched display of the Hall men with five blues against New in the Grand, it is a greater mystery than ever why only one Caius man rowed at Putney this year. The Magdalen four, too, was above the average. During the last two days the wind favoured the Bucks station, and New had decidedly bad luck. To lose the Grand two years running by only half a length, with the worst station each time, is a misfortune in which any college may take an honest pride. It was a great race, and those who thought that Whitworth ought not to have started at the pace he did have to meet the fact that at the finish his men were gaining again. The Ladies' Plate was very interesting owing to the good form the schools showed against the colleges. Bedford hunted Balliol the whole way, and Radley were a heavy, powerful lot, but lacked the reach and length of Eton, a strong and pretty crew without any very heavy men. Their victory was very popular. Ward backed up his stroke, who never got flurried, admirably, and he will be an invaluable help to Cambridge. He is going to "Third," and he looks like being the best seven since Maugham rowed. Emmanuel were rather lucky in winning the Thames Cup; but what they wanted in style they had in strength. The result of the Wyfolds was rather a surprise, and probably London would have won had the conditions of station been anything like equal; as it was, Trinity (Oxford) just got home. In the sculls, Vivian Nickalls was fairly beaten by the holder, who seemed to row as easily as ever; but Guinness had even a greater struggle in the final with Beaumont, a very much improved sculler with a pretty style. He had previously beaten McDowell easily. The American beat young Guinness, but a fair American did not think much of his performance, for she said of the loser, "He is but a child." This is true; but with a little more stamina he will be a very hard child to tackle. Rumour has it that one or both brothers are going to Cambridge. They will be successors to the Nickalls, who had practically a walk-over for the Goblets.

Although the Gentlemen had a comparatively weak team at the Oval, they thoroughly deserved their narrow victory over the Players. The Champion, who carried his bat all through the second innings, looked as pleased as a baby when Lewis made the winning hit. Bull's bowling would have given him a place in the Lord's team, but Essex needed him. Young Townsend, with his long reach, got over the Players' bowling well, and he followed this up by some useful bowling for his county against Warwick, who scored a rather easy victory owing to some free and lucky batting by Quaife and Bainbridge. In both these matches Board, the Gloucestershire wicket-keeper, distinguished himself. At the Oval he stood up to Richardson's fastest balls, and made several catches at the wicket, and in the county match he scored a century. The most extraordinary cricket was at the Oval between Surrey and Sussex. On a good wicket both teams failed, Hartley's slows bothering the Surrey men, who, however, found the Sussex bowling so weak that they had to lose five wickets "run out." Killick, the Horsham colt, batted admirably, and Brockwell, Read, and Lohmann saved Surrey from a bad beating, miserable fielding helping the score as well. Yorkshire's victorious career was stopped by Notts in spite of some plucky batting by Jackson and Brown.

Both the Australians and Somerset had a very merry time against Hampshire, Palairet especially making a huge score. The Hants men are certainly down on their luck. They need good bowlers badly. The Colonials have not done anything more brilliant than their victory over the Players at Leyton. Iredale, since he was left out of the test match at Lord's, has been showing excellent form with the bat, even if his play is rather slow. Having regard to the big scores he has been making lately, and his good batting in this match when nearly all the others failed miserably, Storer, the Derby wicket-keeper, has very great claims on the Selection Committee for the English team.

Eton and Harrow saw the usual crowd. At the present time one does not go to the match to pick the majority of 'Varsity players for future years. Other schools, even the country grammar school, under the present system may turn out its Blues. At the same time a few of the players in this great society game are bound to come on. After their failure against Winchester, Eton showed great improvement. Bosanquet quite justified the opinion I then formed of his batting. He is not pretty, but he can make runs. Pilkington is much more stylish, and Mitchell's lobs bothered the Harrow boys, who did not show up well at first. Dowson, the phenomenal slow bowler of last year, has grown a good deal, and he has lost none of the chances of success he then showed. I hear that he has not been allowed to over-bowl himself; a very wise precaution in the case of a youngster who also shows promise with the bat. Good batting by Vibart, Wyld, Rattigan, and Studd made the game a draw.

It is a pity there are not a few more county athletic championships like those of Essex, which took place before a large crowd at Chelmsford. The sport was not of a high class, but then local interest is excited, which is a great thing. The Association of Conservative Clubs met at Stamford Bridge, but the spectators were not present in numbers. Amongst the competitors were Ovenden and Wilkins. The mixing of politics and sport is not very desirable. But if this meeting is to be held again, I would suggest a bicycle race for Tory M.P.s. It would be interesting and instructive, and might draw a few opposition spectators. Tyers has again the swimming record for the mile in the championship at Walsall.

In an interesting professional golf tournament at Neasden Taylor was easily first, although the greens were fast. Vardon, the champion, was only fifth. Taylor is playing a great game now, and it looks as though he had done too much just about the time of the championship.

The weather was not steady for last week's racing on the Clyde. For the Queen's Cup at Rothesay there was very still weather, and Britannia and Ailsa despite the improved form they have been showing, were not in it with the Meteor, which left the others standing as the breeze freshened. By the way, there is as much growling over the new rating rule as over the old. This one unduly favours large canvas spreads.

It was a great disappointment to see little Harding beaten by Stanbury in the sculling championship; but 3 st. is a lot to give away over such a course as that between Putney and Mortlake. At the same time, while it would have been pleasant if an Englishman had won, the Australian well deserves his victory. His efforts to get into condition were very severe.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Great lassitude has again characterised the Stock Markets during the past week. Apart from the holiday influences in connection with the Henley Regatta, there has been an uneasy feeling with reference to the unfortunate position in Rhodesia; while the triumph of the silver party at the Chicago Convention, and the rumours, exaggerated though they were, of the possibility of another coal strike, were unfavourable factors.

The Position on the Stock Exchange.

The proverbially unlucky nineteen-day account thus came to an end without even a partial rally, but it is not improbable that in the new account we shall see a little more activity, especially if some of the adverse reports were to give way to more favourable developments. I cannot bring myself to believe that the coal miners, after their previous sad experience, will lightly enter upon a strike or lock-out; and the reports which have been current are distinctly exaggerated. Satisfactory dividend announcements, moreover, are already putting a better face upon the state of affairs in the Home Railway market. There is no doubt, on the other hand, that the trouble in Mashonaland has been made too light of by those in authority in South Africa, and the tardy acceptance by Earl Grey of aid from the Cape Government, is significant. The comparative fiasco of the Chartered debenture issue was another discouraging point; but after all it has no bearing upon the outlook in the Transvaal, which is distinctly improving, especially if we accept the introduction by the Volksraad of some much-needed reforms as an earnest of further progressive measures. There are, moreover, distinct indications that the speculative account in the Kaffir Circus has been considerably reduced, even though, in view of the inactivity of the market, the jobbers were able to exact rates nearly as heavy as last account. I feel sure, however, that the longer the present dulness in the South African department lasts, the sharper will eventually be the revival. Notwithstanding some bumper crushings of West Australian mines which have joined the list of producers, this section of the mining market has continued inactive, and the sagging movement has not yet ceased. But all the news from the goldfields is so encouraging, that I look forward to a smart rally as soon as ever other surroundings improve. American rails have been depressed by the disastrous decision come to by the Democratic party at the Chicago Convention. The triumph of the silverites has been unexpectedly complete, and the only argument of those who still believe in the future of the United States is, that the policy adopted by the majority is so egregiously foolish and disastrous that it will lead to the easy victory of the Republican gold "plank." But America is the country of surprises, and it would be prudent to await the course of events. The value of money has hardened slightly in view of various loans and issues, which are in progress or in sight; but dividend payments are at hand, and upon the whole cheap money may be expected for some time to come, provided the adverse features above referred to do not develop further. I, therefore, anticipate, eventually a more general improvement, although, perhaps, a short period of dulness may still have to be faced, and it will probably require a rally only in one of the departments, such as is now in progress in Home Rails, to set the whole of the markets going again.

Home Rails.

If it were not for the adverse view taken of the relations between the coal miners and the owners, the signal for a revival would probably be given sooner by the bracing-up of Home Rails. Traffics continue very satisfactory, showing as they do again an increase of £65,000 for the week, which is all the more satisfactory as the comparison is now with good traffics last year. The Board of Trade returns for June, moreover, were distinctly favourable, especially in view of the large increase in exports; and finally the present week ushers in the dividend announcements, some of which cannot fail to prove very favourable. The market has undoubtedly been in a very sensitive condition of late, as the stock-splitting announcement of the Midland had raised prices of the Heavies too suddenly. A few realisations therefore sufficed to produce declines all round. Why the Scotch stocks should have participated in these to any extent it is difficult to understand, especially as both the leading lines are doing extremely well, and the North British had a gain of not less than £6,200 for the week. Under the circumstances I must consider that North British Deferred, at anything like the present quotation is a very promising purchase; while Caledonian Deferred (Coras) are not dear either. Amongst the Southern Passenger stocks Brighton "A" temporarily reacted, while Dover "A" have displayed comparative strength, apparently on inside purchases in anticipaion of a satisfactory South Eastern dividend announcement. Chathams have been dull, although there is nothing in the position to warrant the decline in the prices. The fall in Midlands at one time extended to 3½ points, and there was a slight easing-off in Great Western and North Western, and a fall of nearly two points in North Eastern, chiefly on the rumours in connection with the coal dispute. Dividend influences will, however, also be prominent in this section in the immediate future, and I think that holders will be wise to refrain from pressing sales. As I am writing, in fact, a strong recovery is already going on owing to the very favourable dividend announcement of the Brighton Railway Company at the rate of 4¾ per cent. against 3¾ per cent. last year, while the balance carried forward is also much larger. This distribution, although in accordance with my anticipations, was better than the market estimate, and caused an advance of 3¼ in Brighton "A." Chatham Second Prefs. sympathised with a rise of 3, Dover "A" gaining 1½, and the Heavies from 1 to 3.

The Yankee Silver Nonsense.

The spouting which has been going on at the Chicago Convention exhibits our Yankee cousins in a most undesirable light, and flavours of the madness which the gods bring upon those whom they wish to destroy. Unless the American people have forgotten all the lessons of the past, and taken leave of their senses, the Democratic party will be disrupted in the coming Presidential contest. At all events there will be a perfectly clear issue between the Republican party in favour of a gold basis, and the Democrats afflicted by the silver nonsense; and although the length to which the silverites went at Chicago shows them still to be in great strength, I cannot bring myself to believe that they will succeed. Considering the vast interests at stake, American Railroad stocks have maintained themselves remarkably well. The dulness of the market proves that liquidation is still confined to the professional element; in fact, a number of operators both in Wall-street and here have evened up their position, preferring to do nothing for some time to come until they can see their way clear. The feeling is of course very conservative amongst the brokers on both sides of the Atlantic, and there is no doubt that they are carrying fewer stocks than they have carried for years past. As to the continued talk in Wall-street papers that London is the only buyer of American Rails, I maintain the view that the much-talked-of purchases must here be made for American account, as a far more serious view is taken of the silver craze in London than in New York. In the meantime, even the splendid traffics of the Milwaukee have failed to produce any improvement. Canadian Pacifics temporarily declined in sympathy with American Rails, although traffics are satisfactory. Grand Trunks have been fairly steady, but business is on the smallest possible scale.

Foreigners and South Americans.

We have again one of those little surprises which come periodically upon speculators in Foreign stocks. The Italian Ministry has resigned, and a Cabinet crisis is in full swing. Of course, the chief trouble is the huge War Budget which the country is ill able to support. Under the circumstances, Italians at 87¼ are distinctly too high, and this also applies to Spanish at 64¼, considering the hopeless nature of the struggle in Cuba. After a feeble rally, Ottoman Banks have again eased off, and Turks are flat, as the position in Crete is still very unsatisfactory. I dare say that even when the Cretan question is temporarily patched up, there will soon be trouble in another part of the effete Ottoman Empire. Who would, under these circumstances, embark in Turks? Argentine Government stocks have been fairly steady, but there has been no disposition to raise prices. Some particulars of the unification scheme passed by the Senate have oozed out, according to which authority is to be given to the Provinces to arrange their external debts on the basis of the Four and a Half per Cent. Internal National Gold bonds held by them, while they will receive the same nominal amount in New Four per Cent. Unified. The Province of Buenos Ayres is to receive 34,000,000 pesas of these bonds. The unification is to be carried out by the Argentine Government on a 4 per cent. national basis. But even if the Deputies vote the Bill, the issuing houses in Europe will have to be settled with, and these will certainly not give up the security of the Customs revenue possessed by some of the loans; so that the outlook is not by any means clear yet. A favourable circumstance is, however, the further decline in the gold premium in Buenos Ayres to 181½. Uruguay bonds are distinctly firmer, the old loan at 51, and the new loan at 1¼ discount. I shall not be surprised to see the latter rise to a premium in the near future, as the unplaced portion is in the hands of the underwriters, who are very powerful, and may any day put the price up. The Chilian Loan has been merely un succès d'estime, the market taking no interest in the issue. Chili has been somewhat extravagant in purchases of war material; but the good sense and thrift of the nation will doubtless suffice to pull the financial situation round again. Brazilians have been fairly steady, and Mexicans have shown a firm front. Peruvian Corporation stocks have been altogether neglected, and no one appears to take any interest, speculatively at least, in South and Central American Republics, amongst which, in addition to Honduras, Columbia, Paraguay, and Ecuador, we must still reckon Costa Rica.

The Kaffir Circus Expectant.

I wonder whether any of the shareholders in the Chartered Company of South Africa really were disappointed when they heard that the debenture issue of £1,250,000 at 97½ had been placed elsewhere. I doubt it, and I also much doubt whether many of them will avail themselves of the offer that has now been made to them to acquire a share in this issue, loudly as they howled. The money has, however, undoubtedly been found, and so for the moment the Chartered Company is in funds once again, but how long these will last must, of course, depend upon how soon the Company can settle up its various little troubles in Matabeleland and Mashonaland. But it is high time that the market for other South African securities, and especially for the shares in sound Transvaal gold and land companies, should shake itself free from the influence of the Chartered collapse. It is of good augury that the Volksraad in Pretoria should at last have initiated measures of reform, not very important it is true, but still in the right direction. The fact, for instance, that the First Raad has rescinded an old resolution disqualifying Roman Catholics as officials of the Republic, shows the growth of liberal principles. If the Second Raad were to pass the amended liquor law, prohibiting the sale of liquor to natives on the Witwatersrand gold mines, that would also be a step in the right direction; and cablegrams are to the effect that the whole mining industry supports the Government in the matter. Why should not the Volksraad also initiate some of those important reforms which are so urgently needed for the development of the mining industry in the Transvaal, regarding the duties on articles of food and other imports connected with the mines, and the reduction of freights on coal, &c., not to forget the obnoxious dynamite and other monopolies. By-the-way, I was only discussing a few days ago with an eminent member of the bar, the son of a judge, the question of the march of civilisation in South Africa, and he indicated its course by saying, "first missionaries and guns, then telegraphs, and railways after," referring as regards the latter circumstance more especially to the construction of the Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway, which will add another branch to the railway system of the Transvaal. My suggestion that to missionaries, should be added "intoxicating liquors," he readily endorsed; and it would indeed be a blessing if, in the course of future missionary and colonising expeditions, the introduction of fire-water to the natives were to be prohibited. In the present case, the prohibition is only dictated by selfish motives, as the mining industry suffers from the drunkenness amongst the natives; but why should not at the same time as measures are being taken by missionaries to save the souls of the natives, steps also be taken to protect bodies from the destructive liquors which march side by side in the van with the saviours of souls. By the way, I hear that the Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway Company has been registered in London and in Pretoria, and that the Transvaal Government has subscribed £300,000 out of the whole of the share capital of £500,000. Of course the rest is already placed, and Four per Cent. Guaranteed bonds will later on be issued to the tune of £1,250,000, and there is little doubt about the success of this line. The Kaffir Circus is, as I said in the heading of these remarks, in an expectant attitude. According to cable advices, politics will not interfere to any extent with the future of the Transvaal, and the very fact that Sir Hercules Robinson, promoted to a peerage, will return to his post, promises a conciliatory policy and an adjustment of all outstanding disputes. The arrival of a batch of "reformed" Reform prisoners by the Norham Castle should furnish an opportunity for a thorough discussion of the present position, and I trust that the utterances of the "reformed" will bear out the more peaceful anticipations which have been created by the recent events above referred to. There will be a few of the millionaires and semi-millionaires to speak their mind, such as Mr. Lionel Phillips, of Messrs. Eckstein, in connection with Wernher, Beit, & Co.; Messrs. Percy and Sidney Farrar; Mr. S. B. Joel, or, as he is known to his friends, "Solly" Joel; and Mr. John Hays Hammond. The least thing these gentlemen could do, after their abortive exploit, would be to give us a candid view of the present position, and to do their best to pull matters right again. I except Mr. "Solly" Joel from the list of mischief-makers, as he joined the movement only at the last moment, and practically under compulsion. Mr. B. I. Barnato will return early in August; but I hope that the advent of his nephew, "Solly" Joel, will already foreshadow that rally in Barnato stocks, which the supporters and followers of Barney are looking for. I expressed last week a very favourable opinion of the amalgamation of the Oceana Company with the Africana and Austral-African Companies, under the title of the Oceana Consols, and I see that the shareholders of the three Companies take the same view, and duly authorised the scheme at the different meetings held on Monday. The new Board will probably consist of Mr. Pasteur, the present Chairman of the Oceana Company; Mr. F. R. Bullock, one of the Oceana Directors; Mr. Charles Rose, and Mr. A. Ochs, present Directors of the Austral-African, and Mr. Boyle, Managing Director of the Africana, who will probably be kept in countenance by another Director of this Company representing the French interests. I also hear that during the recent visit of Mr. Ochs and Mr. Secretan to Johannesburg, these gentlemen were able to secure valuable options on most advantageous terms, which should prove of great advantage to the new Oceana Consolidated Company. With reference to the development of the mining industry on the Witwatersrand, there is every reason for entertaining a very favourable view. The crushings have not yet reached 200,000 oz., but those for June do not fall far short, amounting as they do to 193,640 oz., against 195,008 oz. for May. Amongst these crushings the New Primrose shows well with an increase of 782 oz. against May (9,786 oz. against 9,004 oz. in May). The Geldenhuis Estate has an increase of 992 oz., the Wolhuter 841, the Henry Nourse 351, the Ferreira 303 oz. On the other hand, the Sheba has yielded 1,435 oz. less, and decreases are shown of 920 oz. by the George Goch, 858 by the Jumpers, 550 by the Salisbury, 517 by the Wemmer. The Sheba decrease is distinctly disappointing; the others are probably only temporary. The Glencairn yielded 3,468 oz. in June, against 3,230 oz. in May, and the Rietfontein, too, had an increase of 33 oz. (2,150 oz. in June, against 2,117 oz. in May). Under the circumstances, I see no reason for departing from my recommendation of the various Barnato stocks mentioned last week, viz., Barnato Banks, Barnato Consols, New Primrose, Glencairn, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, Buffelsdoorn, and Rietfontein. Mail advices bring particulars of the great Barnato banquet in Johannesburg, at which the proceedings were most enthusiastic. With reference to the Barnato amalgamation, the Johannesburg Star contains the following announcement:—

> Besides the shares receivable pro rata in the consolidated scheme, shareholders in the Consolidated Investment will have the right to take up 125,000 further £1 shares therein at 80s. Shareholders in the Barnato Bank will, in the same way, have the right to subscribe for 125,000 shares at 50s.; this issue of 250,000 shares being guaranteed at 80s. The premiums derived from this issue will represent a cash reserve of £562,500. Mr. Barnato says that the rent-roll accruing to the new Company from landed estate alone will be £250,000 per annum.

A heavy seller of Rand Reefs, and the closing of some weak "Bull" accounts, came on a dull market, and knocked down the price of these shares to 7s. on Friday. The shares, however, were subsequently taken, and quickly recovered to 10s. bid, at which price they remain very firm. Somebody has apparently "ratted;" but the market will probably be all the better for the shake out. The various mines of the Robinson group at present at work compare somewhat irregularly with the May yield. The Langlaagte Estate recovered, for instance, 9,131 oz. of gold, against 9,428 oz., this result still being due to the scarcity of labour, which is, however, now passing away. The Block B output was 2,511 oz., against 2,854 oz. in May. On the other hand, the Langlaagte Star produced 1,491 oz., against 1,207 oz. in May, and I hear that the July output will show a considerable increase. I maintain the view already expressed that Langlaagte Estate, Block B, Langlaagte Star, Randfontein, and Robinson Banks are all a good purchase. The various mines on the Randfontein have suffered a good deal from the labour troubles, but as these are now being surmounted, we may look for a strong rally. Advices from the Nickerk mine are exceedingly favourable, and whenever the Kaffir Circus generally revives, these shares, now quoted $1\frac{1}{8}$, will be well to the front. Sheba Hill shares have been active at from 3s. to 3s. 6d. Some operators had overloaded themselves with African Gold Properties' shares and had to sell, but the market should now have got rid of a weak element and be in a healthy condition for any revival of activity. The Woodstock (Transvaal) is, according to latest advices, opening up splendidly, and the price is firm at from $1\frac{5}{8}$ to $1\frac{7}{8}$. I should like, however, to specially warn my readers that the Woodstock South mine, which is being puffed in some quarters, has absolutely nothing to do with the Woodstock (Transvaal), and is apparently a doubtful property, and engineered on the strength of the similarity in name. I have not yet heard from Mr. Woolan with reference to the African Estate option in connection with Messrs. Ephrussi. The Mozambique Company had its general meeting at Lisbon on June 27, when the statement was made that unless new and unforeseen expenditure were necessitated, the Company would shortly distribute a first dividend. The revenue in 1895 was £56,942, against £44,500 in 1894. I mentioned some time ago that an amalgamation was on the board, and my anticipation is now confirmed by the statement that the Mozambique Company is about to absorb the Campañhia da Zambesia. With reference to the Kimberley-Roodepoort it is now reported that the mine is looking better, and that the June return of 1,214 oz. will be followed by an improved July yield. A fresh juggle is foreshadowed with reference to the Roodepoort Deep Level Company, and it is anticipated that the outcrop block will be amalgamated with the Roodepoort United. The meeting of the African Gold Concessions and Development Company, to be held on July 21, is looked for with all the more interest, as three of the Directors, Messrs. J. M. Coward, Robert Shackell, and W. H. Thompson, have resigned. This resignation has not come one day too soon, but it remains to be seen what case the remaining Directors will be able to make out for themselves. In the meantime, shareholders should refrain from paying the call made, and this is also the advice which I give to the shareholders in the sub-Companies, viz., Abercorn Reefs and Umtoli. In their case the action of the Directors is altogether questionable, and the shareholders will do well to at once take steps for their own protection. A new Rhodesian amalgamation is that of the Rhodesian Mineral Properties, Limited, with the Rhodesian Claims, Limited; but it matters very little if they go on singly or in company. At all events they have not, so far, proved successful. I have received several inquiries as to what has been done with reference to the proposed reconstruction of Kaffirs, Limited, a concern upon which I have had something to say on previous occasions. I should like to know how this matter stands now. Transvaal Exploring shares are likely to come into demand again, and have, in fact, been firmer at $\frac{7}{8}$. It will be remembered that during the time of the boom these shares reached nearly 3. In addition to the large profit made by the Company on its flotation last year, it appears to have acquired various valuable options and investments during the recent period of depression, which have been sold to the Company at cost price against a comparatively small issue of shares, while the payment of the balance has been arranged out of future profits. The first of the flotations which are made by the Company is that of the Cataract Barberton Gold Mining Company, in which the shareholders of the Transvaal Exploring Company have a prior right of allotment. This prospectus will be issued to the shareholders of the Transvaal Exploring Company on the 18th inst., and to the public in the following week. I am told that, amongst the other properties acquired by the Companies, there are some in the Vaal River, Waterburg, Lydenburg, Barberton, and Potchefstroom districts of the Transvaal. A cablegram from the New Modderfontein reports a larger yield for June, viz., 2,778 oz., against 2,172 oz. in May. Diamond shares have been fairly steady, and look like bracing up again. At all events De Beers are above the lowest at $31\frac{3}{8}$, New Jagersfontein at $11\frac{1}{2}$. I confirm the view which I have already expressed, that some of the most promising mines in this section are New Bultfontein, now quoted $2\frac{1}{16}$; Leicester Diamonds, now at $3\frac{5}{8}$; and Kamfersdam, at $\frac{1}{4}$ premium. The Leicester Consolidated Diamond Mines, Limited, which has been registered in Kimberley, with a nominal capital of £500,000, of which, however, only £240,000 has at present been issued (£69,000 being available as cash working capital), is also a very promising Company. The Company acquires 451 claims in the Leicester mine, adjoining those of the Leicester Diamond Mining Company, the shares in which stand at $3\frac{5}{8}$. The diamonds found in this mine are of excellent quality, and it is not surprising that the shares have come into demand at $1\frac{13}{16}$-$1\frac{15}{16}$.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

Although the market for West Australian Gold Mining shares has continued very inactive, and prices have fallen away in a good many instances, advances are also marked in several others, and it is probable that we shall see a more general rally after the settlement. The news from the goldfields, at all events, is very satisfactory, and it is surprising that the favourable crushings have not had more effect upon business. The First Mainland Consols crushing, consisting, for instance, of 275 tons of ore for 1,276 oz. of gold exclusive of tailings, of which the average assay is stated to be 18 dwt. to the ton, was all that could be wished, and so was, apart from the small quantity of ore crushed, the return of the Lady Shenton of 269 oz. from 55 tons. As, according to the cablegram, stamps are, however, now running sixteen hours daily, it is assumed that the next crushing will be much larger. If these favourable developments and the brilliant annual report of the West Australian Goldfields had come a few months ago, they would probably have caused a veritable boom. At present they have been counteracted by the general lassitude which has come over the markets; but there can be no doubt that such actual results will in the end weigh with investors and attract yet further support. Amongst the movements which have taken place during the past account, I notice advances of $\frac{5}{16}$ in Black Flag Consolidated, and of $\frac{1}{4}$ in Gladiators and in West Australian Joint Stock Trust, while Joker (Yalgoo) have advanced to $1\frac{3}{4}$ premium. On the other hand, there has been a more or less considerable shrinkage in Associated Gold Mines, Brookman's Gold, Colonial Finance, Crœsus South United, Hampton Plains, Lady Loch, Hannan's Reward, London and West Australian Exploration, Paddington Consols, and more especially in Hannan's Brownhill (which made up at $5\frac{1}{2}$, against $6\frac{1}{2}$ at the end of June), while smaller declines have occurred in a number of others. Yet, with the exception chiefly of Hannan's Brownhill, which have naturally reacted on the diminutive crushing, I can see no tangible reason for most of these movements. Take, for instance, Hampton Plains. The news from this property is as satisfactory as can be desired, and there can be no doubt of the great future of the Company's extensive auriferous properties. Yet the price is down to $4\frac{7}{8}$. The Mainland Consols' crushing caused a temporary rise to 4, but the shares have since reacted to $3\frac{3}{4}$. A continuance of crushings on the basis of the first one should, however, result in a fresh advance. The shares in the Lake View Consols, the new English Company which has taken over the Lake View Mine, have been strong at $4\frac{1}{2}$, and I anticipate a fresh advance in the near future. In the meantime West Australian Exploring and Finance and London and Globe shares, of the same group, have remained in the neighbourhood of $3\frac{3}{4}$. Most satisfactory advices have come to hand by the mail concerning the big lode struck some time ago at a depth of 100 ft. in the Hannan's Golden Treasure Mine. It is described as so important that the shaft is being stripped to enable the winding plant to be used, while a 20-head battery is now on the road for the mine. Winding plant is on the ground, and a start has been made to erect it. It is expected that within two months crushing will be started. The lode at the 100 ft. level is 17 ft. to 18 ft. wide, and averages 2 oz. gold per ton all through. It lies altogether west of all the known reefs in the district. Mr. C. Kaufman's French manager, M. Carlier, sank a shaft in a big ironstone blow similar to those on the Great Boulder and Lake View mines, with the result that the shaft broke into a splendidly defined reef at the 100 ft. level. There is thus every prospect of Hannan's Golden Treasure shares going to a higher level, and this should also be the case with the shares of the sister Company, the Hannan's Golden Group. The shares in West Australian Joint Stock Trust have again shown a firm front, and a rise is marked to $3\frac{11}{16}$ premium. The prospectus of the Northern Territory Goldfields of Australia, Limited, in which the Trust is so largely interested (some dozen other Finance Companies also supporting the scheme), will, I hear, shortly be issued, and is likely to create a sensation, more especially by the very large actual results already obtained. Crushings of 5,000 and 6,000 tons are given, the last returns giving from 6 to 7 oz. to the ton, while one consisting of ten tons was at the rate of 300 oz. to the ton. That, of course, would be an exceptional result, but the reports of Colonial Governors and engineers, including Government inspectors of mines, all tend to show that this is a wonderfully rich territory. I understand that the whole capital is already subscribed privately, and a great scramble is expected in the market for the shares. Associated Southern at $1\frac{15}{16}$, and Nil Desperandum at $1\frac{3}{8}$, have been steady. In the Venture Syndicate group the tone has been firm, and 90-Mile Proprietary, Joker, and Joker Proprietary have been more particularly in favour. With reference to the 90-Mile Proprietary, a cablegram has been received stating that on the Caledonian Lease, the property of this Company, a crushing of 90 tons yielded 180 oz. of gold. Fifteen stamps are at work, and a further five heads will be started as soon as the boiler arrives, so that regular and growing returns may now be looked for. The Sugar Loaf Cement leases are also coming to the front now, a cablegram stating that the reef has been cut at the 150-ft. level, 3 ft. 6 in. thick, and that they are still driving. The ore is stated to contain visible fine and coarse gold. Another piece of valuable news is that contained in a cablegram to the effect that at the Ivanhoe Mine a crushing of 240 tons yielded 1,000 oz. From the Hannan's Britannia a cable is to hand announcing favourable developments, and the discovery of a body of payable ore, a rough assay showing 4 oz. to the ton. I understand that a circular has been issued over a signature of five shareholders in the Cassidy Hill (Coolgardie) Gold Mines, Limited, amongst whom figures Mr. Wm. Hardman, J.P., as a holder of 600 shares. In this circular the history of the Company is recapitulated, and a form, agreeing to co-operate in the investigation of the Company's position and calling a meeting, is enclosed for signature by the shareholders. This form is to be returned to the five shareholders at the office of Messrs. J. A. Campbell & Co., Chartered Accountants, 17, South-street, Finsbury, E.C., whose appeal, as mentioned by me a fortnight ago, has been very liberally responded to. There is good news from the Gladiator Mine, which, as I explained the other day, is situate forty miles, slightly to the north-west of Coolgardie. A short sample of stone blown out from a rich part of the reef is stated by Mr. David Welch, the late mining engineer of Burbank's Birthday Gift, to have yielded at the rate of nearly 500 oz. to the ton. Large reserves are ready for the mill, and the mine is expected to fully bear out the report of Professor Nicolas, the well-known mining engineer, who expressed himself as follows concerning the Gladiators:—"During my examination of this grand outcrop of a quartz reef I was deeply impressed with its great probable future value as a gold-producer. For some 500 ft. in length this massive outcrop of mineralised quartz averages just 12 ft. in width, and, moreover, in the only place where it has been partly cross trenched, it has been found to carry gold equal to at least 3 oz. to the ton." The shares have been actively dealt in at $1\frac{1}{8}$, and look like going considerably higher. There is a temporary lull in Royal Sovereigns, now quoted $3\frac{3}{4}$, but I do not think that the "Bear" squeeze is by any means over yet. The shares in the Anglo-French Colonial Trust, which has a considerable interest in Royal Sovereigns, are steady at $1\frac{7}{8}$. Explorers Syndicate shares are being actively dealt in at $\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ premium, and have not been affected by the general dulness, which is not surprising, as the Company is known to be largely interested in such successful mines as the Burbank's Birthday Gift. Princess Royal shares at 7s. 6d. to 8s. have also shown a firm front. Hannan's Napier are well supported in the neighbourhood of 1. West Australian Gold Concessions are very strong in anticipation of the issue of the Directors' report, and the price has advanced to $1\frac{3}{4}$. I shall not be surprised to see a fair upward movement in the West Australian Mining Company's shares, which have usually been in favour with small capitalists. This was the pioneer of West Australian mining enterprises, and it owns and controls a number of well-developed properties. At Sherlaw's Gold crushings have recommenced, and the news as to the progress of the work at the Great Reef is favourable. The shares of the parent Company, the Coolgardie Gold Syndicate, are neglected. Why, it is difficult to say. The session of the West Australian Legislature was opened by the Governor, Sir Gerard Smith, on the 7th inst., with very encouraging statements. The colony is going in for a very large water-supply scheme, the cost of which is estimated at £2,500,000; and the very fact that the Government is prepared to spend so large a sum for supplying the goldfields with water is an eloquent proof of the belief which is entertained in the colony of the permanence of the gold deposits. The revenue has amounted to £1,858,695 against £1,125,940 in the previous year. Extensions of Fremantle Harbour, and of the railway from Cue to Nanine, are also foreshadowed; and the Governor states that the line to Kalgoorlie will shortly be opened, while the Mullewa-Cue Railway had almost reached Yalgoo. These new lines of railway will doubtless stimulate mining operations. By the way, the Perth correspondent of the Citizen mentions that Mr. C. De Rose, the Kalgoorlie millionaire, who left the fields in May to enjoy the enormous wealth he is supposed to have accumulated, was arrested at Albany on the eve of his departure from the Colony, owing to a claim of £2,000 which had been, rightly or wrongly, brought against him. The West Australians still appear to have a Draconic law, according to which any one claiming to be the creditor of a departing guest can have their debtor arrested at any of the ports. It is fortunate for millionaires and others that these provisions are not in force in this country. Hannan's King (Brownhill) Gold Mining shares have been active at $1\frac{3}{8}$ on a cablegram from the mine stating that the lode is improving and is undoubtedly the Richmond lode. Mr. Joseph Foster, of 4, Broad-street Buildings, E.C., is sending out circulars puffing a new gold mine, the Nation's Treasure (Coolgardie), Limited, which he states is the latest and most valuable addition to the celebrated group of the Wealth of Nations gold mines. He adds that the mine has never been issued to the public, but offers a block of the vendors' shares of £1 each at 14s. and calls this proposal "one of the much-coveted opportunities of getting in on the ground-floor." I do not know Mr. J. Foster, who styles himself M.A., Oxon, neither do I know the Nation's Treasure (Coolgardie); but in view of the system adopted to off-load the shares, I should advise my readers to have nothing to do with them. A number of gentlemen connected with the West Australian mining industry assembled on Friday night at Charing Cross Station to speed Mr. Zebina Lane on his return to Western Australia. Mr. Lane has been remarkably successful in connection with the Great Boulder and other mines connected with this group, and I hope that when he returns in January next he may be able to confer further benefits upon those whom he has hitherto served so well. I may mention that the Great Boulder South, upon which he reported, has just had its special settlement, when a large number of shares were found to have passed into investors' hands. At $1\frac{3}{4}$ these shares are still a good purchase. By the way, I am much gratified in noticing that my Western Australian contemporaries are quoting very largely from my remarks concerning "Golden West Australia," and I also acknowledge that they do so while fully quoting TRUTH. This is especially the case with the Western Mail, of Perth, an excellent colonial contemporary, which has done me the honour of reproducing several of my articles in full.

INDIAN, NEW ZEALAND, AND OTHER MINES.

After a temporary reaction, Indian gold mines have braced up again, Mysore, Mysore Reefs, and Nine Reefs showing the greatest strength. Mysore Gold stand at $7\frac{1}{2}$, Nundydroog at $3\frac{5}{8}$, the favourable June crushings of these two mines having acted as a support. Champion Reefs have been quiet, but the news from the Kadur Mysore is favourable, and it is stated that arrangements had been made for the flotation of sub-Companies to work the property effectively. Goldfields of Mysore are quoted at 26s., and with Coromandel at $2\frac{1}{8}$, are amongst the most promising low-priced Indian mines. Amongst New South Wales mines, Aladdins have been steady at $1\frac{15}{16}$; the dividend of 2s. has been paid. Wentworth Proprietary are rather dull at $\frac{15}{16}$. Australian Broken Hill are firm. In the Croydon goldfield, Croydon Consols are still 4s. 6d. to 5s., and another dividend appears to be in sight. A coming mine hailing from Tasmania is the Mount Reid Mining Company, Limited, which has been privately formed and subscribed with a capital of £150,000 in £1 shares, of which £50,000 has been reserved for working capital. The Company acquires an important gold, silver, and copper mining property at Mount Reid, in the Dundas district of north-west Tasmania, covering about 80 acres, within a comparatively short distance of the Mount Lyell Mine, the Mount Bischoff Mine, the North Dundas tin fields, and the Zeehan Silver fields, all of which are being successfully worked. According to the report of the expert, this is a mine very similar to the Mount Lyell, and promises to prove equally successful. Working assays of fourteen different samples of ore taken from the property gave an average, according to Mr. McMurray, of 1 oz. 5 dwt. of gold, and 21 oz. of silver per ton of ore. This is altogether apart from the large amount of copper pyrites also testified to. The shares are not offered for public subscription, and are already quoted at a considerable premium. Amongst New Zealand mines, Taitapu Estates have reacted to $3\frac{7}{16}$, and Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand, after a brief reaction, are slightly firmer at $4\frac{3}{4}$. Hauraki are slightly better, but Kapanga are easier. In this department I still have the best opinion of United New Zealand Exploration at about $2\frac{1}{2}$, and amongst the low-priced shares of Komata Queen at 4s., Preece's Point at 4s. 3d., and Maoriland Gold Mines at 3s. to 3s. 3d. A cablegram from the manager of the Preece's Point Proprietary states that good progress is being made with the machinery. Again the Irene (Hauraki) Gold Mining shares, 5s. fully paid, have improved to 5s. 6d., and there is every prospect of a further improvement. During the present account there has been a moderate set-back in some of the New Zealand mines which had gone up to a high figure. Thus Waihi made up $\frac{1}{8}$ lower at $6\frac{7}{8}$, Waihi Silverton $\frac{3}{8}$ lower at $3\frac{1}{8}$, Waitekauri $\frac{5}{16}$ lower at $5\frac{3}{8}$, and Waitekauri Cross dropped $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ premium. The successful flotation of the Gloucester Gold Mining Company, Limited, by the Mining, Transport, and Finance Company, Limited, has caused a rise in the shares of the latter Company, the Ordinary having advanced to $1\frac{1}{4}$, and the Prefs. to $1\frac{7}{16}$. The total capital is £151,500, in Ordinary shares of £1 each, of which there are 130,000; and there are, in addition, Preference and Founders' shares. Besides the finance business acquired by the Company, it holds considerable interests in the Golden Horseshoe and Champion Reef (Nannine), both West Australian Companies, the shares in which stand at a premium; while valuable options have also been secured, which it is intended to float into new Companies in the near future. A cablegram from the Aroha Mine states that the value of the ore developed is 19s. per ton, and that a large body of ore has been proved. Considering that the Mines Contract Company is known to be in such a healthy position, it would be a commendable act of the Board if it issued to the shareholders a circular showing clearly the position of the Company, whose list of proprietors would probably be extended thereby. It is said that its gold property in Russia will bring in a handsome profit, while its Lydenburg possessions are turning out first class. The price is still at 30s. to 32s. 6d. The confirmatory meeting of the Mines and Banking Corporation re the alteration of the articles of association has been held, and the interim dividend at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum has been officially announced. The shares look a promising investment, and, what is more, give a good rate of interest. A recovery in Invicta Gold Mines (British Columbia) on the present price of ⅞ to 1 is also expected. The Golden River Quesnelle, another British Columbian mine to which I drew attention last week, is now being placed before the public, and should meet with a very favourable reception. In the general foreign section business has been very quiet, and dealings have been greatly restricted. Rio Tinto eased off temporarily, and other copper shares also suffered, but a recovery is now in progress. Golden Feather, Central Chili, Jay Hawk, and Dickens Custer are all lower.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week :—

Cowell, Craft & Co., Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring four businesses situate in the south-western part of London, which have been established for over forty years. The capital is fixed at £150,000 in shares of £1 each.

The Alliance Exploring and Finance Corporation, Limited.—This Corporation has been formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of a Parent Financial and Exploration business in the British Colonies. It also proposes to acquire options in mining properties with a view to re-sale. The capital is fixed at £200,000.

Hannan's Development and Finance Corporation, Limited.—This Corporation has been formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of a Development and Finance Corporation, and principally for the purpose of acquiring options, &c. The capital is £150,000 in shares of £1 each.

The Grand Theatre (Islington, Limited).—This Company has been formed to acquire and carry on as a going concern the Grand Theatre, Islington, with the scenery, furniture, &c. The share capital is £50,000 in £1 shares, and £15,000 in Five per Cent. Mortgage Debentures.

I cannot see anything tempting in this prospectus. Theatres at best are a very speculative investment, and the one under notice especially so, and I think that my readers will do better elsewhere.

The Ivanhoe Consols Proprietary Company, Limited. — This Company is formed to acquire and further develop four mining leases of 54 acres in extent, situate in the Hannan's district, Kalgoorlie, Western Australia. The capital is £125,000 in £1 shares.

The developments on this property appear to be insufficient, and the outlook for dividends on this amount of capital—which I think excessive—is very much in the future. Investors had better wait for further information from the mine.

Paul Stolte, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire, work, and further develop a manufacturing business carried on by Paul Stolte, Architect and Manufacturer, of Geuthin, Saxony. The capital is £50,000 in £1 shares.

This is a foreign invasion with a vengeance. The whole of the Directorate, with one exception, however, stay at home, and I should strongly advise my readers to keep their money at home, as I can see nothing in this venture to warrant the capital asked for it.

Golden River, Quesnelle, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire the rights and powers conferred by Acts of the Legislature of British Columbia in the Quesnelle Lake Dam Company, and the amended Acts of 1883 and 1895, granting exclusive right to extract gold and precious metals for about nine and a half miles on the South Fork, and a portion of the Main Quesnelle River, Cariboo, British Columbia. The capital is fixed at £350,000 in shares of £1 each.

The rights acquired by this Company are large, and the prospects very promising. The expert reports are favourable, but the most satisfactory point is that the Chairman is the Agent-General for British Columbia. It may be taken for granted that the Executive of that country must be pretty well assured of the future success of the Company, to allow his name to appear on the prospectus.

Tower Tea, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire and carry on the businesses of Wholesale Tea and Coffee Dealers carried on by Messrs. Lough Brothers & Co., as the Great Tower-street Tea Company, also the Silverbrook Tea Company, and the Whole Berry Coffee Company of Jewry-street, London. The capital is £200,000.

The whole of these four businesses were founded by Lough Bros. in the course of twenty years' trading, and the returns for the past three years are given collectively. Why not singly? The profits are expected to increase from additional capital and anticipated economies; but in these days of competition—more especially in this trade—the Company will be fortunate if it can manage to keep up the average. The capitalisation is far too high for me to advise my readers to venture into it.

The Standard Oil Company of Galicia.—Particulars are published of this Company, which is shortly to be issued simultaneously in London and Amsterdam.

The Dunallan Gold Mines, Limited.—Capital £85,000 in £1 shares. This Company is formed to acquire, further develop, and work the Dunallan Gold Mines, Coolgardie, Western Australia.

The Mines Corporation of New Zealand, Limited.—Capital £505,000. Issue of 250,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each and 5,000 Deferred shares of £1 each. This Company has been formed for the purpose of undertaking the business of a Mining, Prospecting, and Finance Company in the Colonies of New Zealand, Australia, Tasmania, and elsewhere.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents :—

GOVERNMENT, &c., BONDS.

Rover.—Yes, the new Uruguay loan, which was issued at 71½, can be bought at a discount of 1¼. It therefore yields upwards of 7 per cent. on the investment, and is a good purchase. H. D. W.—I see no reason for selling Chilian bonds, more particularly as the finances of the country are on a sound basis, and the new loan will doubtless be taken care of by Messrs. Rothschild. Martin. — 1. Take a good profit on Cedulas "P" in the near future. 2. No option but to hold for the present, and you might average to a moderate extent.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Thespian.—No. I do not advise dealing on this system, you should operate through a member of the Stock Exchange only. Ross.—It is difficult to find gilt-edged debentures to yield a fair return nowadays. Chester Lion Brewery Four and a Half per Cent. Debentures at about 105, and the shares of the Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust, Limited, at about 6, should suit you. Hughes.—This Eastern Bank is a well-established concern; but I do not like deposits of this kind. It would be preferable to buy gilt-edged securities. G. H. C.—I cannot reply by letter. A movement took place in Bristol a year or two back, through which those who then combined obtained the return of a large portion of their money. You should try and co-operate with others to obtain the same result. A Poor Widow.—The address of a smart City solicitor, which you require in your dealings with an outside broker, is forwarded to you in your envelope.

HOME RAILS.

Excellent.—Furness stock is fair value at present price; but no particular catch. Juggins.—I do not know anything about the persons in question, and the rise in the Heavy division has been overdone. O. G.—Take your handsome profit in North-Westerns on the next advance. R. V.—The reason of the rise in Dover "A" is the anticipation of a good dividend. Should this prediction be realised, we may see a further considerable advance.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

W.B.C.—I do not think it would be advisable to put the whole thousand pounds in Central Argentine stock. You might put a portion of the money in Buenos Ayres Great Southern and Buenos Ayres Western stocks, and some of it into the new Uruguay Five per Cent. Loan, which can be now obtained at a discount of 1¼ on the issue price of 71½. T. L. T.—No option but to hold the bonds in question; but it might be preferable to wait before averaging, until matters in American politics are more clear.

SPRATT'S PATENT various Dog Foods and Medicines can be obtained of all Corn Dealers, Grocers, and Chemists in the United Kingdom and in all important Continental cities. They are also stocked at 14, Rue des Mathurins, Paris; Rummelsburg, Berlin; and 239, East 56th-street, New York. Your own tradesman or stores will supply you.

MINING SHARES.

Mackay, Aberdeen.—I am afraid that the mine is in bad hands, and that is the reason why I am unfavourable to it; you should take an opportunity of an improvement to get out without a loss. Barnato Banks should be held for an important advance. Dingle.—You must know that I have always been unfavourable to Chartered shares; why did you disregard my advice? Hold Porges Randfontein. Cigarette.—1. Which South Australian mine do you refer to? 2. These should recover again. 3. Yes. 4. These should also come along again. 5. It is of no use to say much about this until the market generally braces up. Crystal.—No option but to hold your shares Nos. 1 to 4 for an improvement, which is probable. Reading.—Hold Waterfall Estates, and disregard this kind of talk. Kangaroo. — You had better obtain the information from the Secretary of these Companies with regard to the dividends paid. You must know my view of Chartered (A). I do not like B; but C should be held. 3. Yes. 4. Barnato Banks are likely to improve. Medicus, Cobham.—Amongst your shares Nos. 1 to 9, you may safely buy more Randfontein and hold the others. Blackburn.—I do not advise purchase of Klerksdorps. Swindled.—This is a very doubtful concern, against which I have for some time warned my readers. Great Scott.—No special reason, with the exception of the troubles in South Africa. When these are removed the shares should improve again. Colonel, Eastbourne.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you, Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 to 12 are promising, and should be held for an improvement. The others should be sold on an advance. Hopeful, Glasgow.—1. You should deal through a member of the Stock Exchange, and not with outside brokers. 2. Buffelsdoorn should be held for an improvement. Rhine.—Yes, it is a promising mine, and eventually, no doubt, will become active. A. G. L.—In wishing to buy South African shares, you are quite right to purchase Langlaagte Estate, Randfontein, Barnato Banks, and Barnato Consols. Cyanus.—1. Nothing has happened to change my opinion. 2. You had better hold these West Australian shares. Ulathorpe.—No reason to sell New Crœsus. Pax.—I do not think much of this silver mine. Lombard.—1. I cannot express a favourable opinion with reference to the West Australian Minerals and Finance Company. 2. Ditto. 3. Hold. 4. No option but to join the reconstruction and sell afterwards. 5. You ought to have sold La Yesca long ago. No option but to hold the others. J. H. C.—No option but to hold Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement. Maize.—I suppose it will be best to join the reconstruction and sell after. A Constant Reader (L. M.).—The Hicks' Mine is a promising Company, and you should hold the shares. Wanderer.—1. Burbank's Birthday Gift is a rich mine, and the shares should be held. 2. Hold Wealth of Nations. There are no dealings in the W.A. mine, "Hands Across the Sea," on this side. Amongst the South African shares which you propose to buy, Nos. 1 to 5, I do not approve of any but Nos. 1 and 2. The others are too speculative, and you can do better by consulting my letter. West Cliff.—1. Hold African Estates. Graskop Exploring, Sheba Hill, Maoriland, and Komata Queens are fair purchases amongst low-priced shares. All the mines mentioned are promising. Chicks.—In the case of so small an amount, I think it would be advisable to leave it in the Post Office Savings' Bank. Amongst the shares mentioned, I like Barnato Banks and Hampton Plains best. 2. Impossible to tell. Scotsman.—You might keep these West Australian shares for a further advance. The daily financial papers will give you the information you require. You should number your inquiries in future. H. S., Hull.—1. I see no reason for averaging yet. 2. No option but to hold New Crœsus. C. B.—1. Hold Balkis Land. 2. Certainly hold Hampton Plains, and buy more to average. Scoty.—1. No option but to keep them a little longer. 2. Hold these also. Dummy.—1. You have a splendid profit on these Diamond shares, why not take it? Hold Block 50 Hampton Plains (2) for a rise. 3. Hold. 4. No. Herbert.—Hold the West Australian shares in question. Constant Reader.—Please understand in future I cannot answer two letters in one week. Associated Southern are a good investment at the present quotation of 1⅞. M. K. E. K.—Croydon Consols is a promising mine, and the shares should improve. Balgonie.—A fair mining risk. Wargrave.—Croydon Consols are a promising investment. They paid 3d. per 5s. share for one quarter, and are in future expected to pay 6d. per quarter. Mayfield.—You should not take any notice of such trash. L. A. C.—Do not expect too large jumps in mining shares at present, and be content with a moderate profit. A. Impossible to tell. B. Take a fair profit. C. and D. I cannot tell. E. Yes. F. Shortly. J. P., St. Martin's-lane.—The position of Croydon Consols, according to all advices, appears to be exceptionally good, and I cannot understand myself why the price does not rise. If it were a West Australian mine it would be double the present quotation. You have done quite right in joining the opposition with regard to the African Gold Concessions, and should not be in a hurry to pay the call. South Hants.—My opinion of the Highland Chief Gold Mine is favourable. Cornubia.—I have never recommended Carn Breas, Dalcoaths, or other mines of that ilk, and have not a favourable opinion of Cornish mines. In West Australian mines there are many more promising than these, and you can gather all information from the remarks in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Johnnie.—Certainly hold, there is every prospect of a recovery. Tipperary.—The Victoria Reef Mine is a promising one, and the shares should eventually go much higher. Major, Manchester.—This West Australian Mine is strangely neglected, but I still say hold. Heinrich.—No option but to hold for the present. T. P.—I will make further inquiries with regard to this matter. Vinegar Hill.—Hold the shares, but do not buy any more yet. West York.—It was a pity you did not hold the South African shares in question; but the West Australians are promising. As regards the investment of a further sum of £3,000, you must let me know whether you desire to invest in mining shares, or what class of stocks you require. Plen.—1. Yes, Gladiators are a good purchase at from 1 to 1⅛. 2. London and Continental Investment are very promising; hold for a rise. 3. You have done very well in African Estates, and the time is not far off when you might make another purchase. 4. Mainland Consols ought to be bought on the present reaction. 5. Yes. 6. Certainly, always take a good profit. A. Z.—Nearly all your mining shares are well selected, and you should hold for a recovery. Ferndale.—Most of your mining shares are likely to recover again, and you should hold for the present. A good many, however, were not bought on my advice. Kaffirs, Ld.—I note that you not only endorse my remarks about the Directors, which were to the effect that "they were a peculiar clique," but that you have reason to use very strong expressions about them; I cannot tell you anything about the meeting held on June 3. 2. The Maritana Mine is likely to see the light of day in the near future, and it is a very promising undertaking. 3. The name is Hannan's Crœsus. 4. Do not sell now. 5. No option but to hold for the present. 6. Your wife should not attach any importance to this absurd and interested attack. Borax.—1. Yes. 2. Hold. Novice, B.—If you buy low-priced mining shares and expect immediately to make a profit, you must be a very ignorant speculator. If you want to make money in mining shares, patience is necessary. Wags.—1. Why do you not write to the Secretary of Westralia, Limited, and obtain the information you require! 2. Yes, West Australian Gold Concessions are a good purchase at the present price of 1⅞. 3. I maintain my favourable opinion of Hannan's Golden Treasure and Hannan's Golden Group; but when the whole market is dull you cannot expect some particular share to go better. 4. A fair purchase, but no catch. Traveller.—You should hold your South Africans for a rise. 1. I do not think much of it. 3. Yes, certainly hold. 3. Not as far as I know. 4. Yes. Xtopher.—1. I do not think favourably of these. 2. Hampton Plains are a good purchase at present price. 3. Pounds higher. Cunctator.—No reason to sell the shares, but you can do better in some of those mentioned in my letter. L. Z. E. Hy.—No particular temptation to buy just now.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Trams.—Take your profit on the Cycle shares. White Hussar.—I do not like the Elswick Cycle Company. Dunleary.—I would not advise purchase of these American Brewery shares yet. N. de G., Nat.—No catch. R. N., Southsea.—As far as I can see, even if you forfeit the shares, you will have to pay up the calls. Without knowing the name of the concern, I cannot of course say much; but why do you not combine with the other shareholders to force the sale of the steamer, which seems to be the best course? M. J. G.—Write to the secretary of the Company. Pater.—1. I do not think much of these as an investment. 2. I do not care for A. C. Pearson, Limited, and do not advise the investment. 3. No. 4. Cumulative means in this case that the Ordinary shares will not receive any dividend until the arrears of Preference dividend, if any, have been paid. Capsule.—1. Apparently so. 2. No, I am not partial to this kind of investment. J. P., King's Co.—I cannot reply by letter. It is not possible as yet to speak positively, but there seems to be every prospect of the arrangement being carried out. J. G. R.—The London Canning Company seems to be a promising undertaking; I gave some particulars last week under "Various Investments." Felix.—Hold Eastmans for a further recovery. All the same Associated Gold Mines are a good purchase. Bahadur.—Take a good profit when you can get it. X.—1. It is impossible to express an opinion until I have the prospectus of the Standard Oil Company of Galicia before me; I shall then give my views under "New Enterprises and Issues." 2. This new Cycle Company is likely to do well; but here also particulars must be awaited. 3. I cannot express an opinion. 4. Ditto. 5. You must take your own course. C. H. N.—You should write to the Secretary of the London Canning Company, at 20, Bucklersbury, E.C. It seems a promising concern. J. D.—1. No great hurry to buy these Brewery Prefs., although they are a good investment if put away. 2. Not yet. Jerné.—A good Brewery investment, and there is no reason to sell the stock. Spec.—1. You have done quite right to clear your profit in Mazzawattee Tea shares. 2. The rumour is frequently put about that Lipton's is coming out as a limited Company; but I cannot advise you with regard to applying for shares, when this event does happen, until I know what the capitalisation will be. 3. No particular temptation to buy just now. Tea.—I cannot possibly express an opinion on Tower Tea, Limited, which you say is soon coming out, until I know what the capitalisation will be, and what statements will be made in the prospectus. Magdalen.—I do not consider International Tea Stores Prefs. (1), C. A. Pearson, Ltd., Prefs. (2), or Maynard Ordinary (3) "good and safe industrial investments." They are highly speculative, and there is no market for No. 3. Lansdowne.—As far as I can judge from the prospectus, this is a bonâ-fide Company, and if the invention is what it is represented to be, it is likely to cause a revolution in the preserved-meat market.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Au Revoir.—1. Quite high enough. 2. No. Betty S.—A portion of your letter was answered last week under "Banks, Trusts and Financial." With regard to your sister's holdings, Nos. 1 to 5, they should be sold when prices recover. Robin.—1. The line did badly last year, but better times are now in store. 2. Yes. 3. This mine is likely to recover itself. 4. West Australian shares generally are dull just now; you must await a recovery. 5. There are better prospects for this mine now. 6. Yes. C. M. K.—Amongst your shares, Nos. 1 to 11, I do not think much of No. 4, and you ought to have sold No. 8 long ago when much higher. I do not like Dories (11), but the others should be held. Parrhesia.—1. Not yet. 2. I do not generally recommend "Bear" sales and in this case it would be rather risky, as the haute finance are supporting Tintos. 3. The time should come very soon toe close this "Bear." 4. You were quite right to realise your profit on Midlands, and ought to have done so for the whole amount, as they have relapsed since. Oswald.—Amongst your investments, Nos. 1 to 11, all the South Africans should be held for a recovery, and there is no reason for selling No. 9 now. The West Australians, Nos. 10 and 11, are promising. Doubtful Yankee.—1. The rumours of trouble amongst the coal miners is keeping Home Rails back, but I should not be surprised to see a further distinct rally. 2. No option but to hold. In all probability the interest on No. 3 will be paid. Hen.—1. I have always warned my readers against Colon Gold Mines. 2 and 4. A recovery is probable. 3. These should be held. 5. Take a good profit. 6. This is a promising gold mine. 7. I know nothing of Woodstock South; it has nothing to do with Woodstock (Transvaal). Kyrle.—1. I do not advise purchase of Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum shares. 2. Take a fair profit on your Cedulas, whenever you can get it. 3. Do not sell now. Fathead.—1. I think you may expect the Argentine Railway bonds to go considerably higher; but I cannot possibly tell you what price they will touch. 2. The re-constructed shares should be sold as soon as you can get out at a fair price. 3. Join this re-construction and sell after. G. H.—1. No option but to hold these Nitrate shares, they should recover again. 2. Hold Wealth of Nations for an improvement. Flete.—In your first list, No. 2 (Nobel-Dynamite Trust) is rather speculative. No. 3 is a fair industrial investment; but it is impossible to tell how the market will move. 4. No. As regards your second list of investments, Nos. 1 to 5, you should sell your Spanish on a further advance and hold the others. T. H.—1. No; I do not advise purchase of Gwelo at present, in view of the troubles in Rhodesia. 2. They will be worth buying presently. 3. No, I do not advise further purchase of Chartered; sell whenever an opportunity offers. 4. You might as well take your handsome profit. 5. No; I do not like the Enfield Cycle Company. 6. I do not care for Rudge-Whitworth. 7. Probably, but I cannot tell until the prospectus is issued. Rob Roy.—You do not send your name and address in token of good faith! I do not see how you can improve your investments. Buddha.—1. Hold Wealth of Natious for a recovery. 2. Buy more North British Deferred to average, the price is now 51. Viola.—1. I do not think much of the stock in question. 2. They do not appear to be quoted. 3. I think you might as well keep your Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds. 4. There is every prospect of these shares coming right again, whenever the Kaffir Circus braces up again. Gonora.—1. Yes, I think you would do well to put the £600 in the new Uruguay Five per Cent. Loan. 2. Ditto. 3. Amongst West Australians you might buy the new Lake View Consols. 4. Croydon Consols and Langlaagte Estate are both very promising, and you might distribute the amount over these. Civis.—1. There is no objection to the proposed investments Nos. 1 and 3; but I do not care for No. 2. As regards No. 4, I think the new Uruguay Government issue is best worth buying. Clare.—1. Yes. 2. No option but to hold for the present, but do not average yet. 3. Yes, just now. 4. I do not like Gold Consols, Limited, and never have; write to the Secretary as regards the statutory meeting. Red Leaf.—There is no option but to hold most of your mining shares Nos. 1 to 25, and even those which are not well selected should now be held. Your best holdings are Nos. 1, 9, 11, 12 and 13. The others, however, will, no doubt, also recover again. Percy.—1. Yes, you might as well take your very handsome profit of 15 per cent.; but I cannot exactly recommend another South American Railway stock in which you could make the same profit, as prices have risen very considerably of late. Why not buy the new Uruguay Loan? 2. Yes, a very fair opportunity still. 3. Yes. 4. Yes. 5. No reason to sell now; on the contrary, it would be preferable to hold for a recovery. 6. I do not like the Gold Exploration of West Australia at all. 7. The only course is to join the re-construction and sell after. 8. Mainland Consols are distinctly promising; and so are the other shares mentioned in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Mug.—1. I am not aware of this circumstance. 2. I do not believe in Simpson's Lever Chains. 3. Mainland Consols should be bought on a reaction. Torc.—No one was ever ruined by taking profits, and you might as well clear yours in the stocks mentioned. As regards New Enfield Cycles, I do not like the concern.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

Although the banks are trying to maintain rates for money, there appears to be little prospect of their succeeding for any length of time. It is true that the Russian loan is in sight, but that will no doubt be chiefly issued in France and Germany, and should not disturb our market to any extent. In fact, with a considerable amount of gold on the way to this country, rates in the money market will ease off further. Consols are lower at 113⅜. Silver is slightly better for the week at 31½d., and Rupee paper has again eased off to 64¼. The Chinese Seven per Cent. Silver loan is quoted 119½. Brewery shares have been weak, and Allsopps declined sharply to 176, recovering to 179, while Guinness are lower at 640. In Nitrate Rails very little business has transpired, and the shares are again easier at 7⅜. There has been no improvement in the shares of Nitrate-producing Companies, and the publication of the contents of a circular issued by the Lagunas Nitrate Company, stating that the statements made by the vendors, the Lagunas Syndicate, Limited, in the original prospectus of the Lagunas Nitrate Company, were not correct, and that an action had thereupon been entered against the Syndicate for a rescission of the contract, has created a disagreeable impression. In Cycle shares a rise to ⅞ premium in Dunlop Deferred has been followed by a reaction to $\frac{11}{16}$ premium, and Dunlop Ordinary are also easier at ¼ premium. Beeston are lower at 5, Cycle Components have been dull, and Cycle Tubes have also eased off to $1\frac{1}{16}$. The French Dunlop Company will, I hear, be shortly placed before the public, and, as far as I can learn, the terms upon which it will be issued will ensure a very successful flotation. I learn that the Distilling and Yeast Company is doing a rapidly-extending business, more especially in yeast, as it compares most favourably with other older makers. Under these circumstances, the Five per Cent. debentures, which can still be picked up at from 104½ to 105½, will probably come into strong demand. Outside stockbrokers are much interested in a recent decision, according to which the gambling laws can be successfully pleaded by clients who have lost money in speculative dealings. A Mr. William Anderson, of 112, Bath-street, Glasgow, is sending out circulars in which he recommends "a guaranteed deposit system," under which he agrees to accept deposits from £5 upwards. He proposes to pay monthly interest at the rate of 16s. 8d. per £5, which would work out to 200 per cent. per annum. This is specially offered to applicants who wish to receive a "stated and positive return, and are unwilling to participate in stock and share transactions." On the face of it, this is an impossible proposition, and as the guarantee appears to be that of the philanthropist himself only, I should think that people would be very ill-advised to deposit their money with Mr. William Anderson. I again ask, who are the people running the Mercantile Bank of Scotland, who figure in the circular as bankers of the enterprising Anderson? Who are Thomas & Co. of 61 and 62, Chancery-lane, and 7 and 8, Southampton-buildings? They send out circulars stating that they are likely to bring out several Companies, in which the receivers of the circulars might feel a special interest, and ask them to enter their names in their (Thomas's) list. Thomas & Co.'s letter-paper bears the following notices:—

If Limited Liability Methods are good for Large Trades they are good for Small Ones too.

 If things are going worse and worse, form a Company and retrieve your position!!

 In the last extremity don't FAIL, but turn your business into a Company!!!

After that I should be very chary of any Companies with which Thomas & Co. may have anything to do. "The Put-and-Call" is the title of a booklet which has been compiled by Mr. Leonard R. Higgins, of the well-known firm of Messrs. Derenberg & Co., and the publishers of which are Messrs. Effingham, Wilson, & Co., Royal Exchange. He supplies in a readable form the answer to the question which has often been put by the uninitiated, What is an option? and places the theory of the value of the put-and-call in a new light before those who have mastered the intricacies of option-dealing.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY;

A DEBT OF HONOUR.

"WHO is the young fellow with the yellow hair, Duff?" whispered Captain Loraine, as he and his friend stood on the outer edge of the small circle gathered round a couple of écarté players at the Nebulus Club.

"Archie Lidyard——"

"Never heard of him; he's got the card-fever pretty strongly, eh?" he added, as they moved away to the other end of the room.

"Young fool!" ejaculated Duff, as he flung himself into a seat and ordered his whisky and soda, "he's just going the pace as fast as he can. I've known him since he was so high, all legs and Eton collar! His mother is a charming woman, but a great deal too weak to deal with a fellow like that."

"Ah!" remarked Loraine, without any great interest, "and who's the man he's playing with?"

"A friend of Val Travers; a colonial, I fancy, Mr. James Ruthven by name. Why will youngsters like Lidyard always choose such opponents?"

"You don't think——"

"Oh, no!" interposed Duff, hastily. "Everything is all square, I've no doubt, only Archie Lidyard 's about as fit to hold a card against a cool-headed, experienced man, as I am to discuss the Apocalypse with the Archbishop of Canterbury. I say, waiter, can't that window be made to shut behind there?" he remarked, testily, to the man who set his glass down beside him. "There's a most abominable draught."

"Yes, sir. I'll see, sir," replied the waiter quickly, as he jumped on to the window-sill behind the couch on which the two friends sat, and began to tussle with the window.

"Is this young friend of yours rich?" asked Loraine, noticing that his companion was still watching the party at the card-table.

"Archie Lidyard? I'm not sure that I should call him a friend of mine. I like his mother, but I've small patience with the young jackanapes. Rich? No, not at present, at any rate; the father was a big ironmaster who made a colossal fortune, and, unluckily for young Hopeful over there, died half a dozen years ago; the man was tolerably clear-sighted, though, and left the bulk of his money to his wife, stipulating that Archie's minority should not terminate till he reached his twenty-fifth year, and that, until that time, his allowance should not exceed a certain figure. He has to get through a couple of years before he attains his majority, and, in consequence, poor Mrs. Lidyard lives in a chronic state of pulling her son out of the mire, paying his debts, and sending him on his way to sin no more! It's terribly hard on the poor woman. He's an only child, and, of course, there's nothing she wouldn't do for him."

"Very sad. But, I say, Duff," broke off Captain Loraine, "it does seem to me that the Nebulus Club is about the coldest place in London."

As he spoke, a window went up with a sharp bang, and the waiter leapt down from behind them.

"You won't feel anything more of the draught now, I think, sir," he said, addressing Duff.

"Oh, is it shut now? You were a precious long time about it."

Some one near the card-table called to the waiter, and he hurried there; at the same moment Archie Lidyard rose.

"No, I won't take my revenge to-night," he said, with an attempt at a laugh; "what's the amount of my debt, Mr. Ruthven?"

"Let me see, five hundred—yes, five hundred and fifty pounds. But there's no hurry if you haven't your cheque-book with you. You can send it round to my hotel any time to-morrow. I don't leave for Paris till the night mail."

"Thank you," said young Lidyard. "I'd sworn off cards or I should have had it with me. You are putting up at the Savoy, I think?"

"Yes, No. 49," replied Ruthven. "You may as well come and lunch with me?"

"I will if I possibly can," said young Lidyard; "but if not, I'll send a cheque round. Stay, though," he exclaimed, suddenly, "I can discharge a portion of my debt at once." The flush deepened on his cheeks as he fumbled in his pocket-book and drew out a cheque; he glanced at it, and his hand shook a little as he held it towards Ruthven. "That is for three hundred," he explained; "you shall have the rest to-morrow."

Ruthven in his turn glanced at the cheque.

"To Eva Lidyard!" he read, half aloud, in a tone of some surprise.

"My mother," replied young Lidyard, a little sharply. "I think you will find the endorsement all right. I will give you an I O U for the balance."

He was about to call for the waiter, when the man, who had been standing at his side throughout the transaction, handed him the writing materials.

Archie Lidyard wrote the acknowledgment, spoke a few words to those round him, and then left the room; it was evident, in spite of the young man's efforts at calmness and unconcern, that the loss was a serious one and the evening's work no laughing matter.

But James Ruthven was naturally in a more cheerful mood. He was not a poor man, but he was far enough from being a millionaire to feel no slight satisfaction at the respectable sum of his winnings. Five hundred and fifty-five pounds was a total worthy of consideration, and it must be confessed that he looked at the slip of paper bearing the pretty signature of "Eva Lidyard" on the back with a certain amount of complacency before retiring to rest.

He was aroused next morning by a loud knocking at his door.

"Eh? Come in—what's the matter; what do you want?" he inquired, starting up.

"A lady to see you, sir?"

"What?"

Ruthven admitted the servant, glancing at his watch as he passed; it was just half-past nine; who could wish to see him so soon.

"A lady to see me, did you say?"

"Yes, sir."

"What sort of a lady?" inquired Ruthven, dubiously.

"I can't rightly say, sir; she's got a thick veil on, and she's all in black."

"Did she give you no card?"

"No, sir."

"Most extraordinary; go down and ask her if she can tell you her business."

In a few minutes he returned.

"It's a Mrs. Lidyard, sir, and she says her business is very private."

"Mrs. Lidyard!" Like a flash the pretty signature at the back of the cheque came back to him. "Ask her into the sitting-room," he said, quickly. "Say I will be with her directly."

He dressed hurriedly; what could she want with him?

"You wish to see me, madam?" he asked, as five minutes later he closed the door of his private sitting-room behind him.

A tall, black-robed figure advanced to him.

"You are very good to come to me," she said, in a broken voice.

Ruthven glanced at her quickly; she looked particularly graceful and elegant in her sable draperies, and the voice was soft and pleasant, in spite of the evident distress and nervousness of the speaker.

"Pray sit down," said Ruthven, drawing forward a chair; but Mrs. Lidyard sank down in one nearer her, her back to the light.

"Will you tell me what I can do for you?" asked Ruthven, gently.

The small, black-gloved hands twisted a handkerchief desperately. Mrs. Lidyard made one or two ineffectual attempts to speak, and at last said,

"You won a large sum last night from my son at cards, Mr. Ruthven?"

"A considerable sum—yes."

"And he—he gave you a cheque for it?"

"For part of it, certainly."

Mrs. Lidyard uttered a groan. Ruthven's astonishment grew. What did it all mean? With what was evidently a great effort his visitor continued—

"A cheque drawn in my favour, purporting to be endorsed by me?"

"Yes."

"I—he—oh!" she broke down sobbing, "the wretched, wretched boy!"

The veil she wore was thick, but not so thick as to disguise her, and Ruthven could see that Mrs. Lidyard was still possessed of very great charms, and the glimpse he caught of snowy hair only made the rest of her face appear more youthful. Grief, under such circumstances, cannot fail to be touching.

"Pray calm yourself, Mrs. Lidyard," he said, soothingly. "You have not yet told me how I can serve you."

Mrs. Lidyard suppressed her agitation and continued—

"I must tell you everything; I can do nothing but throw myself upon your mercy. Yesterday, on going through my accounts, I missed a cheque that had been sent me only the day before. I searched everywhere for it, and not finding it, I finally telegraphed to the bankers stopping payment. I did not at first suspect that——" she hesitated. "I am very unfortunately placed. My son has extravagant tastes, and an income quite insufficient to indulge them." She looked at Ruthven piteously.

"I think I understand," he said, gravely.

"I waited for my son, spoke to him of what I dreaded, implored him to tell me all! And—oh, Mr. Ruthven, have pity on him and on me, and give me back that wretched cheque."

Ruthven rose immediately, and a second later returned.

"You can count on my discretion," he said, pityingly, as he placed the cheque in her hand.

"Oh! how can I thank you?—how can I ever thank you?" she exclaimed, almost hysterically. Then, seeing a small writing-table, she sat down hurriedly.

"May I write you a cheque here——"

He smiled, and she drew a cheque book from the bag she carried.

"Mr. James Ruthven, is it not?"

She began to write, and then turned to him quickly.

"But £300 is not the whole amount. Will you tell it me?"

Ruthven replied shortly, "Five hundred and fifty pounds." It was one thing winning money at the Nebulus from Archie Lidyard, a bit of a coxcomb and a great deal of a fool, quite another thing taking it here in the cold morning light from his mother, still quivering from the anguish she had undergone.

"Here it is," she said, rising. "You see the endorsement was not even a clever forgery," she added, with a little sob.

Ruthven glanced at it; there was a certain similarity in the signatures, no doubt, but the one he had seen last night was firmer, with a touch of masculinity, wanting in this.

No, as she said, it was not even a clever forgery.

"I don't think you know what you have done for me, Mr. Ruthven," she said, offering him her hand. "No, please" — she continued, as he made a movement to accompany her—"I would rather go alone; thank you again, and God bless you!"

James Ruthven was not a sentimental man, but he was rather pleased with Mrs. Lidyard's parting words, though it was perfectly clear to him that he had done little to deserve them, for, after all, it was a clear gain to him to exchange a worthless bit of paper for a cheque for £550.

His complacency remained undisturbed for at least two hours. He breakfasted well, and read his paper with absolute serenity. Then he took a cab to the St. James's-square branch of the Westminster Bank.

The cashier took the slip of paper, and after looking at the signature, honoured Ruthven with a keen glance before disappearing.

"Will you step this way?"

Ruthven looked up astonished, but obeyed, conscious that the clerks were watching him curiously as he was ushered into the manager's sanctum.

"I shall be glad if you will explain how this cheque came into your possession," said the manager, as Ruthven came into the room, while the cashier stood with his hand on the door.

"I really don't understand——" began Ruthven.

"No one," replied the manager, "of the name of Eva Lidyard has an account with this bank?"

"No account!" exclaimed Ruthven. "No account! Why, she wrote this cheque for me not two hours ago."

There was a smile about the manager's eyes as he renewed his request for an explanation of the circumstances by which the cheque had come into Ruthven's possession, and as he unfolded the story of the white-haired, tearful mother imploring his mercy for her wretched son, it deepened there.

"I think it's a matter for the police, Simpkins," he said to the cashier, and turning to Ruthven he remarked, "I expect the cheque you parted with has been cashed by now. Do you remember the name and the bank upon which it was drawn?"

Ruthven's memory was not at fault, and driving thither he found that the manager had guessed correctly. The cheque he had parted with had been presented a couple of hours previously and paid.

Thus it happened that an hour later Ruthven was returning to the Savoy, though in a very different frame of mind from that in which he left it. In fact, he was in a very black humour indeed as he entered his sitting-room, where, to complete his perplexity, Archie Lidyard was seated, with his heels on the mantel and a serene smile on his lips.

"Halloo," said Lidyard, "I've accepted your lunch, but if I'd known I should have had to wait so long for it, I'm d——d if I would not have gone elsewhere."

Ruthven was too excited to take any notice of the remark. He strode up to the young man and looked at him savagely.

"Where's your mother?" he demanded.

It was Lidyard's turn to look astonished. "Where's—my—mother. Why?" It suddenly occurred to him that his host had gone mad, and he grasped a chair as the only weapon of defence handy.

Ruthven saw the look of fear in Lidyard's face. "I beg your pardon, Lidyard, a most extraordinary thing has happened. Your mother called on me this morning——"

"My mother is in Wales," said Lidyard, quietly.

"Then I've been swindled as neatly as ever man was," declared Ruthven. "There's only one thing to do."

"Lunch," remarked Lidyard, sententiously.

When lunch was finished Ruthven had recovered some portion of his serenity. "Nevertheless," he said, as he leaned back in his chair, "I think we'll try Scotland Yard."

* * * * *

And while Scotland Yard busied itself discussing the problem thus presented, a couple of passengers to Nice were comfortably seated in a reserved carriage of the night express.

"Not a bad morning's work, eh?" remarked one of them to his pretty golden-haired companion.

The girl laughed.

"If you don't break the bank at Monte Carlo, Bob, I think I shall go on the stage and play old ladies; that white wig was awfully becoming."

"You managed it beautifully, Nell. There's no knowing what we mayn't be able to do, with my wits and your looks; but any way, this is better than shutting windows for crusty gents at the Nebulus, isn't it?" he added, slipping his arm round her waist.

MUSIC.

LITTLE OR NO GENIUS.

"A LITTLE GENIUS" is more than a little dull. Sir Augustus Harris believed in it, but, as many of us know, "Druriolanus," though an excellent judge of melodrama and pantomime, was more than once a failure in comic opera. One of his earliest productions, backed by an M.P. who must have been Liberal in more senses of the term than one, was a new version of "La Fille de Madame Angot," with a ballet based on the Revolutionary tune "Ça ira." It failed; and even worse was the fiasco at Drury Lane of that awful warning "Frivoli," which was forthwith dubbed "Drivoli," and deserved the title. Nor are we likely to forget the lugubrious efforts at Teutonic fun essayed in German comic opera by the Saxe-Coburg troupe at Drury Lane last summer. To the elder Augustus Harris (who first gave us "The Grand Duchess" in English), to Henderson, Farnie D'Oyly Carte, and George Edwardes, comic opera appeared to come naturally enough. But "Druriolanus" was not in it. Yet it never seemed to strike him that comic opera is, even at best, a poor bargain, while at its worst, thanks to expensive mounting and cast, it is the surest way to lose money. So that when last Easter he went over to Vienna to buy Goldmark's "Cricket on the Hearth," he instead purchased "Der Wunderknabe." He was continually talking about it. If you spoke about the glories of Italian opera he would ask you to wait till you saw "The Little Genius." If you mentioned the certain popularity of the situation "behind the curtain" in the forthcoming Drury Lane melodrama, he would declare it was nothing like the "prodigy" scene in "The Little Genius." If you pointed out to him that he had already altered the title, the plot, and the music of "Der Wunderknabe," and asked him what on earth he had really bought, he shrugged his shoulders in apparent wonder that a writer of experience should not be a better judge. It is possible that Frau Dirkens Drew was a hypnotist. Her ruddy cheeks, aglow with youth and health, her sprightly acting, and her bright smile certainly on Thursday fascinated old stagers, and I can well understand that in a better piece she would arouse very young (or very elderly) men to enthusiasm. Lady Harris, however, necessarily looked at the matter with different eyes. She read the piece, and forthwith sold it. She was wise, and I trust the purchaser is satisfied with his bargain.

Very little in the way of plot seems to satisfy the Viennese, though I have no doubt that in the process of filtration into English the adapters of "Die Wunderknabe" have greatly altered the German original. At the Shaftesbury it is our old friend "The Bohemian Girl" over again. A Scottish nobleman, who married a ballet-dancer, is searching for his long-lost chee-ild. The mother is dead, but the chee-ild has been brought up by an impresario who is the counterfeit presentment of Mr. Hugh Jay Didcott. In the daytime the chee-ild is a girl called Paola, while at night she dons the velvet knickerbockers of the boy violinist, and is styled Paolo. The difference in pronunciation is small, but it perplexes the Shaftesbury artists, most of whom compromise matters by calling the wonder-child "Parlour." Although a prodigy, she is obviously quite innocent of the elements of fiddling, and her style of bowing makes every one glad that she is performing with a soaped bow, the real violin being played behind the scenes. Her papa eventually recognises her—"by the dates," he declares—the Scottish peer who once believed she was a boy owns she is his long-lost cousin; while the daughter of the house, whose father has become a millionaire by discovering coal—or is it gold?—near Edinburgh, marries the accompanist, a gentleman made up after Herr Sauer the pianist, and who has fascinated the lassie by falling in love with her while he is disgracefully tipsy. The music might have carried this sort of thing through if it had not been so obviously a watery imitation of Johann Strauss. The "hit" of the evening was indeed made by Mr. Brockbank's singing of a spirited ditty, "Love and War," from the pen of Mr. J. M. Glover. "Botching," as poor Edward Solomon called it, is in fact the only thing for "The Little Genius," and its best chance of success will lie in giving Miss Dirkens, Mr. Arthur Williams, and Mr. Lonnen an opportunity by again rewriting most of the music and the whole of the libretto.

The question of the next opera season was settled on Friday—somewhat sooner than was generally expected. Lady de Grey, who has taken so great (though not sufficiently acknowledged) a part in the revival of opera, set herself to the task of organising a guarantee fund. Several people had promised, when a certain wealthy subscriber, declaring that her ladyship had done enough for the cause, avoided any further trouble by generously putting down the balance. Mr. Faber, it is understood, is willing to let the theatre for next year, and the Harris trustees will make no difficulty concerning the copyrights. A rival scheme, under which M. Gunsbourg, of Monte Carlo, would have assumed control, has therefore been abandoned, and next season, at any rate, will be at the risk of the subscribers. It will be under the direction of Lord de Grey and Mr. Higgins, who have ample power to appoint any general manager, so that English and American interests are likely to be amalgamated under Mr. Maurice Grau, Mr. Forsyth, of course, continuing the duties which he so ably carried out during Harris's lifetime. Although some of the contracts may not yet be signed, it is understood that the De Reszkes, Mme. Melba, M. Alvarez, M. Plançon, and other leading members of the company will return next season. What will happen afterwards belongs to the future. The lease, at any rate, is still for sale to any one possessing a spare £120,000 or so.

A good story is going round about the late Sir Augustus Harris and Madame Bellincioni, a prima donna who sang here one or two seasons ago. She returned her contract approved, but with a condition that the manager should personally wait upon her first thing in the morning, after every performance, to tender her night's salary. It is only fair to say that when the lady discovered that Harris was almost the only Anglo-Italian operatic manager of recent years who paid twenty shillings in the pound, she at once waived her rights. Another prima donna in Harris's early days was engaged for certain performances, and made a great fuss about receiving the money day by day in advance, for it seems that in previous engagements on the Continent she had been victimised. Harris suggested that he should pay the whole amount down in advance, subject to a little discount of 25 per cent, which, to his surprise and delight, was at once accepted.

An exhibition of musical instruments is now being held at the Agricultural Hall. There are about a thousand pianos, organs, or other instruments on show, but comparatively few decorated pianos or new inventions. In point of fact this exhibition is for trade purposes, and dealers in the country are coming up in large numbers to select their winter stock. The competitions which are going forward are perhaps of less value. No first-rate singer or player was ever introduced to public notice in this competitive fashion.

M. Colonne has exercised the privilege of the other sex, and has again changed his mind. It will be recollected that he announced some concerts with an English orchestra last spring, but became frightened owing to the succes of M. Lamoureux's Paris band. He, therefore, postpor his visit until the autumn, and finally abandoned it altogether. He now has decided to come on October 12, in the thick of the musical festivals, and to bring his Paris orchestra with him. The suggestion to bring his chorus from Paris, for Berlioz' "Faust," is, of course, a self-evident absurdity, though if he likes to postpone his visit for a few weeks, we can promise him a performance at the Albert Hall which will show him how "Faust" should be sung. M. Colonne is at the head of a band of ninety-five performers, each of whom has a pecuniary as well as an artistic interest in the affair.

Sir William Parratt, as "Master of the Musicke," will be responsible for the music at the Royal wedding. A "Chorale" by Dr. Creser, the Chapel Royal, will form a portion of the service. This piece, set to lines, beginning "Source of all Light and Life Divine," is in the usual chorale form, and it will be sung unaccompanied.

Professor Stanford has resigned the direction of the proposed Dublin "Feis," or Musical Festival. The point upon which the Professor split with the authorities seems to have been the engagement of the Manchester Orchestra. No doubt this would have improved the Festival performances, but the local musicians preferred the employment of local players, altogether apart from the fact that the Manchester band would, it appears, have cost £1,500.

London was invaded on Saturday by about 2,000 singers from North and South Wales, who, under the direction of Mr. David Jenkins, of Aberystwyth, gave a special concert at the Crystal Palace in association with the Tonic-Solfa Festival. These choristers were drawn both from farms and collieries, and were reinforced by Welsh vocalists from Liverpool, and 220 London Welshmen. They gave a remarkably fine rendering of Mr. Jenkins' "Psalm of Life," and likewise sang Welsh choruses and hymns, in which a large number of Welsh among the audience joined

The "Grand Duke" was on Saturday replaced at the Savoy by "The Mikado," which had been withdrawn in the height of its success. Whether the "Grand Duke" will be revived when Mme. Palmay returns from her holidays in Hungary remains to be seen. Meanwhile there are fresh rumours that Mr. D'Oyly Carte is thinking of converting the Savoy into a limited liability company, with himself and Sir Arthur Sullivan as co-directors.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—The bridesmaids' dresses for Princess Maud's wedding will be extremely pretty. The material is to be white satin, the seams embroidered in silver in a design of lily of the valley and leaves. Some very light and pretty lace in yellowish cream colour is to be disposed in graceful folds about the low bodices, and will fall in a double frill over the sleeves, which are to consist of a double puff of the satin. These sleeves will reach almost to the elbows. On the left side of the bodices will be fastened a cluster of velvet-petalled geraniums in the deepest shade of pink seen in a poppy—I mean, of course, a pink poppy, not a red one. Another bunch of the flowers is to be worn in the hair at the left side, with a white aigrette, and the adult bridesmaids will carry shower bouquets, also of red geraniums. This union of white and red is in compliment to the bridegroom, being the Danish colours.

The younger bridesmaids, of whom Princess Margaret of Connaught is eldest, being fourteen, and Lady Alexandra Duff, aged five, youngest, are to be very sweetly dressed in satin, the low bodices trimmed with the yellowish creamy lace and a few touches of silver. They will have wreaths of the red geraniums in their flowing hair, and will carry baskets of the flowers on the left arm. It will be a pretty group, all snowy, except the touches of soft, bright red.

The Honiton lace ordered for the trousseau is in a design of roses, shamrock and rose foliage encircling small clusters of flowers, arranged on a groundwork of finest Brussels net. The border consists of a garland of rosebuds.

A black dress has two bodices. The skirt is covered with a single veil of tulle embroidered with jet sequins with a few loops of black satin ribbons. The low bodice is trimmed with beautiful lace, and the demi-toilette one with embroidery in which jet sequins are introduced. A dress of white silk muslin has the waist sewn thickly with steel beads and finished with a knot of pale green ribbon.

A very pretty dress is of barège in the soft and pleasing tone of heliotrope known as "Ophelia," the skirt and sleeves being made of this. The bodice is in ecru guipure over white, with a deep gathered belt of black satin and a white satin collar.

A costume of cream-coloured gauze is trimmed with lace in small frills at the edge of the skirt. The bodice is high and the sleeves rather tight, with puffs only at the top. The skirts of both dresses are flat in front but very full at the back.

Mrs. Sims, of Dawson-street, Dublin, has just made for the Duchess of York a white and silver brocade, with front of rich satin embroidered in silver in a design of roses, acorns, and lilies. The bodice is trimmed with similar embroidery, and the sleeves are white tulle sewn with silver sequins. Perhaps the Duchess will wear this on her sister-in-law's wedding day.

The Duchess of Fife has had a charming dress prepared to wear at her sister's wedding. It is white brocade in a design of roses, buds and leaves, enriched with silver. Appliqués of real lace, on white silk muslin, and outlined with silver sequins, cover the front of the bodice, and the chiffon sleeves have insertions of lace edged with sequins. The Duchess is to wear a bunch of Malmaison carnations, in the Danish tone of red.

Every one is talking of the wonderful dresses in "The Little Genius." Lilla went to see the piece on the second night of its production, and she says that the dresses are so lovely and so numerous that she knows she could never describe them properly. "First," she says, "you fall in love with one that is all a flush of pink, lighted up with silver. Then you see a pale green one trimmed with what looks the finest Brussels showered over with diamonds, and on the green a whole cascade of blue flower petals. Then comes a yellow and pink, with rose leaves whirled over it, and sprays of shaded roses and brown leaves catching folds of pink tulle here and there.

"As to the gowns on the Plage scene at Ostend, they are most skilfully varied in blue and white. Redfern has managed to turn out the whole chorus with not two gowns made alike, and yet the whole of them constructed on the same lines. There is a blue serge with five rows of white braid round the skirt, a white zouave and sleeves, and a blue collar almost hidden with white braid set on in rows close together like that on the skirt. The zouave buttons down in a diagonal direction with small, blue Inverness buttons. Another is also blue serge, made over a front breadth of white satin embroidered in diagonal lines of gold picot braid. Broad white satin ribbons are disposed from waist to hem on either side of this front upon the blue. The bodice is double-breasted with five bullion buttons at each side. The wide white satin revers have crossed anchors embroidered on them in white and gold. The vest, showing above and below the tightly-fitting jacket-bodice, is in satin and gold braid, matching the front of the skirt. The collar consists of folded white satin.

"I am having that gown exactly copied for myself," adds Lilla, and then goes on to describe a wonderful white satin with revers of white moire edged with turquoise velvet. The pretty sleeves button like gloves to the elbows. Also a green and blue silk edged with white lace, the bodice in white satin embroidered with forget-me-nots over chiffon in the two colours. The sleeves are in this, and the hat worn with it is in white fancy rice straw, trimmed with green chiffon and blue, pink roses, and white feathers.

A blue and white striped silk is vandyked with white satin ribbon on the skirt, rosettes marking the points of the vandykes. White chiffon is gathered into the yoke and drawn down under a belt of blue. The accompanying hat is blue and white.

"Then there is," says Lilla, "a dress of green moire flounced with vandyked white chiffon and trimmed with bands of écru lace. Peacock-blue ribbons trim it at shoulder and waist, and a grey silk, with panels piped in white, opens low over white lace. The revers are lined with lace. The sleeves have lace slashes on the outer side. The white hat trimmed with wings and tulle has touches of blue in it."

"And," adds Lilla, as a crowning descriptive touch, "each dress has its own sunshade to match."

Poor Sir Augustus! This "Little Genius" is the very last instance of his large and liberal ideas in dressing a play.

Henley was chiefly remarkable for its heat this year. I shall never forget it. The railway journey was hot and dusty. The river was hot and dingy with innumerable floating particles, refuse from house-boats and lawns. The grass was more brown than green from want of water. On the first day, when we went down, it was, for a few hours, more American than English. Until the Yale race was decided, cornflower blue, with the letter Y magnified enormously, was to be seen on every hand. After Yale had lost, much of this mysteriously disappeared. Ribbons with "Yale" embroidered on them vanished from dresses, and small flags with Stars and Stripes were ignominiously hustled out of sight. In one boat, at least, and, perhaps, in many, the cushions performed a "quick change" immediately the result of the race was known. They had been clothed in Stars and Stripes, but a few dexterous touches detached the American signs and tokens from them, and lo! they showed the Union Jack. These surprising metamorphoses amused us immensely.

The toilettes of many of the American ladies were most patriotic. The Yale colour is cornflower blue, and, hot though the day was, it was largely worn. But other dresses were white, light, cool, and festive, in accordance with the character of the scene and the season, while the word "Yale" appeared in embroidery upon the bodices, the sashes, and, in one instance, on the sleeves. Several blue sunshades had a huge "Y" embroidered in brilliants, and one or two had a small device of Stars and Stripes.

The American gentlemen wore black coats and white waistcoats, what our tailors call Park costume, but some of them had low brown hats. Most of them took boat, the ladies in the most festive of attire, and wearing wonderful hats. For us English it was almost too hot to venture on the river. The clouds seemed to act like grey blankets, and actually increase the heat. No energy was left for action of any kind. It was a day for apathetic endurance of an unusual experience in the matter of caloric. As for us, we took our ease at Clubland, listened vaguely to their band, and from a canopied seat enjoyed the panoramic sight as it unfolded itself before our eyes upon the water.

The French accuse us of taking our pleasures sadly. I always think we take them with far too much exertion. My ideal holiday is to have nothing to think of or keep in mind, and to feel and be as idle as possible. The very active and energetic people who are always proposing to do this, that, and the other, are a horrid nuisance. Just as one gets settled down in the cosiest of basket chairs, or a houseboat, or on a lawn, someone is sure to suggest a drive, or a walk, or a row, or a sail. I like to "stay put" when I am conscious of being supremely comfortable. Do not you? Some people seem to fear that if they do not keep for ever moving about they will lose the use of their limbs. I always avoid most carefully these over-active persons.

All this applies to Wednesday. But on Thursday we went down again to see some of the final heats, and a fresh breeze made the riverside delightful, while brilliant sunshine brought out all the beauties of the scene ashore and afloat. We enjoyed this time the hospitalities of the Isthmian Club—as usual, the best managed of all the Henley enclosures. At luncheon—the most delightful luncheon, Amy!—we found ourselves next to a table full of distinguished foreigners, who turned out to be Prince Colonna, with Donna Isabella and Donna Vittoria Colonna, the Duc de Fraquito and Princess Leguila. The British aristocracy were represented on the Isthmian lawn by the Marchioness Conyngham, Lord Ormathwaite, Lord and Lady Walsingham, and I know not who beside.

Five-dollar gold pieces are not well known in England, and on that day they puzzled the Henleyites considerably.

I never saw anything like the "bargains" this year at the clearance sales. I am really obliged to put, metaphorically, cotton in my ears, and keep saying words of distrust and "sour-grapes"-suggestion in my inmost mind, or I should ruin myself with expenditure, so tempting are the cheaperies and so dulcet is the voice of the charmer. Mme. Oliver Holmes has the very daintiest lingerie at such prices as astonish and delight the purchaser who appreciates "fine linen" as much as "purple." Mme. Nicolle, now removed next door to her old abode, is selling lovely clothes for the price of unlovely, and will continue to do so for another fortnight.

Bluette is having a sale of her hats with great reductions, at 41, Green-street, beginning on the 20th and lasting for a week, after which the establishment will be closed, except for written orders, until October 1, when Mme. Bluette is to bring models of all the autumn fashions in headgear from Paris.

Yet another tea-room has been opened by a courageous lady. It is at 25, Old Bond-street, and is called "The Ladies' Syndicate Tea-Rooms." The room is very tastefully and prettily got up, and the tea is delicious—rather an important point. Dainty decorations are all very well, but they do not go beyond a certain point in reviving fainting spirits after some hours' shopping.

We were not able to find time until Saturday to go to the Exhibition and Sale of Indian Arts and Industries at the Albert Hall. The Marchioness of Lansdowne had opened it on the previous Monday, and Lady Harris performed the same good office on Saturday. At four o'clock her ladyship entered the hall, where she was met by Mrs. D. Carmichael and other ladies, some Indian natives, and five pretty little girls, dressed in cream-coloured frocks, and crowned with wreaths of small pink and white roses, by whom she was presented with a large bouquet of lovely roses. Lady Harris gave an interesting address on her own knowledge of India and its people. During a long residence in that country she had observed the extreme cleverness of the natives in manual works of art. Much that they produced was of such fine texture that, at times, she had been tempted to think it should be discouraged instead of encouraged, because it very often caused blindness. But, through its being the staple commodity of that country she had, when there, withheld her opinion, and was now ready to offer any assistance in her power for the cause in hand. The pottery, which resembles Wedgwood's, was offered at low prices; the ivory and wood-carving were very finely wrought, as were also the gold and silver embroideries. The Incorporated Society for the Encouragement and Preservation of Indian Art is under the patronage of T.R.H. the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke and Duchess of York, and H.R.H. the Princess Mary Adelaide of Teck. Refreshments were served in the Café Chantant, in which room the Æolian Ladies' Orchestra played charmingly on each day. Much interest is felt by those who have knowledge of India in the object of the exhibition, which is an endeavour to spread abroad the fact that the natives of that once rich country are now in poverty, owing largely to the introduction of machinery, constructed to send forth articles so closely resembling handwork that the old manual labour is no longer in demand. Regret was expressed that the exhibition took place during the week of the Henley Regatta and Harrow and Eton cricket match at Lord's, as otherwise the attendance might have been larger.

At luncheon the other day we had a shoulder of lamb boned and stuffed in this way. It is an excellent dish for a lunch party :—

Take a nice plump shoulder of lamb, cut it all round the edge, and with a small sharp knife take out all the bones, except the knuckle, without damaging the skin of the meat; now cut away the meat from inside the shoulder and pass it through the mincing machine with 8 oz. of raw lean veal. Now season the shoulder with pepper, salt, a suspicion of chopped shallot, and a sprinkling of chopped parsley. Put a layer of slices of bacon on this, then spread it with a layer of the forcemeat, season in the same way as before, and garnish with a layer of slices of truffle and sliced hard-boiled yolks of eggs. Cover with remainder of the forcemeat, on which put some slices of bacon, now fold the meat over, sew it around the edge, and fix the knuckle into an upright position with a skewer. Place the shoulder in a braising pan, cover with a greased paper, add an onion, a carrot, 6 peppercorns, a blade of mace, a bouquet of herbs, and sufficient stock to nearly cover the meat. Bring the pan to the boil on the stove, then put it in the oven to simmer for two hours, remove to cool in the liquor. Now drain the meat on a cloth, take out the skewer and string and brush it over with some warm glaze, place it on a dish, and decorate it tastefully with triangular-shaped pieces of aspic jelly and sprigs of parsley.

Now that tomatoes are plentiful, try this tomato and fish chowder :—

Put a tablespoonful of chopped onion into a stewpan and fry it with 1 oz. of butter until on the point of turning brown; mix with a tablespoonful of flour and ½ pint of stock or water; stir until boiling, then strain into a basin. Dissolve a small piece of butter in the stewpan and put in a layer of sliced potato, then a layer of fish, which may be whiting or haddock, cut in large dice-shaped pieces, sprinkle the fish with chopped parsley, thyme, and onion, dust with salt and pepper, then put a layer of sliced tomatoes, from which the skins and pips have been removed; now repeat the layers of fish, potatoes, seasoning, and tomatoes until all the ingredients are used, making potatoes the last layer, pour in the sauce and stew the whole gently on the side of the stove for three-quarters of an hour. Turn the chowder on to a dish, sprinkle the top with browned bread crumbs, and garnish the base with triangular-shaped pieces of fried bread.

Ever your loving Cousin, MADGE.

P.S.—Have you ever seen such an incongruity as an LL.D with dimples? I have! M.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL.

VERY POOR, FREE, and UNENDOWED.

The only Hospital available for a population of one million.

An urgent APPEAL is made for FUNDS to support the work of relieving 1,200 In-patients and 30,000 Out-patients annually.

Holloway, N. L. H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

CANCER WARDS of the MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—

35 beds devoted to Hopeless Incurable Cases.

A FUND of £12,000 is being raised for the purpose of erecting a separate BUILDING for the accommodation of the FEMALE CANCER PATIENTS hitherto located in the hospital, an improvement which is urgently demanded on the ground of the health, comfort, and convenience of the patients. Towards the cost of the new building the sum of £9,000 has been paid or promised, and an URGENT APPEAL is now made for the balance of £3,000 still required. Patients are admitted without letters or any recommendation, save that of necessity, and are permitted to remain until "relieved by art or released by death."—F. CLARE MELHADO, Secretary-Superintendent.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.

For the Reception and Treatment of Sufferers from Infectious Fevers.

Each patient pays a fee equal to about a fourth of his cost, the balance falling upon the funds of the Institution.

Subscribers of a guinea and upwards for more than one year are Governors as long as they continue to subscribe. Donors of 10gs. or more in one sum are Governors for life.

Domestic servants of Governors and certain employés of firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of charge.

22,000 patients have been treated here in the last 25 years.

154 sufferers, nearly all with scarlet fever, were refused admission for want of room last year.

The Committee earnestly ask for ADDITIONAL HELP to enable them to provide accommodation for all who desire admission.

Donations and annual subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Secretary at the Hospital. Major W. CHRISTIE.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire, further develop, and work the Dunallan Gold Mines, situate about two miles north of the township of Coolgardie, Western Australia.

The property consists of two gold-mining leases known as "The Dunallan No. 1" (Lease No. 1,555), comprising 12 acres, and "The Dunallan North" (Lease No. 2,169), comprising 24 acres, making together an area of 36 acres. The leases are granted direct from the Government of Western Australia on the usual conditions.

The Dunallan Mine Syndicate, Limited, who are the Owners and Vendors, have spent several thousand pounds on the acquisition and vigorous development of the Mines during the last twelve months. Four reefs have been discovered on the property, and four shafts have been sunk. The results obtained are most satisfactory, and the further expenditure of capital in development should yield quick returns. The railway to Coolgardie having been completed is an important factor in the economical working of the Mines.

The great value of the properties can be gauged from the reports of the well-known mining engineers, A. Octavius Watkins, A.R.S.M., F.G.S., and G. R. Fearby, M.E., extracts from which are set out below.

It will be observed that Mr. Fearby, who has the reputation of being a very careful and cautious mining engineer, says that £63,000 worth of ore is in sight.

Mr. A. Octavius Watkins, in the course of a long and detailed report, set out at great length in the full prospectus, says:—

"The principal reef on this property is the main reef, known as the Dunallan, and up to the present most of the work done has been confined to this reef, although there are three other distinct reefs on the property. It can be traced by its outcrop and numerous costeens and trenches exposing it to the extent of the full length of the two leases, a distance of 34 chains. Its width varies from 80 ft. to 4 ft., but I estimate that it will average for the full length between 10 ft. and 15 ft. The country rock on the hanging wall is a decomposed micaceous, chloritic schist, and on the foot wall a decomposed diorite. The hanging wall of the reef, especially where exposed near the mouth of the main shaft, is well scored. This scoring of the wall of the reef was produced by the relative movements of the reef, probably with the foot-wall country rocks, and the hanging-wall country rocks. This, together with the fact of the country rocks on each side being dissimilar, are unquestionable proofs that the reef is a true fissure vein, and consequently will be found to continue to the greatest depths attainable by mining.

"My estimate of the total cost of mining and milling is that it will not exceed 8 dwt. of gold per ton.

"There is a very suitable position for the battery on rising ground near the main shaft.

"The configuration of the ground and nature of the surface is such that a small outlay on a dam would catch a large quantity of water in time of rain. But apart from this source, a shaft sunk to a depth of from 150 to 200 feet would obtain a fairly good supply of water for battery purposes, as has been proved to be the case almost everywhere in this district where a similar depth has been attained.

"There is plenty of timber in the neighbourhood suitable for all ordinary mining purposes and fuel.

"Considering the highly payable character of such a great width of stone, viz., 10 ft., I have no hesitation in saying that this Mine should pay dividends from the starting of the battery. And, on being further developed, more especially at the junction of the main reef with the eastern branch, richer stone will be found. I have every confidence in recommending it as a remunerative and sound investment."

Mr. Fearby, in a report detailing in great detail the very large amount of development work done on the properties, and set out in the full prospectus, says:—

"The country rock is of a soft, decomposed micaceous slate, very nicely laminated; this country occurs on both sides of the reefs. This class of country is such that a reef can easily live in depth in and in almost every case the gold-bearing reefs are found to have the gold evenly distributed through the ore as depth is reached.

"This class of country is identical to that of the well-known 'Hill End' Mine at the 'Broad Arrow,' which is now producing such splendid results; in many cases I have found the gold in this Mine to be five (5) and even six (6) feet in the slate away from the reef.

"At the present I estimate it that there are 36,000 tons of ore in sight in the different parts of the Dunallan Lease, and this is putting down at a very low estimate, and, taking the assays all through at 10 dwt., there is a big thing in it, putting the gold down as low as £3 10s. per oz., and all of the West Australian gold goes from £3 15s. to £4 per oz. At £3 10s. there is a total of £63,000 worth of ore ready to be worked immediately a battery could be started."

In many parts of Western Australia want of water has proved a serious obstacle to mining operations, but in the locality of the Dunallan Gold Mines, this difficulty fortunately does not appear to exist, experience having shown that, in sinking, water is met with at a reasonable depth.

Colonel Burton-Brown, who is about to return to England from Coolgardie after visiting Western Australia as a mining expert, was cabled to, on behalf of the Directors, as to whether he would accept a seat on the Board of Directors. After inspecting the property, in company with an expert selected by himself, he cabled accepting. His presence on the Board will obviously be of great value.

A sketch map accompanies the prospectus, showing the position and development of the mines.

The well-known mining engineer, Mr. Brian Hooker, is the manager of the Dunallan Gold Mines.

The treatment of two samples of quartz from the 12-acre lease by Messrs. Johnson, Matthey, & Co., Assayers to the Bank of England, gives 3 ozs. 1 dwt. 12 grs. and 23 ozs. 9 dwts. 12 grs. respectively per ton, according to their certificate, which may be inspected at the offices of the Company.

The statements in the Prospectus are based upon the reports quoted, full copies of which can be seen by intending applicants for shares at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

The purchase consideration has been fixed by the Vendors, who are the promotors, at £65,000, payable as to £7,000 in cash, £28,333 in fully paid-up shares, and the balance in cash or shares; or partly in cash and partly in fully paid-up shares, at the option of the Directors, thus leaving £20,000 available for working capital as required.

The only contract to which the Company is a party is that for the purchase of the property, and made between the Dunallan Mine Syndicate, Limited, of the one part, and Charles Frederick Flack, as Trustee on behalf of the Company, of the other part, dated the 9th May, 1896.

The above contract, the original reports of Mr. Watkins and Mr. Fearby, and a print of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be seen by intending subscribers at the offices of the Solicitors to the Company in London, and copies at the offices of the Solicitors in Glasgow.

Applications for shares must be made on the form below, or on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers or Secretary, with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

The Directors will be prepared in due course to issue Share Warrants to Bearer, and any subscriber can have same on notifying the Directors and paying the necessary stamp duty.

A Stock Exchange quotation of the Company's shares will be applied for as soon as possible.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Auditors, Solicitors, and at the offices of the Company.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of undertaking the business of a Mining, Prospecting, and Finance Company in the Colonies of New Zealand, Australia, Tasmania, and elsewhere.

The Company has already in hand a considerable amount of business, which will be dealt with immediately.

The Company has made arrangements to secure the services of Mr. H. S. Herbert Cox (of Messrs. Bainbridge, Seymour & Co.), who acted for many years as Mining Engineer to the New Zealand Government, and who will appoint competent Mining Managers to the Company's properties.

A settlement and quotation on the London Stock Exchange will be applied for in due course.

A HOME INDUSTRY, showing a net profit of over 12 per cent. per annum on the Ordinary Shares, after providing the 5½ per cent. Cumulative Dividend payable on the Preference Shares.

The LIST of APPLICATIONS for SHARES will CLOSE on or before THURSDAY, the 16th day of JULY, and the following morning for the Country.

PROSPECTUS.

The Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring, as going concerns, the business of Cowell & Drew, also the prosperous and progressive wholesale and retail businesses of Grimmond & Co., John Craft, and Rush & Co., together with the freehold factories at Acton, covering an area of about 5 acres, and extending and developing the same.

The businesses are all very old-established, occupy excellent positions in suitable neighbourhoods, and have for many years past been under the sole control and management of Mr. R. C. Drew.

The present circle of customers is very numerous, and includes members of the Royal Family, together with many of the principal City and West End Hotels and Clubs.

The Laundry and Dye Works of Rush & Co. at Acton is one of the largest in the Kingdom, and has recently been rebuilt and fitted with engines and machinery of the very latest type; it covers a large extent of freehold land with several acres of outside drying ground, stables, offices, workshops, and hot-air drying-rooms of the most approved kind.

The number of Employées and Assistants is large, and with a view of their having a direct interest in the success of the Company, it is proposed as far as possible to make a judicious allotment in full of the Shares to such of them as may apply, so that they will have a personal interest in the increased prosperity of the businesses.

The accounts of the businesses for three years ending 31st December, 1895, have been examined by the well-known Chartered Accountants, Messrs. Deloitte, Dever, Griffiths, & Co., 4, Lothbury, London, E.C., whose certificate is as follows :—

4, Lothbury, London, 8th July, 1896.

To the Directors of Cowell, Craft & Co., Limited.

Gentlemen,—We have examined the accounts of the following businesses for the three years ending 31st December, 1895 :—

Messrs Cowell & Drew, butchers, 38, St. George's-place, Knightsbridge.
Messrs. Craft & Co., provision merchants, 47, St. George's-place, Knightsbridge.
Messrs. Grimmond & Co., greengrocers and fruiterers, 17, Motcomb-street, S.W.
Messrs. Rush & Co., Steam Laundry and Dye Works, Steyne Mills, Acton.

After charging all working expenses and setting aside a sum which, in our opinion, is sufficient to meet the losses through bad debts and depreciation of leases, but making no provision for the management of Mr. R. C. Drew, the net profits were :—

For the year ending 31st December,	1893	... £15,250 16 0
,, ,,	1894	... 13,968 3 2
,, ,,	1895	... 15,837 3 10
Total		... £45,056 3 0

or an annual average of £15,018 14s. 4d.

Yours faithfully,

DELOITTE, DEVER, GRIFFITHS & CO.

Taking the above-mentioned average net annual profit of £15,018 14s. 4d. as a basis of calculation, apart from the increase which is shown in the 1895 figures		£15,018 14 4
Less 5½ per cent. dividend on 75,000 Cumulative Preference Shares of £1 each	£4,125 0 0
Less 12 per cent. dividend on 75,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each	9,000 0 0
Available for reserve and management fees		£1,893 14 4

It will be seen that the present net income covers the amount required for the payment on the Preference Shares nearly four times over.

The Directors hope to earn additional profits by opening new departments at the various shops, the premises being in many cases sufficiently extensive for this purpose, the aim of the Directors being to make each shop a General Store as far as may be practicable.

The Directorate includes men of many years' business experience, and Mr. R. C. Drew, having signed an agreement to act as Managing Director for a period of five years, the Company will have the benefit of a continuation of the direction and management which have hitherto made the businesses so successful.

The former proprietor of the businesses has entered into a covenant restraining him from trading for ten years within ten miles of any of the above premises. The Company takes over the businesses as going concerns from the date of completion of the several purchases, and they will be carried on without interruption by the present staff. All the book debts are to be collected by the Company and handed over to the vendor, he discharging all liabilities up to the date of completion.

The success which has attended the conversion into Joint Stock Companies of large retail trading establishments is evidenced by the following approximate present market quotations :—

Names of Company.	Par value of Ordinary Share.	Market value on July 9, 1896
Harrod's Stores, Limited	£1	£6⅞ to £7⅛
John Barker & Company Limited.....	£1	£2⅞ ,, £3⅛
D. H. Evans & Company, Limited.....	£1	£2 7/16 ,, £2 9/16

The purchase price has been fixed by the Vendors for the above-mentioned businesses, freehold, leasehold premises, machinery, plant, horses, carts, and effects at £130,000, payable in cash or Shares, or partly in each, at the option of the Company.

£20,000 of the present issue will be provided for working Capital, the consumable stocks being taken over at cost price.

The following agreements, providing for the purchase of the businesses, have been entered into, viz.:—An Agreement dated 6th July, 1896, between Richard Collins Drew and John Jervis, and an Agreement dated 9th July, 1896, between John Jervis, one of the Vendors, who pays all expenses of formation and flotation of the Company up to allotment, including brokerage, and Sidney Butler White, as Trustee for the Company.

The businesses will be taken over subject to and with the benefit of the leases and agreements under which the properties are held, and to all existing contracts of the ordinary trade character, but including, as they do, numerous contracts with manufacturers, agents, and others, they cannot be specified. There are also contracts in connection with the subscription of part of the capital and the promotion of the Company, to none of which the Company is a party. As all or some of these contracts may fall within Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, applicants for Shares will be deemed to have had notice thereof, and to have waived all rights to be supplied with particulars of such contracts, and to have agreed with the Company, as Trustee for the Directors and other persons liable, not to make any claim whatsoever, nor to take any proceedings under the said Section in respect of any non-compliance therewith or otherwise.

Applications for Preference and Ordinary Shares should be made on the forms accompanying the Prospectus, and forwarded to the London and County Banking Company, Limited, 21, Lombard-street, London, E.C., or any of its branches, with a remittance for the amount of deposit.

Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and if a less amount be allotted than is applied for, the surplus of the deposit will be applied to the amount payable on the Shares.

The Purchase Agreements, the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the Report above referred to, can be seen at the Office of the Company's Solicitors.

Application for a quotation and settlement on the Stock Exchange will be made in due course.

Prospectuses and Application Forms may be obtained from the Bank and its branches, from the Brokers and other officials, and at the Company's Offices.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Corporation has been formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of a Parent Financial Mining and Exploration Corporation, more particularly in connection with the British Colonies of Western Australia, New Zealand, and British Columbia; it will also act as Founders and Agents for the purposes of acquiring options upon proved mining properties in the goldfields of these Colonies, with the view to their re-sale to subsidiary Companies formed by the Corporation to acquire the same.

The Corporation has already secured several options on mining properties in the before-mentioned Colonies of the greatest value, and although the same have been obtained free of any charge, the Directors have a perfectly free hand to accept or reject all or any of them, so that the Corporation will be in a position to commence operations, not only unfettered, and with plenty of the best business in hand, but with the whole of the subscribed capital available simply and solely for the objects of the Corporation.

The Directors, however, consider that by exercising the right to acquire any of the following properties on which options have been secured, profits of a very handsome character will be quickly obtained for the Shareholders, thereby enabling them to shortly declare an exceedingly substantial dividend.

The property has been most favourably reported upon by Mr. Geo. A. Koch, M.E., Mr. William Craib, M.E., Mr. C. F. Marsh, M.E., and Mr. W. Pellew-Harvey, M.E.

The great success achieved by similar undertakings is a practical proof of the exceedingly profitable character of the business which this Corporation will undertake, and although it may be suggested that the same measure of success cannot be obtained by every one, it is, however, only right to state that there has hardly been an institution of a similar character formed within the past two years that has not made remarkable profits, and whose shares do not at the present time command very considerable premiums.

Application for Shares should be made on the form enclosed with the Prospectus, and forwarded, with the required deposit, to the Bankers of the Corporation. If the number of shares allotted be less than that applied for, the surplus will be credited towards the amount payable on allotment; where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers, and at the Offices of the Corporation.

July 10, 1896.

The LIST of APPLICATIONS for SHARES will CLOSE for both town and country on THURSDAY, the 16th day of July, 1896.

An interim dividend for the last three months has been declared on the ordinary shares at the full rate of 15 per cent. (For further particulars see report of meeting of the 7th July.)

The ordinary shares are entitled to a preferential dividend of 15 per cent., and an equal division of the remaining profits with the deferred shares.

Each subscriber to this issue for every £200 ordinary share capital will have the right to one deferred share at £10.

Applicants can pay up in full on allotment, and shares will then rank for dividend on the amount actually paid.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Corporation was registered on the 5th day of March, 1896, for the purpose of organising and carrying on the business of a Development and Finance Corporation on similar lines to other Exploring and Development Companies, and principally for the purpose of acquiring options on mining and other properties, and dealing in shares of mining companies; as well as engaging in the formation and issue of mining companies, the principal field of the Company's operations being the Western Australian goldfields.

The business of the Corporation also comprises that of a financial and general agency business, the underwriting of new issues of proved undertakings, and the investment of capital in companies, the success of which is practically assured.

No public issue has yet been advertised, the necessary capital to commence operations having been subscribed privately, which has enabled the business to be completely organised, and afforded an opportunity of establishing the undertaking on a sound basis, and proving the satisfactory and profitable nature of the operations of the Corporation.

Although the Corporation has been at work for such a short period, the directors have been able to secure many important and valuable mining interests in the Hannan's District, which is now generally believed in the best-informed quarters to contain by far the richest auriferous deposit in the whole of Western Australia; also subsidiary Companies have been formed, and valuable options and contracts secured, from which profits have resulted and a dividend distributed, leaving a considerable margin for the payment of additional dividends. Quite recently the Hannan's North Crœsus Gold Mining Company, Limited, has been formed, from which a large return in the shape of dividend in cash and bonus in shares will accrue to the shareholders of the Corporation.

Several other leases owned by the Corporation are in a sufficiently advanced state of development to justify their re-sale to subsidiary companies.

A large quantity of business is in progress, and from contracts already concluded, very large profits are assured. The Corporation has also at the present time under offer several valuable leases, as well as options and contracts, which afford exceptional opportunities for a large extension of the business and the profitable employment of an additional amount of capital.

In order that the Corporation may be placed in a position to secure additional leases, and to complete the formation of subsidiary companies, the directors have decided to make a further issue of shares and to invite public subscriptions to the same.

The increased strength in the resources of the Corporation afforded by the funds arising from this issue will assure success to its operations, and almost entirely eliminate any speculative element from the transactions, at the same time enabling the Corporation to secure the additional profits.

The £1 deferred shares of the Corporation are now being dealt in on the London Stock Exchange at between £9. 15s. and £10. 5s., and the £1 ordinary shares at between £1. 7s. 6d. and £1. 12s. 6d.

As will be seen from the foregoing, the Corporation has already made handsome profits, and from the business in hand these will be largely augmented.

In view of the exceptionally strong position in which the Corporation now stands, the present issue of the ordinary shares will be made at the price of £1. 5s. per share, and subscribers for 200 ordinary shares will have the privilege of securing one deferred share at £10.

Particulars of the properties owned by this Corporation and full prospectuses can be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, and the Offices of the Corporation.

THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF GALICIA.

Three Petroleum Companies recently issued in Amsterdam have been gigantic successes, and the Shares already stand at premiums varying from 300 to 800 per cent. The fourth and last issue has been subscribed for in a phenomenal manner. According to the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant of 3rd July, 1896, I find that, although the amount of capital asked for amounted to 600,000 florins only, the applications reached the immense sum of 20,209,500 florins. The Company I refer to is the Netherlands Petroleum Company of Galicia.

This heavy demand, or I think I might rightly say boom, foreshadows an immense future to the Standard Oil Company of Galicia, which, I understand, will shortly be issued simultaneously in London and Amsterdam, for people will follow the tide which caught but at the flood leads on to fortune. Perhaps it is an opportune moment to enquire into the claims of the Standard Oil Company of Galicia, which, as I have already said, is on the eve of flotation.

With reference to the field itself, there can be little doubt but that it is one of the richest in existence, and furnishes an almost unlimitable supply of petroleum of an excellent quality. But there is another and equally important item in its favour. It is situated in the very centre of the largest petroleum-consuming district in the world.

Under those conditions it follows, as a matter of fact, that an enormous revenue is to hand in the saving of carriage or freightage, for until recently half the oil has come from America or Russia. And the old adage that money saved is money gained is once more demonstrated and amplified. The property contains a superficial area of 218 English acres, and there are already 44 wells in full production, whilst 10 more are in course of being sunk, and in most of these the oil level will shortly be reached.

The wells once sunk, the petroleum industry in all probability shows a larger income to hand than any other. Where, for example, in an ordinary commercial enterprise it would necessitate the employment of two or three thousand hands—in, say, mining operations—to produce a certain amount of money, in the case of petroleum 30, or at most 50, could employ the same capital and produce equal results in the way of profit. Nature is prolific, and once her secrets are discovered the rest is easy. Let us see what the experts say with reference to the possibilities of the Standard Oil Company's properties.

According to the report of Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Company, Chartered Accountants, of London, this year's yield is represented by the following table:

Yield.	Barrels of 150 kilogrammes.
January 1896	36,068
February, ,, ...	41,937
March, ,, ...	36,558
April, ,, ...	39,418

During the first 18 days in May the books show that the output was 24,681 barrels, but our representative had not an opportunity of substantiating a portion of this yield by comparison with the sales and with the stock.

Our representative found that there were 17 new wells being sunk on the above-mentioned properties, including a new boring in the Caecilie district belonging to the Messrs. Gartenberg, which reached the oil strata while he was present. The rush of oil from this well was so large that it could not at first be controlled. On 20th May the workmen were able to fix the piping, and the yield of oil for the following three days, as shown by the capacity of the tanks filled, was as follows:—

21 May, 1896	2,660 barrels
23 ,, ...	2,765 ,,

Dr. Rudolf Zuber, Professor of Geology, Lemberg University, states in his report:—"That the two oil-bearing properties proposed to be acquired by the Company are situated in the most productive part of the oil zone," and also that "The oilfields of Schodnica are the richest and best known in Galicia, and the oil wells there are remarkable, not only for their large production, but also for their steadiness and regularity of flow."

This opinion was backed to the hilt by Mr. C. J. Van Schelle, Director of the Royal Netherlands Indian Petroleum Company, and Mr. L. Poock, of the Hanover Petroleum Wells Company, Hanover, who estimates that the net profit, without contemplating any increase of output, but making allowance for royalties averaging 10 per cent., will be equal to at least 2,740,000 marks, say £137,000 per annum.

This is evidence sufficient as to possibilities.

We have still to consider that the petroleum industry in Austria is protected by an import duty on foreign petroleum of two florins gold per 100 kilos. (about 6s. per barrel of 150 kilos.) on crude, and ten florins (about 30s. per barrel of 150 kilos.) on refined oil.

I am especially glad to see that the eminent services of Mr. Boverton Redwood have been retained as consulting adviser to the Company.

GILBERT D. SUTHERLAND.

The following is a telegram which appeared in the Daily News of the 30th of April, 1896:—

New Petroleum Well in Galicia.—Our Vienna correspondent telegraphs:—"A telegram from Drohobycz, in Galicia, states that near Schodnica, a few hundred yards from the famous Jacob's Pit, a petroleum well has been discovered, which it is supposed yields at least forty cisterns of oil per day. The surrounding fields are flooded with oil and approach to the well is impossible." (40 cisterns equal 2,800 barrels of 150 kilos each.)

The above refers to the Cecilie Well, one of the new wells on the property of this Company.

The estate and oilfields acquired by the Anglo-Austrian Bank in Vienna about two years ago are also in the Schodnica district, and quite close to the two properties secured by this Company.

The Bank worked their fields very successfully up to the end of 1895, and in the beginning of the present year floated a Company—"The Petroleum Industrie Gesellschaft Schodnica" (the Schodnica Petroleum Industry Company). The Shares of 250 florins (about £21) were introduced on the Vienna Bourse on the 8th of March last at a high premium, and are quoted to-day 740 to 780 florins (about £61).

One of the most curious things one discovers is that the Shares of the great oil companies of America are retained entirely by our cousins on the other side of the water.

Everybody knows, who knows anything at all, that the Standard Oil Company of America has realised fortune after fortune for those who have been lucky enough to be in it from its initiation. No wonder, therefore, that these oil shares have never arrived as a security in the metropolis of the world, and that, both scarce and precious, they continue to rest peacefully in the hands of those who esteem their value.

Petroleum may be said to have a small past, a big present, and a magnificent future. In the ordinary way the Cockney only understands its use as a flambeau to illuminate the surrounding neighbourhood of the itinerant stall. To the world in general, petroleum means light, but to those who take time to go into details and think of the future petroleum means infinitely more than this. We have here both light and fuel, and the possibilities of the utilisation of petroleum in the time to come are enormous.

We have had booms in water shares, gas shares, railway shares, and any amount of other home shares. We have had keen competition to obtain even a small interest in any big going concern such as our provision stores in London and provincial towns. We have recently been astounded and surprised at the phenomenal prices which anything connected with bicycles has fetched; and we have been paralysed with the conjuring of the Diamond, Gold, and other South African Kings, to say nothing of the probabilities (or is it possibilities?) of Australia and many other countries beyond the geography of an ordinary dweller in cities. Home industries have for the moment came to the front, and very rightly so.

American securities have long been at a discount, but the greatest and best security that America ever had to give or to offer, and which has never been either given or offered, is the security of her petroleum wells.

Messrs. Rothschilds, with their magnitude of wealth, with their portfolio of everything that may be desirable, have yet lacked the opportunity of placing petroleum oil wells before the English public.

With all due respect to America, and with every possible word of compliment or, if you will, praise (for the brotherhood between Old England and the land of Stars and Stripes is immense, as witness the dinner the other night by the Ancients to the Prince of Wales and the Honourable Artillery Company at the Holborn Restaurant), it is neccesaary that I should place on record a fact, and the fact is this, that we have in Europe an oilfield far more prolific than has ever been discovered on the Yankee Continent. In Galicia, a country which is absolutely in the centre of the oil-consuming districts, there are numerous wells, recently discovered, which pour out a volume of oil day by day not excelled by the American disgorgements even at the time when all the world was wondering at the enormity of the output.

Within the last month it was necessary in the districts of Schodnica, to which I make particular mention, absolutely to shut down the vomit.

Even with a storage of 186,000 barrels the owners of the Galician wells had no option.

By shutting down, I mean actually fastening back the output of products from nature's laboratory; and I very much question whether it will be possible within our life-time for these Schodnica oilfields to be worked to their full extent, since the supply is practically unlimited, and delivers itself without any labour.

It is perfectly true that the future utilisation of oil will be infinitely larger than the demand of the past, but it must double, treble, and quadruple itself to consume anything like the volume produced here.

The motors, which are booming in the immediate future, will rely for their speed and power upon petroleum; our trams will run and our ships steam by means of the same medium; but apart from all the future possibilities in the coming years, or it may be centuries, the Schodnica oil, like that in the widow's cruse, will not be exhausted.

The Galician properties have one great commercial advantage—whereas in England the price of paraffin may be something like a pound per barrel, in Galicia the protecting duty alone is no less than 30s. Hence the Galician Oil Companies must necessarily show an extravagant profit over any other oil investment in the world.

We have never had a petroleum oilfield, as I have already suggested, placed upon the English market, and, from what I can see, it seems that such an industry is absolutely unique.

It is an open secret that a very large Company will be shortly introduced to the public notice.

I am assured by those who ought to know, that, in spite of the enormous premiums at present existing in all shares connected with the oil industry in America, yet the wells are giving out. Years ago the number of gallons obtained from each well was something astonishing. Now I believe 40 to 50 barrels per day to be a fair average, and in order to obtain this fair average it is necessary to utilise pumping machinery. This must demonstrate that either the wells require deeper sinking, or that the present strata supply is being exhausted. American oil has spelt enormous fortunes, and those who have been lucky enough to "strike ile" have been the favoured of the land, kings in their own way, and they have been deified, and the world has bowed down and worshipped at their feet. History repeats itself, and in all probability the manufacture of oil kings will no longer be peculiar to America.

The name of the coming Company is an open secret, and I feel great interest in the immediate future of the Standard Oil Company of Galicia, for a little bird whispers in my ear that the output will be far greater than even suggested by the engineers; for, according to the latest accounts, the experts have again succeeded in "striking ile."

Sea-sickness

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., said in "TRUTH":—

"The man who discovers a perfect cure for sea-sickness will be one "of the greatest benefactors of the human race. At different times "many such discoveries have been announced, but somehow they "have not stood the test of practice. Being one of the worst of "sailors, I have tried most of the remedies as they have appeared, "and I can therefore make the last statement confidently. But at "last hope has dawned upon me. On two recent occasions when "crossing the Channel I have tried the remedy advertised under the "name of 'Yanatas.' On both occasions—and they were the first "on record—I got across without serious qualms. As the weather "was thoroughly bad on both passages, I feel justified on this, in "recommending fellow-sufferers to try 'Yanatas.' I cannot "answer for its effect on a long voyage, and it may not be equally "efficacious on all constitutions; but if it only enables the average "'bad sailor' to cross in peace from Dover to Calais, it will be to "many a priceless boon."

OUR PUZZLES

RULES.

1. The sum of £2. 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THEIR NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

1. Princes, dukes, stockbrokers, health and unrest. 2. Knights, lawyers, doctors, competence and calm. 3. Priests, policemen, paupers, poverty and discontent.—Dilaram.

1. Famed for its reputation through the world. Unconquered since the Cæsars. 2. The modern Athens to strangers, and Auld Reekie to its friends. 3. A city blessed by the Pope, instructed by the Trinity, and guarded by the Phœnix.—Alastor.

1. An enormous capital with floating securities, but never invested. 2. A handsome capital in part well laid out, but mainly idle. 3. A city of shams, sham royalty, sham loyalty, and shamrocks. 1. The peerless city of a peer-ridden nation. 2. A handsome capital, well laid out, bearing never-failing interest. 3. A castle-hated (castellated) city.—Dandelion.

TRIA JUNCTA IN DUO.

Number one on my list is the star of the East,
Number two of the North is the jewel,
Number three, 'tis confessed, is the gem of the West,
And my whole's a "triangular dual."*

Another answer.—1. Swell-ville. 2. Belle-ville. 3. Smell-ville.—Kottabos.

* Two islands with three capitals.

1. Heaven to those who can't live in it; hell to those who can't get out of it; purgatory to those whose business is in it, but whose homes are out of it. 2. A mock Athens. 3. A city of "bulls" and "balls," of blunders and blarney.—E. N. S.

1. England's swollen capital, which, while yielding abundant interest, can neither be adequately consolidated nor liquidated (unification, water). 2. The city which, having parted with its kings, consoles itself with a Prince's-street. 3. The centre where mock royalty is offered to dwindling loyalty.—Nitram

1. The heart of the world; but its beat is the beat
Of "Rule Britannia"—Home is sweet.
2. Disinfected, whitewashed Athens,
With a "verra" modern "Deil,"
And a sage but rosy splendour,
And a conceit true as steel.
3. A stout city, and endued with spirit;
Erratic and bold, full of verdant merit;
Famous for bulls, and little goats that worrit.

1. Power and pelf. 2. Pride and prejudice. 3. Spirit and pretence.—Job.

1. Stolid and solid. 2. Clanny and Canny. 3. Charming and alarming.—Ombra.

1. London, in spite of slums and dens of vice,
Where the unwary may be led astray,
Thou art the wonder of our time, and thrice
What Roman greatness was in proudest day;
For commerce, trade, and men of worth
Have crowned thee king and marvel of the earth.
2. See modern Athens, city of the North,
Where polish, arts, and sciences preside,
And all that generous enterprise calls forth
To spread her fame and learning far and wide,
Sit, like a bride, in native charms arrayed,
And to the Muses shelter gives—and shade.
3. But freeborn Dublin, in her cherished clime,
Has yet cathedrals, schools, and generous hearts,
And fond traditions not effaced by time,
And daughters fair and sons of sterling parts,
And still a queen she is, or ought to be,
With sceptre stretching over land and sea.
Rex.

1. City of smuts, riches, proverty, underground railways, and Houses of Parliament. 2. The modern Athens, home of the canny Scot—who loves good whiskey. 3. The land of the—witty, amusing—Fenian, who is fond of the ladies, and not averse to Dublin stout.—Ye Hermit.

1. The largest commercial city in the world, noted, in the City, for its Guinea-Pig Company Promoters, also for its two Houses of Parliament, the greatest anomaly being the House of Lords, which overrides the House of Commons. The working-classes have no voice in the government of the country, being sat upon by the Lords. 2. The principal town in Scotland, also the city of the cute and canny Scot, being the town where, some years ago, the Jew money-lender discovered the lost tribes of Israel, also noted for its granite manufactories, &c. 3. The capital of Ireland, the seat of the Government, noted for its fine linen manufactories, also for its LL whiskey, and stout, and a good place for a scrimmage and broken heads.—Theology.

SHORT SIGHT.—This form of defective vision is, no doubt, alarmingly increasing, but many kinds of defective vision are constantly mistaken for short sight merely because clearer vision is obtained by bringing an object closer to the eyes. If such are tested with ordinary short-sighted spectacles the mischief is greatly aggravated, and serious and permanent injury is done to the sight.

ENTRE NOUS.

PRINCESS MAUD and Prince Charles will make their first public appearance after their marriage at Sandringham next Wednesday, when the annual show of the Royal Estate Cottage Horticultural Society is to be held in the Prince of Wales's grounds. The bride and bridegroom are to leave Sandringham either on August 1st or 4th for Cowes, and they will spend about ten days on board the Osborne with the Prince and Princess of Wales before going to Denmark.

My humble petition to the Throne is that when next it gives a Garden-Party at Buckingham Palace it will not invite five thousand guests. If one person, then a hundred persons since that Garden-Party have asked me, "Were you at the Queen's Garden-Party?" When I reply that Her Majesty and I do not visit, they assume an air of superiority to me, and observe that it was very hot there. All this is to let me know that they are of the upper five thousand and that I am not. The nuisance of it is that, if I meet them again the next day, they again convey to me that they were at this party.

The question has been asked of me by more than one reader of Truth whether the Mr. Philip Sarrell presented at the last Levée upon his appointment as Vice-Consul at Constantinople is the same Mr. Sarrell the imputations upon whose official conduct have several times been referred to in Truth; and whether it is to be taken from this that Mr. Sarrell has answered the allegations against him? There is, I believe, only one Mr. Philip Sarrell connected with the Constantinople Consulate, and, so far as I know, this gentleman has made no attempt of any kind to answer any of the charges against him. Certainly he has not communicated with Truth, although, as I need hardly say, my columns were quite at his service if he had anything to say in his own defence; and he seems to have been in London at the time of the appearance of my last article on the Consulate scandals. The presentation of Mr. Sarrell, however, is a mere official formality, which means nothing; though under these circumstances many will probably think that the rule would have been more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

A tremendous programme has been arranged for the Duke and Duchess of York during their Yorkshire progress. They are to travel on Thursday morning from London to York, when there will be three hours of work in the afternoon at the agricultural show on the Knavesmire, followed by a thirty-five miles' journey to Helmsley, where they are to be the guests of Lord and Lady Feversham at Duncombe Park. On Friday a journey to York in the morning, four hours of functions, and then back to Duncombe. On Saturday morning a two hours' run to Halifax, then four hours' of hard labour, including address-receiving, presentations, and the opening of two buildings, besides a huge luncheon with speeches. All this over, the journey back to London.

The Duke and Duchess of Sparta, who are staying at Buckingham Palace, are going on Monday to Osborne on a visit to the Queen, and the Duke will probably be at Goodwood on the Cup Day.

The Prince of Wales will not go to Denmark this year, nor does H.R.H. intend to visit the Duke of Coburg in Thuringen after his stay at Homburg. The Prince is to arrive at Homburg from Cowes about August 14, and he will return direct to England when his twenty-one days' "cure" has been accomplished, as on Monday, September 7, H.R.H. is to arrive at Fryston Hall, near Pontefract, where he will be the guest of Lord Crewe during Doncaster races.

The Duke of Cambridge is to spend most of next month at Homburg, and during his stay in Germany he will pay a visit to the Empress Frederick at Friedrichshof, her place on the Taunus Hills.

Princess Christian is going to Germany early next month to spend a few weeks at Bad Nauheim and she will pay several family visits abroad after her stay at that watering-place. Princess Christian is to join the Queen at Balmoral later in the autumn. Prince Christian will be in Germany from the beginning of August until the middle of October. He is going to take a course of waters at Kissingen.

The Empress Eugénie, who has just returned to Farnborough from the south of Europe, after an absence of five months, is going next week to Cowes to join the Thistle, the late Duke of Hamilton's yacht, in which she is going for a cruise along the south-west coast, including a visit to the Channel Islands, and she will probably be accompanied by Princess Beatrice.

Colonel Byng and Major Legge are to be the Equerries in Waiting on the Queen at Osborne during August, and Lady Antrim, the Dowager Duchess of Athole, and the Dowager Lady Southampton will be the Ladies of the Bedchamber on duty while her Majesty is in the Isle of Wight.

I continually receive from the other side of the Atlantic little communications like the following:—

Mrs. ——, with her daughters, Miss Corisande —— and Miss Hildegarde ——, of —— Avenue, New York City, sailed in the Servia on the —— inst., on a visit to England.

Unfortunately, I am a married man, and so are all the members of my staff, and owing to this circumstance I am quite unable to run down to Liverpool to meet the Misses Corisande and Hildegarde on their arrival, or even to send a representative for this purpose. It is a matter of keen regret to me that little friendly intimations of this kind are constantly being thrown away, so I mention the matter to prevent any further disappointments among young American ladies visiting England. No doubt many of my contemporaries have on their staffs young and prepossessing journalists, who would only be too glad if a similar chance were offered to them, and who have no wives to take exception to their being so employed.

Now that everybody is making his plans for leaving town, the following facts may be studied with advantage. A gentleman who had often been reproached with spending all his holidays abroad, decided that he would give his native land a turn, and wrote for terms to a leading hotel at a seaside watering-place. He required only a bedroom for two. The following was the inclusive tariff per week en pension:—For a room on the third floor, £7. 7s.; for one on the second, £9. 9s.; and on the first, £11. 11s. Somewhat checked by these figures in his enthusiasm for his native land, he then applied to an hotel at Scheveningen. He was told that he could have one of the best bedrooms in the house, furnished (as usual) as bed and sitting-room, for a sum equivalent to £5. 16s. 8d. per week—£1. 10s. per week less than the worst class of bedroom at an English watering-place. The Scheveningen hotel in question is one of the largest and best on the Continent, and Scheveningen has the reputation of being a dear place. The value of a thing is, of course, what it will fetch, and if English hotel proprietors can fill their houses during the season at such prices as the above, they have every right to charge them. But it is not wonderful, under these circumstances, that so many English people go abroad for their holidays—especially when it is remembered that to most English people change of life and surroundings is in itself a valuable consideration.

Casual reference in TRUTH the other day to communicating doors between bedrooms in hotels has brought me many complaints on the subject. It is a matter which has often been referred to in these columns, and I am surprised that hotel proprietors and managers are not more alive to the widespread objections to the system, which prevail among travellers and those who reside in hotels. The objections are manifold, and, so far as I can see, the arrangement is designed exclusively for the convenience of hotel proprietors in catering for those customers who occasionally require suites of communicating rooms. Such customers are quite in a minority, and it is certainly unreasonable that the convenience and comfort of an overwhelming majority should be sacrificed to them. It would pay an hotel to have a certain number of bedrooms without communicating doors, for many would submit to an extra charge for this comfort.

Sir Edward Lawson had a most brilliant and successful gathering at the Daily Telegraph office on Monday night. "Music and Machinery" was the order of the day—I say "day," for the function lasted till 3.30 a.m.—and for once machinery, particularly the wonders of the Linotype process, seemed to afford more attractions than music. The production of an imposing number of the Telegraph was witnessed by Prince Charles and Prince Christian of Denmark, and by more distinguished people than I can find room to mention.

I hear that at the annual meeting of the British Medical Association, which opens at Carlisle on the 28th inst., there is to be a discussion on the burning question of professional advertising, which is likely to be both acrimonious and exciting. The public will no doubt await the result with interest, and I wish the assembled medicos a plentiful stock of common-sense to guide them in their deliberations. Among all our social conventionalities there is not one in which there is a greater amount of unmitigated and pernicious humbug than in regard to advertising by lawyers and doctors.

A gentleman residing in Gloucestershire found himself favoured the other day with a circular from Messrs.

Roozen & Sons, of Overeen, near Haarlem, containing the following significant passages :—

> We make no charge for packing or packages, and allow 5 per cent. discount to gardeners only. . . .
> Should any gardener change his residence, we should be glad if he would inform us of it, so that our catalogue may be regularly sent to him.

This circular was evidently intended for the gardener, and came into the hands of the master of the house by mistake. The latter remarks that he will take care that his gardener does not get that 5 per cent. in future, and as other employers may be of the same opinion, I give them the hint to look into the dealings of their gardeners with Dutch bulb-growers.

It is a small compensation for being the Editor of a paper like Truth to find that your observations on little matters requiring amendment have fallen upon good ground. This consolation has been vouchsafed to me in regard to my remarks upon the shortcomings of the Henley Regatta traffic at Paddington. Mr. J. L. Wilkinson, the energetic acting manager of the Great Western Company, writes me a letter "admitting the correctness of every word" in my paragraph, and pleading only sundry extenuating circumstances. These circumstances are (1) that the Henley traffic this year greatly exceeded all precedent, and, consequently, the calculations of the Company; (2) that, owing to the Twyford and Henley branch being only a single line, it is impossible to despatch more than a certain number of trains in a certain time; (3) that, in the interest of the general public, the Company endeavour to carry on their main-line traffic with as little interruption as possible; and (4) that, owing to improvements that have been carried out at Henley during the last year, the return traffic—notwithstanding the increased number carried—was despatched more expeditiously than ever before. Only one thing is needed to make these pleas acceptable to the public—namely, that the Company will double the line between Henley and Twyford, and this, Mr. Wilkinson tells me, is under the consideration of the Directors; besides which, improvements are in contemplation at Paddington, which will considerably increase the accommodation there. It comes, therefore, to this: that the thing has never happened before, and is not likely to happen again; and those who know Mr. Wilkinson will feel every confidence in this assurance.

Why are the public refused facilities for booking from the Wimbledon extension of the District line to the stations of the Metropolitan Railway Company? A traveller who complains to me somewhat strongly on the subject attributes the inconvenience thus caused to the squabbles between the District and the Metropolitan Companies. I can hardly believe that this is the true explanation, because tickets are issued between other points situated respectively on the two lines, and if the Companies can so far overcome their mutual animosities as to book through in one case, they can presumably do so in all. But whatever the reason, there can be no question as to the inconvenience caused to the traveller between, say, Wimbledon and Paddington, who has not only to change trains at High-street or Gloucester-road, but to go upstairs and provide himself with a fresh ticket; and such inconvenience must in the long run be opposed to the interest of both lines. It is from this point of view that I would commend this matter to the attention of the two Companies.

The centenary of the death of Burns is being celebrated this week, and Lord Lorne has been moved to supply the Scotch newspapers with some excruciating productions of his muse. Since Lord Lorne's ghastly experiments on the Psalms of David one might have supposed that he would have spared the world any more of his adventures in verse. After publishing such bathos as the following lines, it is clear that Lord Lorne's claims to the office of Poet Laureate, whenever that post may again become vacant, are very strong indeed:—

> Thy name's wherever Scots are met,
> For Scotland's ne'er been conquered yet;
> Nor shall her hardy speech be set
> To nobler tune
> Than where the Bruce scorned England's threat
> One glorious June!

Mr. M. H. Spielmann's incisive article, in the Contemporary Review, on the administration of the South Kensington Museum, makes out a very strong case for inquiry, as it seems clear that this hot-bed of jobbery and extravagance stands in great need of that "amending hand" which Lord Coke declared would always be "blessed." It will scarcely be credited that 200 volumes of the Builder, Gardener, Architect, and other "trade" journals, were recently bound up at the public expense, in half morocco with gilt edges, all the advertisements being carefully preserved! A sum of £350 was paid by the country for some water-colour drawings of Old London, engravings of which were already in the Library, and the price was estimated by experts to be three times their auction value. No less a sum than £900 has been paid to the compiler of a "Catalogue of National Engraved Portraits," which Mr. Spielmann describes as "the worst book of its kind I ever saw," and its sale price is 5s. 3d. Money seems to be squandered recklessly in every department of the Museum, but the extravagance and mismanagement in the Library are really astounding. The Duke of Devonshire, who is a practical man, with no fiddle-faddle prejudices or sentimentalities, ought to take the Museum entirely out of the hands of the egregious Science and Art Department, the Royal Engineers, and other muddling bodies, and place it under the control of a body of responsible, competent, and independent trustees.

The annual report of the British Museum contains much information of special interest. The houses and gardens adjoining the Museum have been purchased privately from the Duke of Bedford for £200,000; Lord Bridport has sold Lord Nelson's papers and correspondence to the Museum for £3,000, and the Trustees paid £25,000 for the late Mr. Malcolm's rare and splendid collection of drawings by Old Masters, and early German and Italian engravings. This was a good bargain, the auction value of the collection being at least £40,000. The late Mr. Waterton's collection of editions of the "Imitation of Christ" has been purchased, no fewer than 1,014 copies having been added to the library. A number of the late Mr. Blew's Service Books and liturgical works were bought, several of them being unique; and another important purchase was the only copy known to exist of the first edition of Bunyan's very rare book, "Christian Behaviour, or the Fruits of True Christianity; by John Bunyan, a Prisoner of Hope. London: 1663."

One of the latest dodges for advertising a newspaper is shown by the following post-card:—

London, July 10, 1896.
A reference is made to you in to-morrow's issue of this paper. Page 130.—Yours faithfully, THE PUBLISHER.

I have been favoured with one or two communications of this kind, but I have not felt sufficient curiosity to invest sixpence for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the promised reference to myself. The little interest I ever felt in reading what other people were saying about me disappeared many years ago. I do not know how many people besides myself have been favoured with similar post-cards, but I would suggest to the publisher that these notices seem to indicate a consciousness that his circulation is very limited. Why assume in this way that people do not read your paper unless their attention is specially called to it?

The last honour conferred upon the veteran Statesman Prince Bismarck is a somewhat singular one. On the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the opening of the Imperial Office of Health, the Medical Faculty of the University of Jena conferred upon the Prince the honorary degree of Doctor of Medicine. The sole apparent reason for the recent presentation would appear to be that it enables the ex-Chancellor to boast the possession of all the Doctors' degrees that the German Universities can bestow. In addition to the foregoing, he is a Doctor of Philosophy (Halle, 1867), Doctor of Law (Göttingen, 1885, and Erlangen, 1885), Doctor of Political Science (Tübingen, 1885), and Doctor of Theology (Giessen, 1888).

Daly's Theatre was on Monday evening the scene of an interesting little ceremony in connection with the Royal Wedding. The performance of "The Geisha" was attended by the happy pair and a Royal party of fourteen, and during the entr'acte Miss Letty Lind, on behalf of the artists engaged in "The Geisha," presented Princess Maud with a beautiful silver tea-service, made in Tokio, for which the Prince of Wales thanked the company with his usual geniality on such occasions.

A correspondent sends me the following verses, which I willingly print, as I am sure they deal with what is a very prevalent and most irritating nuisance:—

PESTS OF THE PLAYHOUSE.

In your search for those nuisances, painfully rife,
Which add to the stress and the friction of life,
I think, my dear TRUTH, 'twould be well if you went
Once again to the play, still on scrutiny bent,
And there made a note of the nerve-fretting things
Which a night at the theatre usually brings;
For then, I am sure, you'd have much more to say
Of the many discomforts endured at the play.

Of course, 'tis too much to anticipate ease,
To hope for a stall that gives room for your knees;
Too much to expect that late-comers in rows
Will not all too heavily tread on your toes;
Too much to expect, as to pass you they strain,
That from kicking your hat they can ever abstain;
'Gainst such trifles as these it were vain to inveigh—
They are part of the price that we pay for the play.

But when, much enduring, you've stuck to your stall
Through perils that even might heroes appal;
When the latest arrival has barked both your shins
As his hazardous way to his fauteuil he wins;
When the man just behind—inconsiderate brute!—
On the tail of your coat 's wiped the sole of his boot—
You then might suppose they'd allow you to pay
At least due attention henceforth to the play.

Too vain supposition! 'Tis then that you find
That a still sorer nuisance is lurking behind;
For just as you settle, as well as you can,
With all due attention the actors to scan;
When you try to arrive at the gist of the scene,
And attempt to make out what the author can mean;
'Tis at that very moment you hear with dismay,
The merciless fiends who converse at the play!

Yes, just as the heroine, rudely belied,
Appeals to the pit with important aside;
Or just as the hero, magnanimous youth!
In a thick, throaty voice is explaining the truth;
Or as sure as the villain, most properly shot,
Sits up, ere he dies, to unravel the plot;
So surely the words they in turn may essay
Are drowned by the fiends who converse at the play.

Devoid of compunction, of taste, and of tact,
They prattle and laugh through the course of each act.
If you want to attend your intention they baulk
With the very small drivel they tirelessly talk;
The tide of their chatter now flows, now declines,
But it swamps without fail all the author's best lines;
Till, maddened at length, for a judgment you pray,
On the pestilent people who talk at the play.

Then, TRUTH, in your strength to my prayer give effect
And these pests of the play house arraign and dissect!
Hold up to derision their ignorance vast,
Their impudence never in coolness surpass'd;
This significant hint at the same time conveying—
That they only should talk when they've something worth saying;
For if they'd do this it would end straight away
The insuff'rable chatter of folks at the play.

I have read with amusement a letter addressed to me by a worthy lady who seems to have rather missed the drift of my remarks upon clerical headmasters. For instance :—

> Many of our boys have now to make their living abroad, and the love which men bear to the Church in South Africa and elsewhere seems to me a testimony that, amid all the temptations and hardships they have to encounter in after life, the religion, and love of truth, and honesty they have learned at home and at school have done more to help them to lead good, true lives than, &c., &c.

Concerning the love which is borne to the Church in South Africa I am not in a position to speak, but if this is to go down on one side of the account to the credit of clerical headmasters, the other characteristics displayed of late by Englishmen in that region must go down on the other; and by the time all the doings of the Chartered Company, the Jameson raiders, and the operations of mining speculators have been debited against him, I fear the poor clerical headmaster will have a good deal to answer for. Again :—

> When "nine-tenths of the assistant-masters are laymen," it does not appear to me that the latter "are being driven out of the profession." [Nor does it to me. What appeared to me was that if the highest prizes of the profession are closed to laymen, the best laymen will not enter it.—Editor, TRUTH.] A headmaster cannot teach the whole school himself, is it not, therefore, a fair distribution that the head should be a clergyman, and the others men learned in their different branches? . . . .

I confess the fairness of this arrangement would not have struck me, had I not had the assistance of a lady in discovering it. I will remember in future that if a profession contains 900 laymen and 100 clergymen, all equally qualified and competent, the only fair and reasonable distribution is to give the hundred parsons all the best posts, and to apportion the remainder among the 900 laymen. Admirable! I wonder now whether by any chance my correspondent is the wife, sister, or other female relative of a clergyman. Such insight into the principles of strict justice and fair dealing could hardly have been learned except by close association with a parson.

In spite of this lady, however, I venture to lay before my readers the remark of a gentleman connected with one of our foremost schools, that "the real work of our public schools is done by the house-masters and form-masters, and they are mostly laymen." Precisely, and the religious teaching is often given as much by these laymen as by the clerical head-master. I am amazed that people should write to me, as one or two have done, to contend that the interests of religious education are dependent upon the tenure of head-masterships by the clergy. To most public school boys the head-master is simply the wielder of the birch, and as such the supreme representative of Academic discipline. To my mind the interests of religion would be safer in any other hands. What is the position of a priest who birches a boy overnight, and preaches a sermon, or even administers the Sacrament to him next morning?

Speaking the other day to a friend of mine who is interested in the parochial work of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, I was told that Cannon Shuttleworth was presented to this living by the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's for the purpose of getting rid of him, the Minor Canon's enlightened and unconventional ideas on religious matters being anything but acceptable to his ecclesiastical superiors. If this is true, it is a pretty satire on the Scribes and Pharisees of the Established Church. Just before Canon Shuttleworth's appointment, St. Nicholas came out bottom of the list in a census which was taken of the congregations in the City churches. For years past it has been one of the most crowded churches in London. It has an admirable choir, and most active parochial organisations of all kinds, and perhaps the most remarkable feature about it is that there are generally as many men as women in the church, and sometimes more. Perhaps it may be said that the Dean and Chapter foresaw all this when they presented Canon Shuttleworth with the living. I hope they did, and that they will always be equally fortunate in their distribution of the loaves and fishes.

The Rev. W. A. Magee, who has inherited a fair share of the great oratorical powers of his father, the late Archbishop of York, has just been presented to the vicarage of Garngave, near Skipton, which is worth about £500 a year with residence.

The Church Congress is to meet this year at Shrewsbury on Tuesday, October 6, under the presidency of Bishop Legge, of Lichfield. The preachers at the three opening services will be the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Rochester, and the Bishop of Ballarat, and the list of selected preachers and readers is a very strong one. At the concluding services, on Friday, October 9, the preachers will be the Dean of Christ Church, Canon Gore, and the Rev. R. F. W. Ingram. One of the most notable features at the Congress should be the Master of the Temple's paper on "Current Literature."

Dean Fremantle has been exciting the wrath of some Puritanical bigots who have been "venting their venom" in one of the Church magazines, and they denounce him as a clerical propagator of infidelity, and threaten to bring him before the Bishop of Ripon or before the York Convocation as a heretic. There are many worthy fanatics who regard any Divine of liberal tendencies or of really wide mind as being little better than an atheist. Father Ignatius has felt obliged to trouble the Archbishop of York with an exposition of his views on the subject, although feeling "dreadfully sorry" for his Grace. It is difficult to see what practical object would be gained by these foolish people by haling Dean Fremantle before either the Bishop or Convocation. The "Essays and Reviews" blunder might surely have taught a lesson to such geese.

Here is a begging letter which seems to have been extensively circulated. The gentleman who received it wrote to the Bishop of St. David's on the subject, and received a reply in which the Bishop said that he regarded such appeals as an intolerable scandal, but that he had no power of checking them, though he intimated that he would be very glad if he had; for he had received between two and three hundred letters on the subject—a striking proof of the extent to which the appeal has been circulated. How far the statements in the letters are true I cannot say; but assuming them to be well founded, it seems to me that the Bishops might put a stop to such appeals by exerting themselves to bring about such a redistribution of the abundant revenues of the Church as would prevent any incumbent finding himself in the position here described. That an incumbent should be in this position is, in my opinion, a far more "intolerable scandal" than that he should appeal to the public to help him out of his troubles:—

Llanganten, Builth, R S.O., South Wales,
July 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask you the favour to allow me, in our present urgent pressing need, to solicit your immediate generous aid to enable us, by faith in God's gracious Providence, and with your kind help and prayers, to stem the tide over the waves of oppression arising from present depressed circumstances?

My whole annual net income is £61, out of which I have to pay—house rent, £27; rates and taxes, £5, leaving the remainder for our maintenance—my wife, myself, and two children.

May I pray that you will kindly grant me your sympathy and aid, and may I pray that you will have compassion on me?

I cast myself on your very great kindness and tender mercy.

I have the honour to be your most humble and obedient servant, DAVID DAVIES, Vicar of Llanganten.

There is a little paragraph in the current number of the Missionary Record of the United Presbyterian Church which eloquently testifies to the truth of what I have so often said as to the meagreness of the results from the lavish expenditure on missionary work. It is as follows:—

BAPTISM OF AN ARAB IN EGYPT.—After four years' work in Egypt, the North Africa Mission rejoices in its first baptism. . .

One convert gained by four years' labour! It would be interesting to know how much it has cost the North Africa Mission to get him.

At a recent meeting of the Stratford-on-Avon Guardians the Vicar made an impudent attempt to institute an inquisition into the religious beliefs of the candidates for an appointment as workhouse nurse. The sharp criticism which he encountered seems to have rankled in the reverend gentleman's mind, and he returns to the subject in the Parish Magazine with sundry foolish and irrelevant remarks about Dissenters being "ashamed of their colours," and so forth, after which he proceeds to express the opinion that, as "nine-tenths" of the paupers are Church people, "they ought to be nursed by one who will give them the consolations of the religion to which they are accustomed." The Vicar could not have more completely given away the object of his questions to the candidates, or more abundantly justified the protests which his colleagues made against his conduct.

As a reductio ad absurdum of prosecutions under that precious legacy of the piety and wisdom of our ancestors, the Lord's Day Observance Act of Charles II., a case which recently occurred at Sheffield will be bad to beat. The Chief Constable summoned a man for publicly crying milk for sale at eleven o'clock on a Sunday morning. The Stipendiary convicted the defendant, but found that all he could do in the way of imposing a penalty was to issue a warrant for the seizure and sale of the milk, one-third of the proceeds to go to the Chief Constable as the informant, and two-thirds to the poor of the parish. The milk, however, had actually been seized by a policeman at the time of the offence, and had become sour and unsaleable, so that the magistrate's order was a mere farcical formality. The solicitor for the defence objected to the defendant being saddled with the costs, and intimated that there would be an appeal in regard to certain points in the case which, if his contention were sustained, would have the effect of making the Act a dead letter, so far as the crying of milk is concerned. I hope the appeal will be successful, for it will be a public benefit to have any part of such a preposterous statute rendered inoperative.

Further questions were asked of the Home Secretary last week respecting the street-collection nuisance, but the result was not much more satisfactory than on the last occasion. In this instance Mr. Hogan, who asked the first question, put it explicitly to the Home Secretary that these street-collectors work on commission; but the Home Secretary could only reply that he "has no knowledge, or means of knowledge, as to the point raised." To this statement I demur most emphatically. Sir M. White-Ridley can buy a copy of TRUTH on the same moderate terms as the rest of the public, and can obtain the fullest information on the subject from that source; and if there is any difficulty in procuring the paper I should be happy to supply him with a copy gratis. But even without that, the Home Secretary can easily ascertain the facts by inquiry of the girls themselves, whom I have never found at all reticent on the subject. If that is not enough, I shall be pleased to supply the Home Secretary with the evidence of a gentleman who runs one of the charities chiefly supported in this way. I have interviewed this "philanthropist," and he frankly states that the collectors are paid by a commission on their receipts. As he attempted no disguise about the matter, I really think that the Home Office is hardly justified in stating that it has no means of knowledge.

Another question on the subject, asked by Mr. T. G. Bowles, was whether this method of collecting money does not come under the law of street-begging. The Home Secretary replied that this law "applies only to rogues and vagabonds," and he himself "doubts whether it would be held that those persons who collect with boxes in the streets of London are rogues and vagabonds." This, at any rate, ought to be good news to the rogue and vagabond section of the community. If it is the correct view of the law, any rogue or vagabond may beg for alms in the streets, and laugh at the police, if he only arms himself with a collecting-box and labels it with the name of some charity. There used to be an elderly beggar, with a very shady record, who went about in a black coat and a white tie, under the name of the "Rev." Robert Macmillan, soliciting cash for what he called his "Sustentation Fund." Why should not every rogue and vagabond have a "sustentation fund" for himself, and a box to collect money for the fund?

"The practice," says the Home Secretary, "requires careful watching." I should think so. It bids fair to reduce the whole of the law respecting street obstructions and street beggars to a dead letter. But what does Sir Matthew White-Ridley understand by "careful watching"? He will not abate this, or any other nuisance, by sitting at a window at the Home Office with his official eye on the young woman outside, who presides over a collecting-table and its accompanying boxes. This sort of watching is not of much use. What is required is, first, that the police should ascertain who the people are who are parading the streets and other public places with collecting-boxes, and then ascertain whether the facts are such that the law can deal with them, or whether the law itself requires amendment. If the law is capable of suppressing this gigantic nuisance, let the police enforce it. If not, let the Home Secretary bring in a Bill to amend it. Should "careful watching" take this form, I shall heartily commend it, but not otherwise.

There is now being circulated, on behalf of the Queen's Jubilee Hospital, Earl's Court, "a special and urgent appeal." It makes the usual extravagant statements as to the vast benefits afforded by this charity, and the "altogether inadequate funds." As it is some time since I referred to the Jubilee Hospital, I take the opportunity of again warning the charitable public against all its appeals. The inadequacy of the funds is due solely to the scandals arising from Mr. R. F. Benham's connection with the hospital, and the stupidity, or worse, of the Committee, which has refused to deal with these scandals in the only way that can be satisfactory to the public. Since the TRUTH exposure of Benham's financial eccentricities, the regular subscribers have in a great measure withdrawn their support, and the Hospital has become more than ever what the Charity Organisation Society several years ago described it, "an enlarged private dispensary." Such an institution, where most of the patients pay more or less for the attention they receive, has little claim to the support of the public as a charity. But in addition to this, the Hospital has been pronounced by a high authority not only totally unfit for its present purpose, but a positive source of danger to the patients received in it. Those, therefore, who respond to the present appeal are simply assisting to perpetrate abuses which ought long ago to have ceased to exist.

With regard to the aforesaid "financial eccentricities" of Mr. R. F. Benham, an interesting action was tried the other day in the Brompton County Court, arising out of the story several times referred to in TRUTH of Benham's appointment as executor to one of his poor patients. The case ended in the plaintiff, Miss Butler, recovering judgment against Benham for the sum of £22. 18s. 6d., being the greater part of the balance which I have contended all along was owing from the founder and benefactor of the Jubilee Hospital to these unfortunate people. I refrain from saying more about the case at present, as certain other proceedings are pending in reference to the conduct of the solicitor who originally acted for the Butler family.

By the way, a man gave me the other day a curious report of his experiences in the Jubilee Hospital. He had been taken to that institution after being knocked down by a cab. He was surprised, when Mr. Benham came to see him, to find himself charged with being a representative of TRUTH. He denied the soft impeachment, but he seems to have left the Hospital under the impression that his denial was not believed, and that he was a suspected individual as long as he remained there. Mr. Benham's guilty conscience would seem to be making him morbidly suspicious, if he seriously believes that I could procure a man to get run over by a cab and be taken to the Jubilee Hospital for some sinister purpose of my own. Is it the general practice at the Jubilee Hospital to inquire of the patients whether they are connected with TRUTH?

Here is a good example of the dilatoriness of the Charity Commissioners. A gentleman, desirous of redeeming a charitable rent-charge upon his land, proceeded, according to the usual course, to purchase the necessary amount in Consols in the name of the Commissioners. He completed his share in the transaction by sending the stock receipt to the Commissioners in December last, and was informed that the Commissioners would "proceed to issue the formal order of redemption." Presumably this would only be the work of an hour or two, but the Commissioners have not "proceeded" as yet. This is the third case in which they have not proceeded to do anything at all since December last. Has the office been taking a six months' holiday?

I have had forwarded to me the following amounts for Lady Jeune's Poor Children's Holiday Fund:—

The demands which some of my correspondents continue to make upon my time and attention, notwithstanding my numerous protests on the subject, sometimes quite take my breath away. I have just been reduced to this condition by one of my military readers in India. This gentleman, not content with writing me a private letter of four pages, calmly sends me four type-written letters for publication in successive issues of TRUTH. Each of these four letters extends on to the fourth folio of type, and the subject has several times been referred to in TRUTH, and is one which only interests a very limited number of readers at the best. I can only tell my esteemed correspondent that there is no possibility of my being able to read his letters until the slack season comes on—if a slack season for the Editor of TRUTH ever should come on—and when I have read them, I fear some further period must elapse before I shall be able to place a column of TRUTH at his disposal for four weeks in succession.

Sometimes I am tempted to wonder whether I shall ever come to the end of the grievances of Army men. One would think that there must be an end somewhere, but, though I have been looking for it for years, never a week passes but what I am introduced to some new and perfectly legitimate matter for discontent. For instance, an officer holding the rank of Colonel tells me that many years ago the Government obtained from him a substantial sum of money, by the simple process of stopping it from his pay, nominally to cover the cost of his commission. Up to the present time that commission has never been issued to him, and from what he says I gather that there are many more officers in the same position. Anarchists will tell you that government is simply a system of organised brigandage, and really, when one comes across facts like the above, one is tempted to think that the Anarchist has some grounds for his opinion. How much money, I wonder, has been forcibly appropriated as a charge for commissions which have never been issued, say, during the last five years? To me it seems a contemptible and pettifogging sort of proceeding to levy such a charge, even if value were given for money.

I asked the other day whether anything could be more monstrous than that a Volunteer should have to pay the cost of ammunition for the purpose of rendering himself an efficient shot. An officer in the Indian Army replies confidently, "Yes; there is something more monstrous still, and it is that a private soldier should be in this position." I gather from his remarks that the Indian Government only allows its soldiers thirty-five rounds per annum for individual firing, but I am not sure whether my informant means to state that a further fifteen rounds are allowed for match-firing and practice. Whether, however, the total allowance is thirty-five rounds or fifty rounds, it is obviously quite insufficient for the training of an efficient marksman; and this is so far recognised in the Indian Army, that those regiments that take any interest in shooting have their private rifle funds, supported by all ranks, to which the private Sepoys contribute monthly a sum equal to about a day's pay. A more lamentable illustration of the penny wise and pound foolish policy adopted by the Indian Government can hardly be imagined, and this fact alone ought to bring home to Englishmen the disastrous results which may follow from the financial embarrassments of the Indian Government. And this is the Government which is asked to contribute £35,000 towards the idiotic operations of our present rulers in the Soudan!

In this connection I may mention a personal grievance of the Sepoy, to which my attention has been called by another Indian officer. It is that the native regiments employed on frontier expeditions get no extra allowance to compensate them for the wear and tear of their kit, which they consequently have to make good out of their own pockets. What a serious tax this is may be judged from the statement of the Indian officer just referred to, that in a two months' campaign in Burmah or Lushai, where there is much work in the jungle, a Sepoy will wear out a pair of boots and part of another pair, and a couple of suits of khaki clothing. A pair of boots costs from 6s. to 8s. (native shoes being of no use except for followers), and a suit of khaki 4s. to 5s. The only extra allowance of kit ever granted to a native regiment is what is called the Burmah scale of clothing, consisting of a cardigan, a blanket, a pair of socks, and a pair of native shoes. Batta, I learn, to my surprise, is never issued to native troops, although the Sepoy would seem to have as good a claim to it as our friend Tommy Atkins.

The salary of the Military Secretary at the Horse Guards has been reduced from £2,100 a year to £1,500, because his work has been considerably curtailed, the business of arranging all the Army examinations having been transferred to the Director-General of Military Examinations.

What is the meaning of an advertisement which I have before me of the "special engagement of the 6th Dragoon Guards" in connection with "The Third Annual Dudley and District Fancy Dress Cycle and Trades Parade and Fire Brigade Competition"? From a local paper it appears that the Dudley Volunteers excused themselves from taking part in the function, on the ground that it would be contrary to the Regulations for them to do so. I understand that another company of the same Battalion (3rd V.B. South Staffordshire Regiment) gave a similar answer to an application for their services. The "special engagement" of the Dragoon Guards, under the circumstances, is, to say the least of it, surprising.

The luncheon given to the members of the Boston H.A.C. at Aldershot was, I find, paid for by the War Office. Heaven forbid that I should cavil at this, for I am sure that the British taxpayer will not grudge our American cousins their entertainment; on the contrary, in the present state of the relationship of the two countries, it may have a good effect if it is understood that the Boston men have been publicly entertained at the expense of the British Nation. I would rather say that, if this is done in the case of the Boston H.A.C., the same rule ought to be applied to all royal, foreign, and other distinguished visitors, who are fêted at regimental entertainments. As far as I can see, the cost of such entertainments is at present borne exclusively by the officers, to which there are objections on many grounds.

Among other correspondence which I have received on the 4th Hussars case, I am much impressed by an anonymous communication, emanating, I suspect, from a German officer. "If," says the writer, "the much abused system of duelling were in force in the British Army, you would hear nothing of such detestable outrages as were perpetrated on Mr. Hodge, or the insolent boycotting applied to Mr. Bruce. A man does not lay himself out in cold blood to insult another against whom he has no personal grudge, when he knows that the first result will be that he will have to make himself a target for the other man to shoot at from a distance of a few paces. Your bully is always a coward; and as far as I can make out had duelling been in fashion in the 4th Hussars, the gang in that regiment who have made Army life intolerable for their juniors would either have avoided such offensive conduct, or would by this time have all been in their graves." Should Lord Wolseley see no other way of putting a stop to organised bullying, he might do worse than turn his attention to these remarks.

"Bullying in the Army may be on the increase," writes a correspondent, "but it will have to increase considerably before it is as bad as it is at our two great Universities." The writer goes on to illustrate this assertion by some particulars of the damage inflicted on men at Oxford and Cambridge by the practice of "making hay" in their rooms. With all respect, I fancy that this must be a considerable exaggeration. At any rate, I am quite sure that at any decently-managed college the victim has the remedy in his own hands. So far as my experience goes, college dons are pretty severe in dealing with these little outbursts of playfulness, whenever they are brought under their notice. I remember a case in which the whole of a large college at Oxford were summarily "sent down," because a stone was thrown through the window of an unpopular undergraduate; and one has heard of many other cases in which the error, if any, has been rather on the side of excessive and undiscriminating severity in dealing with the offence. The chief complaint in regard to bullying in the Army is that the authorities are disposed to wink at it.

In the following instalment of my Military Pillory will be seen a case which shows that in one respect at all events justice is administered in the Army on principles which find favour in civil life. Here is a man charged with drunkenness on the evidence of two military policemen, and not allowed to call the evidence of three N.C.O.s and three privates, who would have deposed to his sobriety. Apparently the C.O. was so convinced of the superiority of a policeman's word to that of any number of men on the other side, that he did not even think it necessary to go through the formality of hearing other witnesses. Not even a London police magistrate could show such sublime faith as this in the unimpeachable trustworthiness of police evidence. The only other special remark that I have to make on the points mentioned is with regard to the band-money in the 2nd D.C.L.I. I have not forgotten what an officer stationed in Ireland told me some time back as to the necessity of taking what you can get for a band performance in that part of the United Kingdom. But in the first place, when the amount is so small, the men themselves ought to have some option as to whether they will accept engagements or not; and in the next place, the smaller the amount the greater the necessity for dividing it equitably. One and twopence for blowing a brass instrument for six hours is a poor sort of wage—a man could earn ten times that amount in the time on the beach at Margate—and the amount looks the more inadequate when the bandmaster gets £1 for his services with the baton during the same time:—

2nd Somersetshire Light Infantry, Guernsey.—A party of four or five men were returning to barracks. Two of the military police charged one of them with being drunk, and marched him to the garrison guard-room, whence he was removed by the garrison picket to his own guard-room. There he was seen by the provost-sergeant of his regiment, who pronounced him sober, and sent him to his room. When brought before the C.O. he was convicted and punished on the evidence of the military police alone, the provost-sergeant's evidence not being taken, and the prisoner not being allowed to call the two N.C.O.s in charge of the picket, and the three men who were with him, all of whom were prepared to testify to his sobriety.

2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry.—The band of this regiment has been lately taking engagements at £5, which was divided in the following proportion: Band Fund, £2; bandmaster, £1; bandsmen, £2. There are about thirty-five men playing in the band, so that they receive a trifle under 1s. 2d. per head. Two of the engagements have been from 4.30 till 11 p.m.

2nd Battalion Lincolnshire Regiment, Woolwich.—A Regimental Order just issued in this battalion enacts that no civilian is to be allowed in the corporals' mess. Civilians are, of course, allowed in the officers' mess, and also in the sergeants' mess. Why not in the corporals'?

Medical Staff Corps.—A Corps Order recently issued provides that instead of promotion to lance-corporal being, as hitherto, by seniority among men who have passed the examinations laid down in the Manual, private soldiers who possess first-class education certificates, and are qualified compounders of medicine, besides being otherwise eligible, will be specially considered. This debars from promotion for a considerable period a number of privates who have been waiting for promotion, and have passed all the examinations hitherto necessary. Those who have not obtained the certificates now rendered necessary cannot do so for about twelve months, and in the meantime will see other men passing over their heads. When new Regulations of this kind are introduced, exceptions ought in all cases to be made in favour of men who have already done all that is necessary to qualify.

4th Battalion South Wales Borderers.—There is no regular roster for Depot duty at Brecon among the N.C.O.s on the Permanent Staff of this battalion, and the periods of such duty assigned to each man are fixed in a purely arbitrary and capricious manner. Some men are kept at the Depot for twelve or eighteen months, while others do two or three months Depot duty only. This state of things creates a serious grievance among the N.C.O.s who are stationed at Welshpool, and who are liable to be kept away from their families for a year or more at a time. It would be well if the C.O. of this battalion were to inquire into the reasons why some of the men get off with much shorter terms of Depot duty than others.

Here is an amusing summary of the effect of a number of recent military scandals, sent to me by an officer who has evidently read his TRUTH diligently. Each case has actually occurred, and most of them will be fresh in the memory of my readers :—

1. A medical officer asks a lady for a kiss. Penalty : removal from the Army, and destruction of professional career.
2. A medical officer in his professional capacity is subpœnaed as a witness in a divorce case. Penalty : removal from the Army, and destruction of professional career.
3. An officer in a Departmental Corps figures as co-respondent in a divorce case. Penalty : nil.
4. An Infantry officer on the Staff takes part in the private trial of a race-horse on the eve of a race, behind the owner's back. Penalty : reprimand, and revert to regiment.
5. A Subaltern in a Cavalry regiment does anything that he pleases. Penalty : nil.

Apropos of a recent note in TRUTH on the fine for non-efficiency, which Volunteers incur by enlisting in the Regular Army, I hear of a case in which a man, who transferred from the 3rd Middlesex Rifles to a Line battalion, has actually had to pay £5. 5s. to his old corps in consequence. Considering how little spare cash a soldier ordinarily possesses, it will be admitted on all hands that this is a most monstrous charge, and such a tax, if understood, must be prohibitive to men who contemplate transferring from the Volunteers to the Regulars. This particular case has, I hear, been brought under the notice of the Adjutant-General by the friends of the man concerned, and it is to be hoped that Sir Redvers Buller will give it his careful attention.

An officer writing to me on this subject the other day contended that every Volunteer ought to know the consequences of failing to be reported as an efficient, as the Regulations are read over to him when he joins. What a man ought to know and what he really does know are very different things ; but really this is not the point. Whether the Regulations are understood or not, they are wrong, and the better they are understood the more certain are they to deprive the Army of a most useful class of recruits. What is required is not that the Regulations should be made better known, but that they should be amended altogether.

The practice of keeping unofficial defaulter sheets in certain battalions was referred to in Parliament the other day, with the usual result that the representative of the War Office professed total ignorance of the existence of any such practice. At the same time it was stated that if the names were given to the War Office of any regiments in which such a practice existed, full inquiry would be made. The War Office must be well aware that this last suggestion comes to nothing. The practice in question is one which nobody in the Service is interested in stopping, except the C.O.s of other regiments which do not keep these unofficial sheets, and which are in consequence placed at a disadvantage by comparison with others in which the practice prevails. The War Office hardly expects, I imagine, that regimental officers who are aware of the practice will give away their own C.O.s by privately furnishing information on the subject for the use of the War Office. Neither is it likely that one C.O. would give such information for the purpose of damaging a brother Commanding Officer. There is not the slightest doubt that the practice does exist. I understand that printed forms for such defaulter sheets are actually sold ; and, as I mentioned a fortnight ago, an order forbidding the keeping of such records has been recently issued by the General Officer Commanding at Cork. Unless, therefore, the authorities approve of the practice, which is hardly likely, they can have no excuse for continuing in ignorance of it.

In a private letter from a medical officer at Cape Town, strong statements are made respecting the shorthandedness of the medical staff there. There are an exceptional number of troops at Cape Town at present, and, on the other hand, a number of the medical staff have been sent to Mafeking. It seems desirable that this matter should be looked to, for, judging from the present outlook of affairs in Rhodesia, the demands upon the medical staff are likely to increase rather than diminish.

The cruiser Hyacinth seems to have been a terribly bad bargain to the country. She was built at Devonport thirteen years ago at a cost of £73,000, and £20,000 has since been expended on her repairs. She was commissioned in 1886, and she has been in active service for only nine years. The Admiralty have now removed this vessel from the active list of the Navy, and it would be interesting to learn how it comes about that a practically new ship is to be thus "weeded."

The new cruiser Terrible, about the manifold merits of which vessel there has been so much trumpeting, is being most severely criticised by all the experts who have inspected her, and Naval men are unanimous in abusing her. She is very unwieldy, her armament is ridiculously inadequate, and she would be a most easy mark for either shell or torpedo.

Do the Admiralty really expect a man to support himself and a wife and family on £12 a year ? If not, one would like to know on what ground they have just withdrawn a pension of that handsome amount from Thomas Power, of Waterford. This man served for twenty years in the Naval Reserve, and on his discharge it was certified that his conduct had been "very good," and he was granted a pension of £12 a year. Naturally, he did not understand that he and his wife and family would be expected to live upon this pittance, and so he secured employment as a night watchman. On hearing of this, the Admiralty stopped the pension, and in reply to a memorial on Power's behalf they state that the Regulations "do not admit of his being awarded a pension whilst he is materially able to contribute to his own support." It may be in accordance with the Regulations, but it is utterly unjust all the same, and such pitiful meanness is likely to give a decided check to volunteering for the Naval Reserve.

Mr. Goschen stated, when introducing the Naval Estimates, that surveys were to be made at once, preparatory to the construction of docks for H.M. ships at Simon's Bay, Port Louis. The remark has brought me a communication from an old resident at Mahé, in the Seychelles Islands, which deserves the notice of all who are interested in the Navy, and more particularly in the maintenance of our lines of communication with India. The writer speaks most emphatically of the immense superiority of the Seychelles over Mauritius as a naval station. As regards position, I understand that for steamers the usual route between the Cape and India is by the Mozambique Channel, so that the Seychelles lie on the direct route to Bombay or Colombo, while Mauritius lies far out of it. As regards harbours, my correspondent had better speak for himself:—

> The Seychelles Islands, and especially Mahé, have numerous fine and well-protected harbours. The harbour of Port Victoria, Mahé, is a splendid one. There is an outer roadstead and an inner harbour inside the coral reefs. Vessels, including even ironclads, can lie within a few yards of the coal wharf with their stern moorings on shore. The outer roadstead is so well protected that ships can always coal there, never mind how rough it is outside. During the six years that the Australian liners of the Messageries Maritimes coaled here, we were never prevented on one single occasion from coaling their vessels on account of the weather. It is impossible to understand why the British Government fortifies and garrisons islands like Ascension and St. Helena, which have neither harbours nor cable communication, and are wretched coaling stations, while it neglects places with such immense advantages as the Seychelles.

In addition to the foregoing points of superiority, the Seychelles enjoy a magnificent climate, which my correspondent describes as the best of any British colony in the tropics. On the other hand, the unhealthiness of Port Louis is proverbial. The death-rate in Mauritius is over 40 per thousand per annum, while in the Seychelles my correspondent tells me it is 14·8. The advantages of these islands in this respect are fully appreciated by the Germans, who every year send their cruisers on the East Coast of Africa there for a six weeks' holiday. In one recent instance a German warship, which arrived with over a hundred men down with fever, had not a case left at the end of a month. To this has to be added that hurricanes are absolutely unknown in these islands.

Perhaps some of my readers may remember that General Gordon, in his queer fantastic fashion, came to the conclusion that the Seychelles Islands were the site of the original Garden of Eden. When Gordon made this discovery he had been sent out by the Government to report on the question of fortifying the Islands, and I understand that he prepared a plan for the fortification of Port Victoria. But, as my correspondent at Mahé points out, while almost everybody knows and ridicules Gordon's theory about the Garden of Eden, his much more valuable conclusions respecting the fortification of the Islands have been consigned to oblivion. It is worth note that the cable to Mauritius touches at the Seychelles, which lie within easy reach of Diego-Suarez, the French naval headquarters in those waters, so that in the event of a sudden outbreak of hostilities a French warship could cut the cable at this point before it could be protected. If, therefore, we are going to commit the folly of making a dock at Mauritius, it would still seem necessary to take some steps for the protection of the cable at the Seychelles.

The Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution has lately been making a vigorous attempt to whip in subscriptions and extend its organisation in Scotland. The results, I am told, have not been particularly satisfactory, and the managers of the institution would do well to ponder over the reasons for this. At the bottom of them lies, I fancy, the feeling, which is not confined to Scotland, that taxation and representation should go hand in hand. The Royal Alfred Institution works by means of local committees. These committees seem to be primarily engaged in collecting funds, but they have no voice in the management of the institution, nor in what is a most important matter, the nomination of candidates. The managers of the Institution, I believe, defend the present state of things on the ground that the benefits already granted to Scotch seamen greatly exceed the amount of the Scotch subscriptions. This argument is not altogether fair, because the Scotch seamen in question are for the most part employed by English shipowners. At any rate, a feeling exists in Scotland that these local committees are merely collecting agencies for a London charity, and that is a feeling with which the management must reckon. The best way of meeting it would be to allow one life nomination to every local committee collecting a certain amount per annum for a certain number of years.

I am glad to hear that the Committee on Post-Office Establishments have before them a copy of the article in TRUTH of August 1 last on the sweating of the sub-postmaster. It is to be hoped that they have also studied the other remarks which have appeared in TRUTH at different times on the same subject. I do not ask the Committee to take any of these statements for granted. Let them simply be made the basis for inquiry, and I doubt not it will be found that what has appeared in TRUTH is merely a mild sample or two of a widespread evil.

In connection with the case of the clerk in the Savings Bank Department who lately lost his reason, my attention has been called once again to the standing grievance in regard to the distribution of holidays among the Post Office staff. I am told that there are men in the Savings Bank

Department who have served for several years without ever getting a holiday except in November or December; and nearly twice as many clerks have to take their holidays in November as in May. In April all holidays are stopped on the plea of the exigencies of the public service. If I remember rightly, medical evidence has been given before the Tweedmouth Committee with reference to the unfavourable effect of these arrangements upon the health of the staff.

The proper arrangement of holidays in a public office is that which I have suggested in previous remarks on this subject—namely, to make each man take his holiday a month earlier (or later) every year, so that there would be a regular rotation in the holiday season among all the clerks. Failing that, the present system ought to be reversed. The juniors and lower grades who cannot get far away from London should have their holidays in the summer; while the well-paid heads of Departments who can afford a trip to Monte Carlo or Cannes, should take their leave during the Riviera season.

A good example of "Post-office stupidity" was given in the Times last Monday. Some practical joker having written the address of a letter in the form of an acrostic, the P. O. staff waste their own and the public time in solving the riddle, apparently for no purpose but to get a cheap advertisement of their own cleverness by making the result public. At the same time no attempt is made to rectify trifling errors in the addresses of ordinary letters—e.g., a letter addressed to a well-known peeress at Eaton-square, instead of Grosvenor-square, is returned to the sender at Cairo, although the mistake could have been rectified by reference to any Directory. I have just heard of another example of this sort of thing. A letter was addressed the other day to a house in "Charlton-road, St. John's," instead of to "Carlton-road, St. John's." The gentleman to whom it was addressed has resided in the same house for thirty years. Instead of trying Carlton-road, St. John's, however, the Post Office people sent the letter to Charlton-road, Blackheath, whence it was returned to the sender. There was a time when it was considered almost a point of honour at the Post Office not to return a letter unless the address was hopelessly undecipherable. But since the sweating system was introduced, and Dukes condescended to become Postmasters-General, we seem to have changed all that.

Since the reference in last week's TRUTH to a telegram from Cirencester, which took three days to deliver in London, an explanation has been received from the Post Office. The explanation states that "the failure of the telegram in question was due to the incorrect transmission of the address;" that "serious notice has been taken of the matter;" that the inconvenience caused is regretted; and that the sixpence prepaid will be refunded. This explanation is dated July 14, and the complaint was made on May 29. Why it should take the Post Office forty-six days to discover that the address of a certain telegram had been incorrectly transmitted, only the officials concerned can tell. But better late than never. Now that the Department has established a precedent for offering an explanation and refunding the money, perhaps it may learn in time to perform this simple process in something less than six and a half weeks.

It is one of the privileges of the Post Office that it is free from legal liability for any loss that may be caused through the negligence or dishonesty of its servants. This is a happy position for the Department, but as is shown in an article in the Stamp Collector's Fortnightly, it sometimes bears very hardly on the public. A short time since a packet of rare stamps, worth something like £200, was handed in and registered at Leadenhall-street Post-office. After giving the receipt, the lady clerk left the packet on an unprotected part of the counter, and it was stolen. The loss having been clearly due to gross carelessness on the part of one of the employees of the Post Office, the owners of the stamps had a strong moral claim to full compensation against the Department. Legally, however, they could claim nothing at all; and it was only "voluntarily, and as an act of grace" (as the regulations put it), that the Postmaster-General paid a paltry £5 for the loss of £200. That is the maximum compensation which he allows for a registration fee of 2d.; if a fee of 11d. had been paid he could have granted, he explained, as much as £50. The moral from this case would seem to be that parties who entrust valuable packages to the tender care of the Post Office would do well not only to register them, but to wait and see that the officiating clerk does his or her duty by depositing them in a place of safety.

Why should not a dog licence be transferable? A gentleman who has come into possession of a dog through the death of his brother at Easter last, complains of having had to take out a fresh licence, although his brother had paid the tax for the whole year in respect of the same animal. Of course, so far as the law goes, he has no ground for complaint, the licence being clearly specified as not transferable, being, in fact, a licence to a man to keep a dog, and not a licence to a dog to be kept by a man. At the same time, I take the liberty of questioning whether this is altogether equitable. As long as the tax is paid for the year in respect of the animal, the State has no right to expect to be paid over again when the animal changes hands.

Some further explanation ought to be given by Mr. Chaplin with regard to the decision of the Local Government Board to separate the ancient township of Milnthorpe-cum-Heversham. The inhabitants of Heversham are chiefly well-to-do farmers and wealthy landowners, and they sought the separation in order to evade their share of the projected expenditure on sanitary improvements in Milnthorpe, where the population of the district is concentrated. For many years the usual practice in these cases has been to enlarge the area of taxation for such purposes rather than to narrow it, but the influential Heversham people succeeded in obtaining an order from the Westmorland County Council for the division of the district, and this has now been confirmed by the Local Government Board, after an inquiry by one of their inspectors. Mr. Chaplin has refused to publish the report of this inspector, on the ground that it is confidential. It is extraordinary, to say the least, that a report by a public official on a public inquiry of this kind should be held to be "confidential," and unless Mr. Chaplin is anxious to encourage the belief that his Board has acted contrary to the recommendations of its inspector —a belief which seems to be prevalent in Milnthorpe—he would do well to produce the report.

Judging from what happened at Bradford last week in the case of William Smith, an injured person who is also homeless and penniless would fare badly in that town were it not for the kindness of the police. Smith met with an injury to his foot in a street accident, and was taken by a constable to the police-station, where a doctor saw him. By the doctor's advice the constable removed the poor fellow in a cab to the workhouse. The doctor had written a note to the Relieving Officer, but the latter was not at the workhouse, and the constable was directed to go to his house. But the Relieving Officer was also away from home, and so the constable returned with Smith once more to the workhouse. He was then informed that it was a matter for the Infirmary, and to the Infirmary Smith was accordingly conveyed. There the man's injured foot was dressed, but it was not considered a case for further treatment at the Infirmary, and the constable was recommended to take the patient back to the workhouse. Having had enough of this bandying from pillar to post, they went instead to the police station, and the Chief Constable ultimately paid for a night's lodging for Smith. There seems to be no doubt that the case was a proper one for the workhouse hospital, and it is highly discreditable to the Poor Law Authorities that arrangements have not been made for the prompt admission of an injured person in such circumstances. The Bradford Bumbles appear, indeed, to recognise this, for while denying that there was anything deserving of censure in the present case, they have adopted rules to prevent a repetition of it.

At the last meeting of the Court of Common Council, it was announced that Sir Erasmus Ommanney has presented to the Guildhall Museum the sword which William IV. wore when he served in the Navy, which weapon was presented by Lord Adolphus FitzClarence to the late Sir Francis Ommanney. Of course, a man can dispose as he pleases of an object which is his own absolute property, but it does seem utterly absurd and foolish to bestow the sword upon the Corporation of London, instead of sending it either to Greenwich Hospital or to the Museum of the United Service Institution.

Reference was made in last week's Truth to certain statements in "a local evening paper," in which it was alleged that the widow of a poor man who had died in Aberdeen, after having failed to get the Poor-law authorities to undertake the interment (the deceased not having been in receipt of parish relief), applied to the Sanitary Authorities, and was informed that they could not interfere until the body had become a nuisance. It is due to the Sanitary Inspector of the town to state that at a subsequent meeting of the Public Health Committee he made a statement fully explaining his action in the matter. He denied, among other things, that he told the woman (as she had alleged) that "they did not bury people until they were stinking," though really I cannot see that there would have been much harm if he had used those words, for they seem to represent the exact state of the law. It is clear, at any rate, that the Sanitary Inspector did his duty in the matter quite correctly; and I am glad to see, from a further discussion on the case which took place in the Trades Council, that there is no foundation for the other statement made in the local Press that the coffin which was supplied was not big enough for its purpose. The members of the Trades Council seem to have come to the conclusion, however, that the law applicable to such a case is in an unsatisfactory condition, and from the unsavoury evidence given as to the state of the body in this case by the time it was coffined, I should say that the Trades Council are right.

My publisher has now brought me a letter addressed to him by Mr. H. Macdonald, Chairman of the Law Committee of the Aberdeen Town Council, and also, it would seem, a solicitor, commencing in this strain:—

Sir,—Mr. Kenneth Cameron, Chief Sanitary Inspector, and Mr. Charles Green, undertaker for the Local Authority, have consulted me in consequence of false, calumnious, and slanderous imputations against them and each of them, contained in a paragraph published on page 145 of your issue of Truth of date July 16, 1896.

The libels referred to which have found circulation through the medium of your paper in the most reckless and unwarrantable manner, have not the least foundation in probability far less in fact; but they are calculated to convey the impression that my clients, and each of them have been guilty of a violation or gross and culpable neglect of duty, and of behaving in their official capacity, with unfeeling and brutal coarseness. My clients have been greatly wounded in their feelings, and injured in their business and reputation as the result, &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Macdonald's command of language is very wonderful, but I should advise him not to embark in the journalistic profession, or his pen may get him into trouble. I must respectfully inform him that I have said nothing whatever about his clients capable of the extraordinary construction here placed upon it; and that his professional feelings have led him to entirely misapprehend the effect of the inaccuracies in the local reports which I have corrected in the preceding paragraph. Neither of his clients was personally referred to in my paragraph, and nothing was said which imputed blame to any individual.

Mr. Macdonald goes on in his letter to call upon my publisher ("without prejudice") to immediately undertake to publish an apology, and also to "send me a cheque for £5. 5s. to cover my clients' costs," failing which he has instructions to commence an action for substantial damages. As the statements made were inaccurate, and as these two gentlemen consider that they are affected by them, my publisher at once apologises to Mr. Macdonald's clients, and I have much pleasure in endorsing and giving this publicity to the apology. I may add that either I or my publisher would have been equally ready to publish an explanation and an apology had either of the gentlemen concerned written to me personally. When any person complains of an incorrect statement in Truth, I never hesitate either to correct it or apologise when the error is pointed out to me; and it is quite unnecessary to employ a solicitor to write a letter like the above for the purpose. My publisher is also quite ready ("without prejudice") to pay any costs which Mr. Macdonald's clients may have justifiably incurred in writing to ask for an apology; but he does not see how these costs can amount to £5. 5s., nor do I. I am quite willing, on my publisher's behalf, to pay the cost of writing through a solicitor, for which I have always understood the charge to be 6s. 8d. My publisher also suggests that he ought to pay for the copy of Truth which Mr. Macdonald, or his clients, had to buy before writing the letter. That will be 6d. more—or 7s. 2d. When a penny is added for postage, I really cannot conceive of any other item of expense which Mr. Macdonald's clients have incurred; but if there is I shall be delighted to settle it. In the meantime, I have sent on my publisher's behalf and "without prejudice" the sum of 7s. 3d., and I trust that this will be found satisfactory.

A learned junior at the Bar, for whose opinion I have the greatest respect, tells me that prisoners very often go undefended from reluctance to incur the exorbitant charges generally levied by the legal gentlemen who take charge of their cases; and he makes a very simple and ingenious—not to say ingenuous—suggestion for getting over the difficulty. Every prisoner, of course, enjoys the right to instruct counsel without the intervention of a solicitor, and the suggestion is that, as many of the less experienced prisoners are unaware of this right, notice should be given in the gaols that they can obtain the services of able, learned, and eloquent gentlemen at the very reasonable figure of £1. 3s. 6d. I can only invite the prison authorities generally to take note of this suggestion. Should they not see their way to adopt it, perhaps they might permit barristers' clerks to go round the gaols before Sessions or Assizes, and leave their masters' cards upon parties likely to be in want of legal assistance.

The difficulties which beset the ex-convict who tries to reform his way of life were strikingly illustrated in a case at Lowestoft last week. A ticket-of-leave man, named Barnard, was charged with failing to report himself to the police. It appeared that he had been serving at sea for four months, and that he had reported himself on going away and on coming back, but not—as indeed it was impossible for him to do—in the interval. Nevertheless, the police prosecuted him, and the shallow-pates who administer the law at Lowestoft sent him to gaol for fourteen days. How can criminals be expected to reform when police and magistrates treat them in this harsh and idiotic way?

The soft answer that turneth away wrath is all very well, but when it is an official reply to a question in the House of Commons, it should surely show also a decent regard for accuracy. A flagrant example of the misleading statements which are put into the mouths of Ministers on such occasions was afforded last week when the Home Secretary was interrogated as to the refusal of the Midhurst Justices to accept the evidence of a witness who claimed to be sworn in the Scotch fashion. Here is the Home Secretary's reply, side by side with the report of the incident from the Sussex Daily News:—

The Home Secretary.	The Report.
Sir M. W. Ridley said he was informed that the Clerk to the Justices was on the point of administering the oath to the witness in the Scotch fashion, when it appeared that the evidence he was to give was immaterial, and on an intimation from the justices that they regarded it in that light, the solicitor for the defence withdrew the witness. In no instance had the justices refused to administer the oath in the Scotch fashion.	The Rev. Rowley Lascelles was then called, and refused to be sworn in the usual way. He asked to be sworn in the Scotch fashion. The Clerk: "But you are a clergyman of the Church of England?" Mr. Lascelles: "I refuse to answer any such question, and claim to be sworn in the Scotch fashion." The Chairman: "Are you an Englishman?"—After some consultation, the Bench decided not to hear the reverend gentleman's evidence. Mr. Wannop (the solicitor for the defence) then said he would leave the case as it was, and not proceed further.

Other reports confirm the one I have quoted, and it is also borne out by the statements of the witness referred to and other persons who were present in court at the time. But even accepting the official version that the Bench did not absolutely refuse to administer the oath in the Scotch fashion, the clerk and the chairman were still both guilty of impertinence and illegality in putting questions to Mr. Lascelles, for the Oaths Act of 1888 distinctly provides that a witness shall be sworn without any questioning whatever.

In looking through the samples of Justice's justice which appear in the first column of my Legal Pillory each week, it is curious to note how frequently the remarks of the magistrates themselves help to accentuate the inadequacy of the penalties they inflict for offences of violence and cruelty. Thus, in the following list, the Birmingham Stipendiary expresses the opinion that a betting man convicted of a cowardly and unprovoked assault "deserved to be sent to prison;" the Blackburn Bench confess to a "doubt" (which few people will share) as to whether they should not visit an even worse street outrage with a term of imprisonment; the Port Glasgow Bailie tells a man that he has committed "a most inhuman act" on a little child; a Midlothian J.P. rightly stigmatises the torturing and ill-treatment of a cow as "an exceedingly bad case;" and the Dronfield Bench admit that they are dealing with "a heartless case" of cruelty to a pony. To fit the punishment to the crime, a dose of hard labour ought to have been prescribed in every instance; but, without exception, the magistrates followed up their strong words with weak action, all the offenders being let off with fines. Somehow, one never observes this reluctance to send people to gaol, or if that is not possible, to exact the heaviest of pecuniary penalties when it is a matter of poaching or sleeping out or petty theft. The sentence for poaching at Forfar was especially monstrous, inasmuch as it was for a first offence:—

Midlothian J.P. Court. Before Messrs. W. Stuart and J. Knox-Crawford. James Forrest, cattle dealer, charged with cruelty to a cow by stabbing it on the breast and ears with a knife, striking it on the head and body with a thick stick, causing it to fall repeatedly, breaking its tail, and otherwise brutally ill-treating the animal. His only defence was that he was under the influence of drink at the time, and did not know what he was doing. Mr. Crawford said it was an exceedingly bad case. Fined £5.

Coventry Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. C. J. Hill, T. G. Beamish, and J. Maycock. Percy Docker and Daniel Geary, convicted of assaulting William Adams. Docker struck him while he was drinking from a jug, blackening his eye, and smashing the jug, and cutting his face badly. Geary struck him on the head with a pair of tongs, cutting it severely. Docker fined 5s. and costs; Geary 10s. and costs.

Dronfield Petty Sessions. Before Dr. Rooth and Mr. J. H. Harrison Thomas Bollard charged with cruelty to a pony. The animal was found lying in a weak and emaciated condition in a field where it had been left without food or water, and it had to be killed. A witness remarked that the animal was practically starved to death. The Bench said it was a heartless case. Fined £2.

Liverpool County Quarter Sessions. Mary Riley (60), charged with stealing 2½ lb. of beef. Three months.

Norwich County Police-court. Before Colonel Boileau and other magistrates. Alfred Wiseman, pauper, charged with absconding from St. Faith's Workhouse in February last. Three weeks.

Barnsley Police-court. Before Messrs. C. Harvey, C. H. Taylor, W. Batty, F. Dransfield, and T. D. Dunsworth. John Rowbottom, charged with sleeping out in a cowshed. One month.

Macclesfield Police-court. Before Messrs. P. J. Eaton and W. Whiston. Charles Barker and George Barker, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of a number of rabbits. Fined £5 each and costs, or two months.

Kettering Police-court. Before Messrs. J. J. Roughton, J. A. Gotch, T. Wallis, F. Barlow, and G. H. de Crespigny. George Hawkes, Enoch Bales, and Frank Desborough, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of nets and rabbits. Fined £3. 3s. each, or one month.

Port-Glasgow Police-court. Before Bailie Houston. James M'Gee, charged with assaulting his daughter, aged 8 years. He deliberately burned the child on the hip with a hot gridiron. The Bailie said it was a most inhuman act. Fined £2.

Birmingham Police-court. Before the Stipendiary. Harry Clery, commission agent, convicted of assaulting George Henry Briggs. Defendant pushed against Briggs, and on being remonstrated with struck him two violent blows on the head with a pair of field glasses, causing a severe wound. The stipendiary said defendant "deserved to be sent to prison." Fined £3.

Blackburn Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Green, R. Laming, E. Cooper, and H. Higson. John Foster, convicted of assaulting Robert Coupe. Without the slightest provocation defendant went up to Coupe in the street and kicked him twice on the leg, causing him to fall and breaking his leg. While he was on the ground he was further ill-treated by defendant's companions. The Bench were in doubt as to whether they should not send defendant to prison. Fined £5.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Guthrie. Samuel Hooper and John Hooper, charged with assaulting a man by knocking him down, kicking him, and otherwise maltreating him to the effusion of blood; also charged with creating a breach of the peace. John failed to appear; Samuel pleaded guilty, and there were a number of previous convictions against him. Fined 20s.

Forfar Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff Robertson. Peter Duff, charged with poaching. It was stated that it was his first offence. One month.

Clitheroe County Police-court. Henry Barton and Sam Rigby, charged with poaching. Three months each and a further term in default of finding sureties.

Fareham Police-court. Before Messrs. J. C. Garnier and C. E. Radclyffe and Colonel Hunt. Thomas Slater pleaded guilty to sleeping out. Seven days.

Tiverton Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. F. A. Payne and S. Mackenzie. William Vinnicombe, charged with sleeping out under a hay-rick. One month.

Bingham Petty Sessions. Before Mr. T. B. T. Hildyard and Sir Henry Bromley. Thomas Parker charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of nets and rabbits. Fined £5 and costs.

Whitchurch Petty Sessions Before Messrs. C. T. Dugdale, R. T. Smith, J. Jones, J. G. Harrison, J. Beckett, and T. Topham. George Jones, charged with stealing four hen's eggs. Fined £1. 10s. or one month.

Mr. F. P. Tombs, J.P., has written to me respecting the part he played in the recent row among the magistrates on the Pembroke Bench. He wishes me to make it known that "he did not speak to or about Mr. Reynolds (another magistrate) until the latter attacked him," and he sends a full report of the proceedings to convince me of the fact. I willingly comply with his request, though the way in which the squabble arose is really a matter of no importance. However it may have begun, such an altercation on the Bench was most unseemly, and it was solely in that light that I commented upon it.

In the evidence which was given at a coroner's inquiry at Runcorn the other day, the Manchester Ship Canal Company figure as anything but generous or considerate employers. The deceased was a clerk named Hutton, who for fifteen years had been in the employ of the company and the previous owners of the Bridgewater Canal. It was stated that for his salary of £75 a year he frequently had to work twelve or thirteen hours a day; and recently his health broke down from overwork. Notwithstanding his long service, his employers, after he had been away five or six weeks, wrote to inform him that they could not keep open his place any longer, with the result that he was much upset and committed suicide. The jury expressed the opinion that the letter from the company was, in the circumstances, a very cruel one, and with this I think most people will agree.

The old question of the employment of the rural police as gamekeepers has been brought before the Norfolk County Council by a member who vigorously protested against the unfairness and injustice of public money being expended "for protecting vermin in the shape of hares, rabbits, &c., for the luxury, pleasure, and enjoyment of a small minority of rich game preservers." The matter was referred to the Standing Joint Committee, and it is to be hoped they will do something to put an end to the practice complained of. In many other counties besides Norfolk the rural police are very largely engaged in doing the work of gamekeepers, and as some of her Majesty's judges have often taken occasion to point out at Assizes, the system is utterly wrong and unjustifiable.

The magisterial tendency to side with the police whenever they come in conflict with the public has been strongly shown in a case at Derby. A man named Cooper was charged with assaulting a constable, and the latter, on a cross summons, was charged with assaulting Cooper. The constable deposed that he found Cooper lying drunk on the pavement, that he got up and struck him on the shoulder, that in defending himself he struck Cooper twice on the head with his staff, and that they then fell together. On the other hand, Cooper swore that he was first struck by the constable, and this statement was corroborated by two other witnesses. There was also medical evidence to the effect that Cooper received three wounds on the head and suffered from concussion of the brain, his life being for a time in danger. The Bench dismissed the charge against the officer and fined Cooper 40s., though how this decision can be reconciled with the evidence is difficult to understand. But it seems to be accepted as an axiom in Police Courts that one constable's word is worth that of half-a-dozen civilian witnesses.

Numerous warnings have been given from time to time in TRUTH against a firm calling themselves "Graham & Co.," who carry on business in the cheap watch and jewellery line at 277, Strand. This firm came in for a good dressing-down at Bow-street last week, when two ladies from the country complained that they had each paid £2. 7s. 6d. for a watch which fell to pieces as soon as the happy purchaser attempted to wind it up. Mr. Vaughan sent an officer of the court down to see "Graham & Co." in company with the ladies, with a little hint from himself that the money ought to be returned. Later on, the parties came back with an individual calling himself "Mr. Graham," and they then had an interesting interview with Sir John Bridge, who had taken Mr. Vaughan's place. "Graham" contended that the ladies must have used the watches very roughly, but this was not only emphatically denied by the ladies, but was further discounted by the following evidence of a detective officer:—

Detective-sergeant Hailstone informed the magistrate that Mr. "Graham's" real name was Goldstein. For at least ten years past the Commissioner of Police had received complaints as to the conduct of "Graham & Co.," and when the police interfered the money was returned to the customers.

The case then proceeded thus:—

Sir John Bridge: Will you give the money back?—Mr. "Graham": Certainly.

Sir John Bridge: Will you pay it at once?—Mr. "Graham": Yes, at once.

Sir John Bridge: Then that will do.

That may do as far as this case is concerned; but it is a flagrant scandal that these people should pursue their swindling trade year after year, without any other inconvenience than being called upon to return the money, when any particular victim invokes the assistance of the police. They would not be able to carry on their trade for a week if a certain class of newspapers in London and the provinces did not publish their advertisements; and I would specially commend the above evidence to the notice of those newspaper proprietors who are co-operating in "Graham's" fraud in this way.

"Graham," as the detective mentioned in the above case, is really one of the Goldstein family. Another of the family of Goldstein is the so-called "Harry Roberts," who a few years ago put up an employee to prosecute me, for the exposure in TRUTH of the abominable practices carried on at a music-hall agency which he conducted in Stamford-street. The result of these proceedings against me was that the prosecutor got six months' hard labour, while a warrant against Goldstein, alias Roberts, on charges arising out of the facts which I had exposed. Roberts-Goldstein absconded, leaving his employee to do his "time." Since then this scoundrel has been a fugitive from justice, and the latest appearance of the Graham-Goldstein branch of the family in the police-courts leads me to ask once more if any one can tell me where Roberts-Goldstein is to be found.

It is no uncommon thing for the touts who sell watches on the instalment system to servant girls, to forge the girls' names to orders when all other means of inveigling their victims fail. I have heard of several cases in which the man hands the watch to the girl requesting her to keep it till he calls again, and then writes her name in his order-book, so that he can afterwards assert that it is her signature. A gentleman in the north, who has taken up a case of this kind on behalf of his maidservants, tells me of a simple method of defeating this trick. He handed over the watch to the head-constable of the town, and wrote to the firm informing them that the head-constable had instructions to hand over the watch, as soon as the order was produced to him bearing the girl's original signature. A representative of the firm subsequently called and asked for the watch, but carefully refrained from producing the required order, and consequently did not get the article. Up to the present time he has not returned, and I should imagine that he is not likely to do so. Presumably the inside of a police-station is a spot where gentry of this class are not unduly anxious to show themselves.

By the way, some interesting revelations concerning this kind of business were made in a case at Dublin City Sessions last week. A firm called "Milner & Co." (alias Albert Thomas), of 1, Finsbury-square, London, prosecuted one of their agents for purloining some of the watches and jewellery which he was employed to palm off on servant girls. It was stated that these were among the instructions the prisoner received from "Milner & Co.":—

Always look out for a wet day or Saturdays, particularly as you will be sure to get the servants cleaning for Sunday. Smile at all rebuffs. Be sure the masters of the servant girls are at business, and it will be far better. Also play a musical album, and one servant will call the others to listen to it, and it will facilitate the selling of watches. Receive no money, and the police cannot interfere for a pedlar's licence.

"Milner & Co.'s" representative at the trial denied that they had issued a circular in these precise terms; but however that may be, it is by such artifices as those described that girls are bamboozled into dealing with these people and buying cheap watches and jewellery at extravagant prices. One watch of "Milner & Co.'s" which the prisoner said he had to sell for £8. 10s. was valued at £2. 10s. The Recorder, I am glad to see, took the opportunity of warning the public against the firm. "It was," he remarked, "altogether a scandalous business, ruining unfortunate servant girls."

Recently a "Mrs. Dring, Witham Bank, Boston," advertised a "magnificent grandfather's ancient hall clock" for sale, and probably advertisements of other articles have emanated from the same quarter. I have had a communication from a lady in the west of England who was rash enough to purchase a clock on the strength of the representations in the advertisement, and in consequence of her experience with Mrs. Dring I should like to know something more about that person's business. Perhaps somebody at Boston can enlighten me. Meanwhile I would advise people who contemplate buying goods from Mrs. Dring to first have them sent "on appro."

Mr. H. Clarke, of 136, Great Charles-street, Birmingham, "is very hard up for money, and trade is very bad with him." So he "takes the liberty" (his own expression) of forwarding to likely people by post pairs of driving reins of his own make, which he desires the recipients either to purchase at the price of £1, or to return at an early date. Clarke certainly takes a great liberty—indeed, he might say more truly that he is guilty of a great piece of impudence. This form of annoyance, however, would very soon cease if all who are solicited in this way to buy goods which they don't want would make it a rule to refuse to return the things, and leave the would-be vendors to come and fetch them.

Among the numerous money-lenders' circulars which have been brought to my notice in the past week are two of a particularly impudent and nefarious character. One is addressed to a married lady by a firm calling themselves Perrin, Dunn, & Co., of Imperial-mansions, Oxford-street, who state that her name has been mentioned to them "as requiring an advance of money." It so happens that the lady referred to died more than a year ago, and she was never in want of monetary assistance from Shylock & Co. I do not know whether Perrin, Dunn, & Co. make a special business of luring married women to their net, but they are evidently gentry against whom married women — and their husbands, too — should be on their guard. The second circular emanates from one Vernon L. Beaumont, of 61, Moray-road, Tollington Park, who has been approaching several of the students at an agricultural college with an offer of a loan "on security of reversions, private incomes, annuities, or money coming at the death of relatives, arising under wills or settlements." I do not remember hearing of Vernon L. Beaumont before; but his circular is a sufficient introduction. Principals of colleges and schools cannot too earnestly warn their pupils against such sharks.

There is a turf tipster carrying on business in the name of "Morton Seegrove," in Old Ford-road, who seems to have a very fine command of circularising language. Here is an extract from one of his recent circulars:—

I have no equal at this business, for I attend our principal clubs each morning and assist to work out commissions, and am able to enter the company of people and glean information from sources which are quite closed to the ordinary advertising correspondent. Were I to place before you the names of several well-known turf personages who have been and are still on my list, it would convince you that I must be in a position to obtain turf intelligence of a first-class nature to keep the patronage of such gentlemen.

I have in my possession some splendid information concerning an animal running at Newmarket on Wednesday next, &c.

In a later circular Seegrove remarks: "It is not my wish to pester gentlemen with letters of this description against their will." Nevertheless, a young gentleman, of nineteen years of age, who tells me that he never attended a race meeting or made a bet in his life, and has far too much sense to patronise any of the Seegrove fraternity, has had no less than three letters of this description in one month. In the first of them Seegrove makes the interesting statement that he has "purchased your address, amongst others, as a good sporting address." One would like to know where, and how, he purchased it.

An old and hardened offender in the begging-letter line of business is at present writing from 9, York-road, Tunbridge Wells. Her name is Mrs. A. M. Thompson. In her latest effusion she states that she is "seeking twenty-five kindhearted people who will contribute towards the education of her youngest child." In order to stimulate sympathy, she encloses a photo of the young lady in question, the youngest of six, for whom, she says, she has an offer of an excellent school, if she can pay £25 per annum. A collecting book is also enclosed, with a few subscriptions entered—as a sort of ground-bait, I should imagine.

This Mrs. Thompson is, as she says, a widow. Her husband was a medical man, I believe, at Beverley, and died some twelve or thirteen years ago. His life was insured for £500, and a collection was made in the town for his widow, by which about £300 was raised. She started a boarding-house at St. Leonards, but, in consequence of her ill-health, moved to Ramsgate, a lady giving her £50 for that purpose. At Ramsgate she started writing begging-letters, and has been at it ever since, appealing generally for help in educating her children. She seems by this means to have kept all her children at school, and to have lived more or less comfortably down to the present time. In November, 1893, when inquiries were made of her, she stated that her two eldest daughters were in situations, that the two next were at school, supported by charity, that another was at home in delicate health, and that the sixth was living with a lady as companion to her daughter. Mrs. Thompson herself was also then receiving an allowance of £1 per week from a brother. The family were, therefore, at that time pretty comfortably provided for. Those who know the lady and her circumstances may consider themselves justified in helping her; but it is certainly not a case of distress; and on principle I would advise all who receive appeals like Mrs. Thompson's from absolute strangers, to make a rule of disregarding them.

Apropos of a recent paragraph in TRUTH on the difficulties of a gentleman over his plumber's bill, an officer of the Worshipful Company of Plumbers calls my attention to the special supplement published by the Lancet on July 4. In this supplement not only are some of the chief defects of plumbers' work dealt with from a sanitary point of view in a very comprehensive and exhaustive manner, but a great deal of attention is given to the question of price. Most people, when they come to pay a plumber's bill, are under the impression that they have been mercilessly bled, but the Lancet commissioner seems to be of opinion that one of the causes of defective sanitation in our houses is that the public, or the builders, from one cause or another, refuse to pay the price of good workmanship. "What is required," he says, "is a standard of charges that will yield to the master-plumber a fair remuneration for capital and time employed, or some properly qualified Board to whom, at a slight cost, an appeal might be made on either side to act as arbitrators." Cannot the Plumbers' Company, who, for a City Company, seem to take an exceptional amount of interest in the trade they represent, do something to supply these desiderata?

It would seem that it is not London alone that has been puzzled over its gas bills for the first quarter of 1896. A gentleman residing at Altrincham gives me an experience very similar to that of the London householders whose grievances have lately been noticed in TRUTH. In addition to the other reasons for increased consumption in 1895 as compared with 1896, this gentleman had an illness in the former year, which necessitated the burning of a gas fire night and day for a fortnight. This fire was hardly lit in 1896, and, in addition to that, a billiard-room chandelier, which was responsible for a considerable consumption in '95, was removed at the beginning of March '96, to be exchanged for an electric light fitting. Nevertheless, the gas bill, which had been £5. 14s. 4d. for the same quarter of 1895, became £8. 13s. in 1896. The meter is reported to be correct, and the company are unable to offer any explanation, except that there must have been some waste of which the master of the house was not aware. This proposition is almost self-evident. But the material questions remain, how did the waste occur, and did the gas company have anything to do with it?

A gross case of political boycotting has just occurred in West Gloucestershire. For sixteen years Mr. Robert Biddle has been an annual tenant at Woolastone, of Sir W. Marling, a Tory squire. That he is a good tenant may be judged from the fact that he has won four prizes for the cultivation of his farm. But he happens to be a Liberal in politics, and lately committed the crime of winning a seat on the Gloucestershire County Council from a Tory J.P. He has now been served with a notice to quit at Michaelmas next, no reason being assigned, other than that which every one who knows the circumstances can infer for himself. The fact of a Tory landlord being thus able to afford to evict an excellent tenant is a pretty commentary upon the call that has just been made upon British taxpayers to supplement agricultural rents out of the public purse, on the plea of agricultural depression. Landlords may imagine that they are serving the interests of their own class in ejecting tenants who differ from them in politics, but in my humble opinion this is a grievous mistake, and such incidents as this at Woolastone must not only tend to stimulate Radical sentiment, but must eventually lead to landlords being deprived of the powers they use in this way.

I am asked by a correspondent the best way to learn how to debate, by which, I presume, he means what is the best way to acquire the habit of at once replying to the speech of a previous speaker? I should imagine that this can only be acquired by so cultivating contrast that the brain acts almost automatically in that direction. A nerve is excited by a wave of sound. This excitement is transmitted along the nerve to a cell in the grey matter of the brain. The cell is infinitesimally decomposed, and this decomposition is met by a rush of blood which acts as nutriment to it. The result is that an amount of stored energy is set free, which is an idea, although why this is the result of the decomposition of brain tissue no one knows. This idea may be concurrence or contrast. Whether it be the one or the other depends primarily on volition. But if contrast rather than concurrence be produced by volition, the idea produced is automatically one of contrast rather than of concurrence.

A person, therefore, wishing to become a ready debater should never concur, and should train his nerve cells to produce an inverted picture of all that arouses their activity. If he does this, he may very probably weaken his judgment, but he will become—provided that he has a stock of words on which to draw—a debater. The normal condition of the mind is assent, because it is the line of the least resistance, and requires the least cellular activity. This is somewhat modified by a new idea coming in contact with some old idea that has firmly impressed itself upon the brain cells. A person, therefore, seldom really weighs an argument. As it agrees or disagrees with his stored-up ideas, so does it produce assent or dissent. I have now answered the question of my correspondent, but whether he will be wiser from the answer I do not know. My explanation amounts to this: think "No," until the brain, trained to this habit, evolves "No" without any act of volition on the part of the thinker.

THE SANITARY ENGINEERING CO. (Carter Bros.), 65, Victoria-st., Westminster, for making Sanitary Surveys in London or country.

A Burton Radical sends me a newspaper report of a Primrose League gathering in that borough, at which the principal business seems to have been the consumption of a meat tea and the enjoyment of such elevating sports as a tug-of-war for ladies, an egg-and-spoon race for ladies, and races for ladies of different ages. There were similar events for men, and the prizes were such things as aprons, shawls, umbrellas, pipes, and tobacco. My friend opines that the Primrose League must be on the down grade. Not at all. This is how it has always been accustomed to fulfil its noble mission; and no doubt those who run the League know very well that for the promotion of their political cause it is safer to rely upon meat teas, egg-and-spoon races, and so forth, than upon appeals to the reason and understanding of the people.

THE ANGEL GABRIEL.

Mr. Balfour says that the Angel Gabriel could not lead the House of Commons satisfactorily.

If Gabriel himself were here,
He'd quickly find his level;
And why? The reason's pretty clear,
He's not sufficient "Devil."

The most astounding programme ever dreamt of by human being is that set forth by the Reverend Joseph Parker in a letter to the Times. The House of Commons is to be reduced to half its present numbers, and of this reduced House, the Prime Minister, if a Peer, the Bishops, and the chairmen and past chairmen of other ecclesiastical bodies are to be ex-officio members, because political and social questions can be greatly helped by "pastoral study and experience." County Parliaments are to be developed, "not for legislation but for discussion," and the foreign policy of the country is to be left either to Lord Salisbury or to Lord Rosebery, both of whom have deservedly won the confidence of the whole country. Lord Rosebery is to be recognised as the "National Leader of English Liberalism," owing to "his training, his experience, and his transcendent ability." Having thus settled the Executive and the Legislature of the future, the first business of both is to be to cleanse the Prayer Book of Popery, which means "a revised Protestant and defeudalised Book of Common Prayer."

This proposal to hand over the government of the country either to Lord Salisbury or to Lord Rosebery, who are to be aided in their task by "the study and experience" of the pastors of the various religious denominations, comes strangely from a Nonconformist; for Nonconformists hold that State and Church, having separate functions, ought not to trench on the attributes of each other. I should imagine that the Reverend Joseph Parker will not find one Dissenter ready to endorse his programme. In days past the Nonconformist divines exercised considerable political influence over their flocks. At present the flock considers that it knows quite as much about politics as its shepherd, and resents the shepherd endeavouring—as shepherd—to force his political views upon the flock.

FROM THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE.

The following verses were picked up near the seat usually occupied by a well-known County member, the day after Sir O. Morgan's constituents had given their impromptu concert on the Terrace:—

Sigh no more, dear Mr. Speaker! Mr. Erskine, have no fear!
There no longer is good reason for devising rules severe;
There no longer is occasion to deal harshly with the swarm
Of fair feminine invaders who the Terrace take by storm.

For, of course, you know what's happened; you most certainly have heard
What upon this very Terrace only yesterday occurred,
When a score of sturdy Welshmen, by Sir Osborne Morgan led,
Stood and sang (ye gods!) a chorus in their native tongue so dread.

Aye, they stood and sang in daylight by the swiftly flowing Thames,
What the complaisant reporter says were "well-known Cymric gems;"
Unabashed they stood and sung them till—though no one cried "Encore!"—
They had wakened frightened echoes on the distant Lambeth shore.

Now, it seems to me quite certain that no Madam and no Miss,
Though devoted to the Terrace, could survive a shock like this;
Be they e'er so fond of taking tea and cake with their M.P.,
By such vocal efforts startled, they perforce must turn and flee!

So the cure is very simple, if the ladies still should flock
To the Terrace in such numbers as this much-liked lounge to block,
Let the bland Sir Osborne Morgan more constituents quickly bring,
And just let them with effusion in their native language sing!

Nay, if that be not sufficient all the tables there to clear,
Let some other vocal parties on the scene forthwith appear;
Say a group of Celtic songsters of a Tipperary clan,
And a band of Gaelic warblers with their pipers in the van!

Or a lodge of "Orange" heroes; or a score of Yorkshire tikes,
And a crowd of vocal Fen-men from East England's dunes and dikes;
Or a set of stalwart Dalesmen, with strong lungs and brawny limbs,
And a gang of Cornish miners loudly shouting Wesley's hymns!

Let each member, as he pleases, as he shows his voters round,
Help to swell the choral chaos that would certainly abound,
And the Speaker and the Serjeant then serenely may sit still,
For if that won't clear the Terrace, why I do not know what will!

CARPET BEATING SEASON.—The Queen says: "A good place to send carpets to is the Compressed Air Carpet and Tapestry Cleaning Company, Brook Green, Hammersmith, W. Dust blown out. No beaters used." To prevent deception carpets cleaned by this process bear the Trade Mark on the back.

Mr. Radcliffe Cooke, M.P., appears to have told his leaders some home truths in regard to their muddling. He ascribes it to taking the opinions of the aristocracy, "with whom alone they associate," for the will of the people, and he advises them to mix more freely with the rank and file of their followers.

This advice might be usefully given to all Governments. None mix—in the House of Commons—sufficiently with their followers, and this has been the case ever since Ministers were given private rooms. They have a separate staircase to approach the House of Commons, and a separate door to go in and out of the House, through which they appear mysteriously, and with equal mystery disappear. The result of all this is, that they are as separated from their followers as actors on the stage are from the audience before the curtain, or the priest in a church from his congregation. Half Lord Palmerston's popularity was due to his gift of familiarity with all or any of his followers.

The Times correspondent with the Soudan Expedition informs us that the rule of the Khalifa is oppressive. It is thus described:—"In theory certain fixed percentages of crops and cattle are supposed to be collected for the Government by the Baggara tax-collectors, but in practice it invariably comes to this:—Twenty or thirty Baggaras arrive at a place accompanied by their slaves; they read out to the people the Khalifa's proclamation with regard to taxation, and then seize all the land and all the cattle. They apportion out to the original inhabitants only just as much land as will enable them to procure the barest subsistence, and then enter into possession of all the remainder, employing their slaves to cultivate it for their benefit." Would not this be how a Matabele would describe the civilising mission of the Chartered Company in Matabeleland, except that, as the civilisers do not bring slaves with them, they force the natives to act in that capacity?

In a letter that I have received from Bulawayo it is strongly urged that any Court of Inquiry into the administration of the Chartered Company should have before it some of the settlers in Rhodesia. "There is great danger otherwise," writes my correspondent, "that the Company, backed up by its Company-promoting and Press friends, and by the many who have succeeded and hope to succeed in getting from it pickings and douceurs of various kinds, will so manage as to make it appear that all the settlers are favourable to the Company." This is very far from being the case, but, as it is generally the poorer settlers who have most cause to complain of the Company, there is little likelihood that their grievances will be properly presented unless evidence is obtained from them.

As to the lot of the natives under the benign rule of the Company, my correspondent encloses a statement by a prospector respecting the treatment to which two "boys" in his employ were subjected at the instance of a Native Commissioner. The incident occurred a week or two before the commencement of the native rising. It seems that during the prospector's temporary absence from his camp the native police came across one of the "boys" and ordered him to proceed with them to another place to work, but on the way there he bolted back. Some weeks later the Native Commissioner informed the prospector that the police must take this "boy" and punish him for "running away." He was taken accordingly by the Inspector of Native Police (a European), who also arrested a second man, remarking "I believe I want him as well, but I'm not sure; I'll take the —— at any rate." The statement continues:—

> I saw nothing more of them until they came back to me. Their backs were in a fearful state. Pieces of skin, from 2 in. to 3 in. long, and 1 in. to 2 in. wide, had been taken off them with a sjambok. There were great weals across the spine, and the sjambok must have whipped round from their back, as the skin was peeling off places in front. They said they had had forty strokes each. They had crawled to my place, the mile and a half from ——'s (the Commissioner's) place, and when they arrived the blood was streaming from their wounds to the ground. . . . . I brought the boys into town (Bulawayo) and took them to the Magistrate's court, where Mr. P. G. Smith said they had been shamefully beaten, and had them sent to hospital. I have heard nothing more since.

It will be observed that there was not even a semblance or pretence of a trial of the two wretched natives who were flogged with such fiendish cruelty. I gather that their employer has been to some extent moved to give an account of the affair by resentment at a remark of Earl Grey's, that the rebellion was partly brought about by the ill-treatment that the natives received from the settlers—a resentment which many of the latter have expressed. The Company's Administrator was decidedly injudicious from his own point of view in beginning to throw stones.

No one had the remotest doubt that Mr. Rhodes and certain of the officials of the Chartered Company in South Africa had confederated together to promote a raid into the Transvaal. In regard to this, the finding of the Committee of the Cape Parliament causes no surprise. Whether Mr. Rhodes did or did not at the last moment advise Dr. Jameson that the raid should be deferred is obviously rather a question of tactics than of principle. It is pretty clear, however, that the Cape Committee is of opinion that he did not really wish it to be deferred. On receiving information that the raid was to take place, he drafted a telegram which was not forwarded because the telegraphic line was cut. As Prime Minister he must have had a very shrewd impression that this was the case. The next day, when communications were restored, the telegram was not sent, and during these twenty-four hours he kept out of the way of the Governor and of the members of his Cabinet, and did not inform them what was transpiring. It would seem by the report of the Committee that large sums were drawn from the coffers of the Company in London for some mysterious flotation, and that these were subsequently covered by a cheque drawn on himself by Mr. Rhodes. The Committee therefore believes that the London Board was cognisant of what was to occur. I doubt if all were. The Board seems to have been in the main a mere ornamental appendage to the Company. Probably some actually knew, some took care not to appear to know, and some really did not know.

It would seem that the famous "women and children" letter was in the hands of Dr. Jameson a month previous to the raid, and was post-dated by him. Here again the matter is of small importance, because it has been proved by the published telegrams of the leader of the movement for reform in Johannesburg that he considered that the mass of the Reformers had no wish that the Chartered Company's forces should enter the Transvaal, and that the reforms themselves were only kept to the fore by a plentiful expenditure of money from outside.

The conclusions to be drawn from the report of the Committee are, that Rhodes, a German of the name of Beit, and Rutherfoord Harris, the South African Secretary of the Company, were the prime movers in the raid. With them were confederated certain persons in Johannesburg. Dr. Jameson was left a free hand; at the last moment there was a hitch, and the responsibility of at once going forward or putting off the moment of action was left to him. The entire scheme was a financial one, and patriotism had no part in it, the aim apparently being to annex to Rhodesia a portion of the goldfields of the Transvaal, and thus bolster up the shares of the Company in the market by securing to it a valuable asset.

When Napoleon was about to engage in the battle of Austerlitz, he issued a proclamation to his troops, promising them that he would not expose himself to danger if they fought well. The Cape Times is more or less in financial connection with Mr. Rhodes, and it contains an amusing appeal to that remarkable man to moderate his valour. "Rhodesians," it says, "have such an interest in his well-being that for their sakes, if not for his own, he should take more care of himself," for "he rides about on a big, well-fed horse, and being big in person himself, offers an excellent target to the enemy." Have the Press scribes of Mr. Rhodes in South Africa really no sense of the ridiculous? These appeals to the hero not to risk his valuable life, and to leave it to others to incur the chance of a random shot in putting down an outbreak, which is greatly due to him and his financial friends having denuded Rhodesia of its police by employing them in a land-grabbing expedition, are rendering Mr. Rhodes utterly ridiculous. The battle in which he ought to have taken part was waged in the Cape Parliament. The Parliamentary Committee very rightly complains of his not having appeared before it. Had he done so, this would have been a far greater evidence of pluck than riding about on a big, well-fed horse in the veldt, and watching others shoot down ill-armed, and consequently not very dangerous, savages.

A motion was made in the Cape Parliament last week to give Mr. Rhodes leave of absence. Such a motion would have been a formal one if moved in the House of Commons, and would have been agreed to nem. con.; indeed, this often takes place. In the Cape Parliament, however, a member opposed it, on the ground that it was a vote of confidence in Mr. Rhodes. This construction was at once repudiated by the mover, and the motion, of course, was carried. Several of the Rhodesian organs in this country dwell on the occurrence as proof positive that the Cape Parliament is most favourably disposed towards Mr. Rhodes. If only we could get hold of the amounts expended by persons connected with the Chartered Company in bribery, what curious reading it would be!

I hear that the wirepullers of the Chartered Company are doing their utmost to ensure that the Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry shall be a joint Committee of Lords and Commons, as they think that a joint Committee would be more favourable towards the Company than one consisting alone of M.P.s. On such a Committee no Liberal M.P. would serve, and in view of this, it is not likely that the Committee will be a joint one of the two Houses. It is contrary to all precedent: whenever the House of Commons has decided upon an investigation of the sort intended, it has appointed a Committee, ad hoc, consisting exclusively of its own members.

SCRUTATOR.

THE BALFOUR BIKE.

ACIDS have their useful properties, so have alkalies. But mix them together, and the one neutralises the other. This is, I suppose, why, although individually the members of a Cabinet may be sensible, collectively they seem in the conduct of public business to be without the modicum of common sense vouchsafed by Providence to a jackass. Mr. Balfour has learnt to "bike," but as Leader of the House he has not got beyond the first lesson in the art when the wheel turns here, there, and everywhere, the machine is always on the wobble, and the rider comes down now on this side, now on that. What could have been more absurd than to have started with a programme that could only have been carried through had Parliament sat, not six months, but for six years in continuous Session? On the Bills brought in, too, it might have been supposed that the Cabinet knew their own minds, and had gauged those of their followers. Neither, however, was the case. The Education Bill was to be their magnum opus. The man in the House who seemed to have the lowest opinion of that Bill, as a constructive effort, was its putative father, Sir John Gorst. The opposition to it was as strong on the Ministerial side as on the Opposition side, and after a number of days had been devoted to a general discussion of it, the bantling was discussed out of existence. If this be the right mode of conducting public business, all that has to be said is that public business is not business in the ordinary acceptation of the word. On the Irish Land Bill, too, the Government could not make up its mind. Mr. Gerard Balfour has explained that his object was to introduce an Irish Bill upon which all Irish would agree. He might as well have devoted his time as Irish Secretary to an endeavour to square the circle. I can understand an Irish Secretary calling the Irish Members together, and accepting the view of the majority in regard to land tenure in Ireland. But even then weeks would have had to be devoted to the Bill in the House if it were of any real value, during which the Irish minority would have done its best to defeat it.

The practical politician accepts the conditions under which he has to work. The unpractical politician assumes non-existent conditions because he would have them exist. The latter has been the mental state of her Majesty's Government during the present Session, and a very pretty mess these philosophers in the clouds have made of it. When the Session ends all that they will have done will be to have made a present of a considerable amount of public money to landocrats and plutocrats by relieving them of taxation and by transferring it to the shoulders of the community. Agricultural land is only to pay in future half rates, which means that the occupier will have to pay in rent what he is let off in rates; the land tax, which is the rent charged by the State to the individual owner for ownership, is to be reduced; and all who have invested in valuable works of art are to be permitted to hand them over on death to their heirs without payment of death dues. This latter "reform" is tantamount to a present to each generation of Rothschilds of about £100,000, and further than this spoliation of the many for the benefit of the few cannot well go.

But whilst Mr. Balfour has not got beyond his first lesson on the Government bicycle, it must be admitted that the machine itself is an exceedingly bad one for all purposes of progress. A Legislature should be able to legislate. This is why it exists. The Tory creed is that the less there is of legislation, the better is it for the country. Tories rejoice, therefore, that the machine is guaranteed to go very slowly over the level, and to decline entirely to move up hill. The mistake which Radicals make is to aid and abet them, on the plea that everything ought to be so fully discussed, that discussion as to what reforms ought to be passed takes the place of passing reforms. When the Liberals have a majority they deplore and denounce the obstructive tactics of the Tories. When the Tories have a majority the Liberals practise these same tactics, and they fail to see that in so doing, they play the game of the Tories, who are delighted to be provided with an excuse for doing nothing. The actual aim of both when in a minority, is to stalemate the majority: the difference being, that the Tories like being stalemated, and the Liberals do not. Consequently, the Parliamentary game, as now played, is entirely to the advantage of the Tories. I am, however, by no means certain that the official Liberals really desire to put an end to this. They like to profess the most advanced views in the country, but they are not exactly sorry that they cannot give effect to them in Parliament.

The result of all this is that Parliament is every day being more and more discredited, and the governing centre of gravity is being every day more and more transferred from the House of Commons to the Executive. The latter, instead of being the servant of the Legislature, has become its master. This is why I would have all Radicals rise above the wretched rivalries between two opposing gangs struggling for the flesh-pots, and insist that the elected Representatives of the People should in great and in small things be the governing body in the State. Be the majority at a General Election Tory or Liberal, that majority ought to be able to give the fullest legislative effect to the pledges and assurances on which it was elected. For Radicals to seek to discredit the House of Commons whenever the Tories have a majority there, is to discredit popular government by sapping all popular respect for it. This throws power into the hands of the ruling classes, for power must reside somewhere, and if not with the people, then with those that are not of the people.

We are sometimes told that electors do not care for constitutional changes, and desire alone legislation that will materially benefit them. To a certain extent this is true, and those opposed to constitutional changes play upon this "bread and circuses" aspiration. But Radical electors should bear in mind that they never will obtain any real security for legislation in their interests, until the legislative machine is altered. As it is, the House of Commons clings to a mode of procedure the aim of which is to hinder and impede, rather than to facilitate, legislative reforms. As long as this scheme of government continues, all that the people will get are a few crumbs superciliously thrown to them, and the privilege of looking on at the feast, which has been bought and paid for with their labour, being consumed by Brahmins.

The rules of Procedure, which were presumably originally made to aid in the confection of laws, and to secure to all members of the House an opportunity by voice and vote to advocate the views that they were sent to Parliament to urge, have now become the very reverse of that for which they were intended. They are impediments in the way of legislation, and they crush out all independent criticism; they serve to reduce Parliamentary control to impotence; they are an instrument by means of which a Ministry is able—provided that it has a mechanical majority, to rule without Parliament, and to bid defiance to the wishes and requirements of the country, no matter how strong public opinion may be for them, and yet withal to profess the strongest desire to give effect to them. They are the first line of defence against all sane progress, and the House of Lords is the second line. Between the two, popular government has become a mere sham.

But we must not suppose that the classes are likely to surrender their political supremacy without a struggle. In a fair and square fight they would soon go to the wall. This they know, and every trick will be resorted to in order to hinder such a fight. If we allow ourselves to be involved in a campaign of trickery, we shall be beaten. We must force our opponents into the open. The issue with us must be clear and definite. We must not permit ourselves to be diverted from it. We must be even more on our guard against false friends than open enemies.

THE PRICE OF A LIFEBOAT HERO.

Communications have been made to me both from the Lifeboat Saturday Fund and the National Lifeboat Institution with reference to the article on lifeboat affairs in last week's TRUTH. What the Lifeboat Saturday Fund have to say may be very briefly disposed of; for, as I intimated last week, the question is a domestic dispute, with which the public is not very much concerned at present—though it may be in the future. The Organising Secretary of the Fund takes exception to my statement that the headquarters "were last year transferred to London, where they are now directly under the control of the National Lifeboat Institution." The headquarters, he states, were not transferred to London till January 1 of this year; and they are in no way under the control of the Institution—which I am glad to hear, for several reasons. The Secretary also objects, I gather, to the comparison between the figures for 1894 and 1895 (the figure "1892" in my article was an obvious misprint) being made the basis of any inference respecting "the results of the change of administration," because he contends that there was in 1895 no change of administration whatever. This, however, might have been clearly understood from what I said as to the contentions of the two disputants. I really do not think it is necessary to go further into this question, as I have expressed no opinion on it myself, and I would advise the public also to suspend their judgment. When the result of the Saturday collection for the present year is known, it will be quite time enough to discuss the question whether the removal from Manchester and the severance of Mr. Macara's connection with the movement have been advantageous or not to the Fund.

I pass, therefore, to the much more important matter dealt with in last week's TRUTH—the payment of lifeboat crews for salvage services to property. On this subject, Mr. Dibdin, the Secretary to the Institution, has written me at considerable length, but, I am sorry to say, without any result commensurate with the length of his remarks—indeed, I only find in Mr. Dibdin's letter complete confirmation both of the statements I made and of the conclusions drawn from them. The first paragraph of the letter deals with the management of the Saturday Fund, and requires no notice after what I have said above. The second paragraph states that negotiations are pending between the Institution and Lloyd's on the question of salvage services by lifeboats, and expresses Mr. Dibdin's "surprise" that any one should have communicated the Lloyd's allegations to the Press while those negotiations were pending. I really cannot see that this is any way material to the issue raised in my article, nor can I understand the ground for Mr. Dibdin's surprise; but I am afraid it is a habit of this gentleman to introduce personalities into controversies concerning the lifeboat service, if he sees the slightest opportunity for so doing. Passing over this point also, we will come to the merits of the question with the following passage. I may perhaps remark at starting, in reference to Mr. Dibdin's first sentence, that I was perfectly aware—as I suppose everybody else is—that the lifeboat crews are nominally volunteers, and I am at a loss to discover anything in my article which would lead Mr. Dibdin to infer that I am ignorant on this point. But as Mr. Dibdin raises the point, it should be remembered that the coxswains receive retaining fees, and that the men are paid for their time at practice. I rather fancy, too, that it has lately been the practice to give a retainer to the bow oar as well as the coxswain:—

> I gather from your criticisms that you are not aware that the lifeboat crews are all volunteers, and that the Lifeboat Institution has no power whatever to insist on the crews in their private capacity using a form of agreement of any kind, nor could it advise them to use a form of agreement, as suggested by the Secretary of Lloyd's, which gives the sole arbitration, or right of appointing the arbitrator, to Lloyd's, who represent one party to the matter to be arbitrated upon. My Committee have given the greatest attention to the subject, and have sought the view of the Board of Trade on it. They have been informed by the Board of Trade that it is not their intention, as proposed by the Secretary of Lloyd's, to make the adoption of Lloyd's form of salvage agreement obligatory. The sole locus standi of the Lifeboat Institution in the matter is the lending of the lifeboats in cases where the vessels in distress do not need assistance in respect of life saving. For this the Institution does not receive a farthing, the only condition of the loan in such cases being that should the lifeboat be damaged while rendering property-salvage services the cost of repair is to be met by the salvors. The salving of life is the sole object of the Institution, and it was for this purpose alone that it was incorporated under Royal Charter. The Institution is satisfied, however, that it is not the wish of ship-owners or underwriters that the Institution should refuse to allow the lifeboat crews to use the lifeboats for rendering property-salvage assistance to vessels in distress, as such assistance often saves underwriters and ship-owners from very considerable loss. My committee wrote to the Secretary of Lloyd's three months ago asking the direct question whether it was "really the wish of the Committee of Lloyd's that the crews of the lifeboats should in no circumstances be allowed to render assistance to vessels in distress," but although the question has since been repeated no definite reply has been given on this important point. The Institution's sole control over the lifeboat crews is when they are engaged on life-saving service. The Secretary of Lloyd's has approached the General Shipowners' Association with the view to obtaining an opinion from them on the subject, and they have passed a resolution declining to press the Institution to adopt the views of Lloyd's. This resolution was not passed until they had obtained full information as to the point in dispute.

There are one or two remarks in this paragraph which are obviously open to exception. Whether the lifeboat crews should or should not adopt Lloyd's form of salvage agreement, is a question on which I know nothing, and which was not even remotely alluded to in my article. It seems to me that Mr. Dibdin, notwithstanding his "surprise" at the Lloyd's statement having come to my knowledge pending the negotiations, is using this opportunity to argue out in the Press some question at issue in those negotiations. It is not a question in which I have any interest, but when Mr. Dibdin says that the Institution "could not" advise their crews to adopt Lloyd's agreement, he obviously means that they would not. They can give any advice they please to their crews, and they can, if they please, insist on their advice being adopted. "The sole locus standi of the Lifeboat Institution in the matter," says the Secretary, is "the lending of the lifeboats in cases where the vessels in distress do not need assistance in respect of life-saving." What more locus standi could they possibly have? A boat belonging to the Institution is taken out by the regular crew under the command of the regular officer. The Institution have absolute power to say on what terms the boat shall or shall not be used, and consequently have complete control over all that the crew do. To talk as if the Institution only had a limited jurisdiction over its own boat and crew is absurd. Besides when a lifeboat goes out to a crew in distress, can anybody say whether they are going to save life or merely to save property? I should imagine not. Mr. Dibdin's account of the arrangement would seem to result in this: that if a lifeboat crew go off to a ship in distress, and find after a time that no life is in danger, they then drop the character of a lifeboat crew, and become a party of ordinary mariners using a boat which the Institution has kindly lent to them. I do not say that this may not be, from a legal point of view, a strictly accurate definition of the position, but I ask the public to take careful note of the contention, more especially in view of what follows.

Mr. Dibdin next deals with some of the cases referred to in the Lloyd's statement. In regard to this, all I have to say is that I assumed that the Lloyd's allegations would be denied by the Institution, or rather by the crews to whom these allegations referred, and that I carefully refrained from drawing any conclusion which depended on controvertible facts. I give what Mr. Dibdin says under this head because I do not wish to afford ground for any imputation of having done the Lifeboat Institution less than justice. But I am bound to say in regard to it that it does not go to the root of the matter, and that where there is a conflict of evidence on such points, I should be more disposed to accept the testimony of the captain and crew of the ship than of the lifeboat men whose conduct was impugned. The best test of truth in such a case is "cui bono"? I do not see, for instance, why a captain should assert that lifeboat men made palpably exaggerated representations about the dangers of the coast; or boarded the ship after being ordered off; or gave so much trouble that he had to threaten to throw them overboard; or why sailors should say that lifeboat men tried to induce them to abandon the ship, if none of these things occurred. But I can see very plainly why the lifeboat crews should deny these imputations, even if they were true. However, here is what Mr. Dibdin has to say:—

The cases given in the document from Lloyd's to which you refer have been carefully examined by my Committee. They represent almost entirely property salvage cases during the year 1895, the list having been furnished to Lloyd's by this Institution, and my Committee have pointed out to the Secretary of Lloyd's that two of the cases in question were connected with the Ramsgate lifeboat, which is under the management of the Board of Trade. Another case, that of the Mona's Isle, mentioned by one of the informants, cannot be traced at all as a salvage performed by any of the Institution's lifeboats. As regards the Capella, my Committee fail to understand why the case should have been mentioned, inasmuch as the lifeboat was not employed at all for property salvage purposes; the lifeboat, having completed her life-saving work seven hours earlier in the day, had been placed in her house. The alleged property salvage was the work of a shore boat, made use of by the men in their private capacity. Although the same men had, it is true, previously gallantly saved lives in the lifeboat, the Institution cannot be held responsible for their subsequent action, which was altogether unconnected with the lifeboat.

In the case of the Echo, the honorary secretary, Mr. Mirehouse, of Angle Hall, Pembrokeshire, who was himself in the lifeboat at the time, declares that the allegations that the crew of the lifeboat tempted the Echo's crew to desert their ship is entirely without foundation.

I may mention that none of the cases here referred to was among those specially noticed in TRUTH. The Capella's is a case which occurred in 1891, and was only referred to in a note at the end of the Lloyd's statement. The reason, however, for its being so referred to, although Mr. Dibdin's Committee fail to understand it, seems to me sufficiently obvious. The lifeboat crew brought an action for salvage, which the court dismissed with the remark that "the misconduct of the lifeboat crew was such as to work a total forfeiture of salvage reward." The case, therefore, was evidently cited to show that lifeboat crews are not always beyond reproach; and the fact that the misconduct was committed in a shore boat in no way weakens this conclusion. With regard to the Echo, the last case dealt with by Mr. Dibdin, it was not one of the cases cited in TRUTH, and it was not even a case in which a claim for salvage was made. The testimony, therefore, of Mr. Mirehouse, of Angle Hall, however impressive in itself, has no bearing on my argument. Mr. Dibdin continues:—

With regard to the remaining twenty-five cases, the information given is in many cases quite at variance with the certified evidence furnished by the Honorary Secretaries of the Stations, and the former not being substantiated by the names of those from whom the information proceeds cannot be accepted as accurate.

This is a somewhat bold assumption. Mr. Dibdin may feel that he personally cannot accept the evidence given to Lloyd's as accurate; but he must remember that, to the public, evidence given to Lloyd's is a priori as credible as evidence given to the Lifeboat Institution. I have already given the reasons for holding the allegations of ships' captains and crews quite as trustworthy as those of the lifeboat men whose conduct is impugned, and it is not necessary to argue the point further.

I notice (continues Mr. Dibdin) that in your article you four times use the expression "facts," thus assuming the accuracy of the statements made by Lloyd's in the papers to which you refer, whereas my Committee take exception to the statements in question for the reason that they hold that they are inaccurate and therefore not "facts."

If Mr. Dibdin had spent his time in mastering the drift of my remarks instead of counting the number of times that this particular word is used, he might have saved himself the trouble of penning this singularly inept paragraph. Neither he nor his Committee can possibly assert that there are no facts in the Lloyd's statement. All the more important assertions are beyond contradiction, and Mr. Dibdin does not attempt to deny them. The "facts" to which I referred, and from which alone I drew any conclusion, are the facts as to lifeboat crews going out to earn salvage money, enforcing their claims in a litigious spirit, and obtaining in this way hundreds and even thousands of pounds at a single stroke for their services. These are the "facts" which Mr. Dibdin and his Committee have to attend to, and to which I call the attention of the public. In the rest of the letter it will be seen that, so far from being questioned, these facts are taken for granted, and even defended :—

As regards the cases quoted, it would appear that in no case was there an agreement made, the amounts of salvage were all either ordered by the Admiralty Court or settled by the owners or underwriters out of court; my Committee presume that in the former case Lloyd's do not question the justice of the Admiralty Court award, and in the latter case the owners or underwriters could have taken them into court had they not considered a settlement out of court wiser.

The policy adopted by the Institution as regards property salvage services performed by lifeboat crews is, as far as the Committee are aware, precisely the same as that adopted on the Continent.

In conclusion, I must again remind you that the lifeboat men are volunteers, and were the Institution to attempt to force on them any conditions such as those suggested by the Secretary of Lloyd's, the almost certain results would be (1) that the men would on some parts of the coast refuse to man the lifeboats; (2) that they would use their own craft for the salvage work, making precisely the same claims and receiving the same amounts for the property salvage services as they would had they used the lifeboats; (3) that many lives would be lost both of those on board the distressed vessels and of those attempting to rescue them in unsuitable boats.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, CHARLES DIBDIN, Secretary.

Royal National Lifeboat Institution,
14, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.
July 17, 1896.

In these concluding passages of the Secretary's letter we come to the whole point of the matter, and to facts in regard to which there seems to be no question whatever. The only question is as to the proper view of these facts, and not a word that Mr. Dibdin says affects in the slightest degree the opinions expressed in last week's TRUTH. On the contrary, it seems to me that this gentleman has placed the case against the Lifeboat Institution and the Lifeboat crews in a far uglier light than any previously thrown upon it. For what does he say? Apparently, the only inducement to the sailors "on some parts of the coast" to volunteer for lifeboat service is the expectation of making money by property salvage operations, and that without this inducement the Institution cannot hope to man its boats. In other words, the lifeboat heroism of which we hear so much, and which is such a potent factor in the appeals of the Institution to public support, rests exclusively upon a cash basis, and if the heroes are not paid their price no heroes will be forthcoming. To me this is an astounding confession, and I believe it will be not less astounding to the subscribers to the Lifeboat Institution and the public at large. So much has always been made of the nobility and self-devotion of lifeboat crews, and benevolence has been so powerfully stirred by sentimental admiration for their work, that when the naked truth becomes apparent, many will look upon the National Lifeboat Institution as little better than a gigantic imposture. There is one way, and one way alone, in which the Institution can remove that impression, and that is by publishing a complete statement of all the amounts which have been received by its crews for salvage services, say, during the last five years. Let us know what these men are earning, and we shall then know what claims the so-called work of life-saving on our coasts has to be regarded as a charitable undertaking. For the present, there seems to be room for considerable doubt as to whether it has that character at all.

MACVEIGH THE PIRATE.

In its current issue the Scottish Antiquary has a trenchant and useful exposure of the latest piracy of Mr. or "Captain" MacVeigh, of Dumfries. As already mentioned in TRUTH, the fraud in question consists in the republication, with the name of MacVeigh as author, of a book called "The Scottish Nation," by Mr. W. Anderson. MacVeigh has apparently done with this work precisely what he did in the case of the "Genealogical History," which first brought him under notice in TRUTH. It will be remembered that in that case he obtained by a trick a number of unbound copies of the work from Messrs. Virtue & Co., of London, and had them bound up with a forged title-page, representing the work as his own. In the present instance he is in the same way using the whole text of Anderson's "Scottish Nation," with a title-page of his own, and a preface slightly garbled from the original. In his garbling MacVeigh manages to show that he has not a sufficient knowledge of grammar to perform with success even an act of literary theft, as may be seen from the two following parallel extracts :—

Opening sentence of Anderson's preface.	Opening sentence of MacVeigh's preface.
The work which is now presented to the world assumes, by its comprehensively national title, that the various and diversified information it contains is so illustrative of the Scottish nation, and of the origin and constitution of modern Scottish Society, as to justify the adoption for it of a design so conspicuous.	The work which is now presented to the world assumes that the various and diversified information it contains is so illustrative of the Scottish Nation and of the origin and constitution of modern Scottish Society, as to the adoption for it (sic) of a designation so conspicuous.

The concluding passage of the preface is a peculiarly fine piece of impudence, MacVeigh boldly taking credit to himself for twelve years' labour and research in producing the work he has stolen :—

ANDERSON.	MACVEIGH.
In the course of his labours the author was necessarily obliged to enter into extensive correspondence with noblemen and gentlemen in all parts of the kingdom, and with some families out of it, and he now returns his acknowledgments to all for the kindness and promptitude with which they answered his applications, furnished valuable information, and, in many cases, placed their family records for the time at his perusal. It may give some idea of the care and research bestowed upon this work, when it is stated that the author was altogether nearly twelve years occupied in its composition and correction. W. A. Respecting the body of the work the Scottish Antiquary makes the following remarks :—

Now for the results of Mr. MacVeigh's labours! A glance is sufficient. Behind all the MacVeigh titles, and behind the MacVeigh preface, lies bodily and complete, but, of course, minus the original title-page and preface, a copy of Anderson's "Scottish Nation," from the original stereotypes of the now extinct firm of Fullerton & MacNab, printers, Edinburgh, and bearing their name at the end of each volume, and at the foot of the lithographed pedigrees. There is not a stroke of MacVeigh's work in the whole of it. It is not added to nor corrected. Anderson's appendix of additions and corrections is still an appendix. Anderson's misspelt names and Fullerton's misprints are still there. The book is not even reprinted, it has been got ready-made, and as Anderson left it, talking in the present tense of Catherine Sinclair, the late Duke of Buccleugh, and other celebrities notoriously dead for years. . . . .

We have now done our duty in exposing a fraud and warning the public. It would be interesting and useful to know how many copies of the book have been sold, and at what price, or whether the copy which we have described (and which is now in the Advocate's Library) is unique. On the inside of the board of vol. I. is written "£3. 10s., cost £9." Anderson's "Scottish Nation," intact and unmutilated, sells at 30s. or thereby.

To this it may be added that the fraud is by no means exhausted in the Scottish Antiquary's account of it. Not content with stealing the work in this way, James MacVeigh, as many of my readers are aware, resorts to further false pretences in order to sell it. This he does by writing to the children or heirs of persons recently deceased, representing that the deceased person has given him an order for the work, and asking where it shall be sent. If he has really been by such means as these selling a thirty-shilling book at £3. 10s., I should think that some of those who have been defrauded may at last be induced to set the law in motion against him. On the title-page of the "Scottish Nation" MacVeigh describes himself as author of "The Historical Records of the Black Watch; the 74th Highlanders; the 78th Highlanders," and several other regiments. Are these fictitious works, or more literary piracies? If the latter, as it is probable that the officers of these regiments may have been induced to purchase the book, they might perhaps like to turn their attention to Mr. (or "Captain") James MacVeigh. It is time that somebody took steps to stop this worthy's dishonest practices.

THE THEATRES IN JULY.

Mr. George Edwardes is always on the move. He does not allow the grass to grow under his feet, and has never as yet taken the leaf out of the book of several of his less tactful rivals and contemporaries, who think the essence of good judgment is to force upon the public the style of play it does not want and has never demanded. Think of the failures that might have been avoided this last year if managers had only studied the stage more, and, before running any risk, had felt the pulse of the public! Directly a clever novel or story is published, it is instantly assumed that it will make a good play, whereas it may contain the most difficult of all subjects for treatment on the stage. In a novel you can explain, you are bound by no form; one chapter may be a mere incident, the second a reflection, the third a desultory conversation, the fourth a tragedy. But these things do not do for the the stage. All must be in form, constrained, and in order. It is argued that it should not be so; but, for all that, it is.

In the case of "My Girl," produced with so much success at the Gaiety, it is rather the reversion to an old precedent than the creation of a new one. There was a time when all our domestic dramas and most of our farces were sandwiched with song. The old French vaudeville was at one time a very popular entertainment in London, whilst in France the originals of nearly all our best farces, such as "Box and Cox," "The Spitalfields Weaver," "Off the Line," and so on, were mêlées de chanson, Of late years Mr. George Edwardes has suggested that a story of that kind should be applied to burlesque. But hitherto the romance has been of a humorous kind, as in the "Gaiety Girl" and the "Shop Girl," or of a semi-romantic kind, as "The Geisha." Why not give the public something simpler, and more dramatic still, thinks the Gaiety manager. And so he puts on the stage "My Girl," which is a kind of musical "Vicar of Wakefield." I am bound to say that as far as I could judge, the audience liked the fun far better than the melodrama. They infinitely preferred Mr. John Le Hay's very funny Scotch Jew to the muscular parson, and they jumped at every tune and dance that was reminiscent of the music hall. I don't myself think that serious drama and comic songs will ever be on a very friendly footing on the stage, and this is proved by the fact that the second act of the play, which verges on burlesque, went far better than the first.

The stage face of the Harry Jackson type of Jew has become a bit of a bore. He has been done to death at Drury Lane. So the humorous idea of connecting the Semitic race with a veneer of old Gaul came as a welcome relief, particularly as it was admirably carried out by Mr. John Le Hay. Thus, in the way of variety, we have a real African comedian, the delightful dancing of Miss Katie Seymour, the burlesque spirit of Miss Connie Ediss, who sings with point and emphasis, and, of course, the gentle and refined art of Miss Ellaline Terriss, who is as pretty and sweet as a lovely spring flower.

Mr. A. W. Gattie, the clever author of "The Transgressor" — the play that brought Miss Olga Nethersole into such conspicuous notice—seems to be at loggerheads with society, and to be sick of its humbug, inconsistency, and double dealing, so he has written a play called "The Honourable Member" in order to air his peculiar views. I really do not think that society will be converted to Mr. Gattie's views of morality by the best play ever written, and "The Honourable Member" is certainly not that. There are some people, as we all know, who maintain that a woman who has the misfortune to have a husband put away in prison should, on that account alone, claim the privilege of a divorce. But Mr. Gattie seems to think that a divorce is utterly unnecessary, and a superfluous as well as an expensive proceeding; so his earnest hero coolly asks his hesitating heroine to come with him into a life of freedom, and to cut the cords of conventional bondage. The heroine hesitates—but is not lost. Whilst they are yet speaking, the inconvenient gaol-bird dies; so the patient heroine, who is rather a bad lot herself, is able to marry the hero with the questionable moral code. But we have strange things on the stage of to-day. One of the characters, a pale, cadaverous clerk—excellently played by Mr. James Welsh—has an exit in which he d——s his employer's soul to h——! How different from the days when the Examiner of Plays changed the name of the Deity to Heaven or Providence lest the ears of the majority might be shocked! There were two other admirable performances by Mr. G. W. Anson, an amateur but clever actor, and Miss Madge McIntosh, who has brains, and should be encouraged. But I fear that few managers would endorse the ethics of Mr. A. W. Gattie. The circulating library is, after all, the best place for the ventilation of the new moral code, and even there it is becoming a little tiresome. We can always fling down a book, but it is rude to walk out of a theatre.

"BANTINGISING AT MARIENBAD."

In Bantingising himself at Marienbad, the Duc d'Orléans, it appears, meant to kill two birds with one stone. He wanted, rumour says, to fit himself for a cycle incursion into France, and to become a romantic-looking suitor of the Archduchess Dorothea Amelia. Henri V. was to have come forward on horseback, Philippe VIII. prefers the bike. It is safer and more modern. He can shoot across the frontier and fly through towns without fearing to be recognised. To cycle rapidly he had to reduce his flesh. The Archduchess had been set apart for the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, who has recently decided not to figure in history, should consumption spare him, as Emperor of Austria. She is therefore now open to a matrimonial offer. Her taste leads her to prefer a tall, slim suitor to one with a figure threatening to become Falstaffian. Hence the Bantingising regimen at Marienbad. It is said that the Duc d'Orléans with his reduced figure is quite up to the fancy of the Archduchess. Should the Comtesse de Paris and the Duchesse de Montpensier join to make a handsome settlement, the Archduke Joseph will consent to a marriage. He is among the immensely wealthy members of the Imperial family, and is open-handed. The Hungarians are attached to his branch of the reigning family—a branch that has for three generations lived among them. There have been three successive Josephs discharging the function of Palatine of Hungary. They lived with due regard for the Hungarian taste for magnificence, and have been noted for their public spirit. The Archduchess Dorothea is, through her mother, a grand-daughter of the Princess Clementine and Duke Augustus of Coburg-Kohary. She is nearly related to the Queen of the Belgians, to Queen Christina, and is a cousin of her suitor. I am not sure that a marriage with her would improve the Duc d'Orléans' prospects as a Pretender; but it would help him to hold a footing at the different Courts of Europe, some of which question his claim to Royal rank. The Comtesse de Paris always wished the Duc to marry a near relation, with whom she could feel quite at home, and who would not look at her with a scanning stranger's eyes.

Where does the Duc d'Orléans get his fat? From the Spanish and Neapolitan Bourbons, of whom he is unquestionably a descendant, even though Louis Philippe were a Chiappini. I cannot think of any French Bourbons, except Louis XVI., his sister Clotilde, and Philippe Egalité's father, and the Comte de Chambord and his sister, who were very fat. The two latter were, however, descended from the Neapolitan and Spanish Bourbons. Obesity has been an oft-recurring malady of the Spanish Royal family ever since Elizabeth Farnese married Philip V. She was the heiress of the fattest Italian that probably ever lived. He was a Prince for a Barnum show, whose legs had to be propped up by buckram and whalebone cases to prevent them overlapping his feet. Fatty degeneration impaired the usefulness of Charles III. of Spain, and destroyed the activity of the late Queen Christina—grandmother of the Comtesse de Paris. Queen Isabella strongly inherits the family failing. The Comtesse de Paris makes a brave fight against the hereditary diathesis by Bantingising at Marienbad and on the Auvergne moors, where she tires out all her gamekeepers.

The Duc d'Orléans was an uncommonly fat boy until he suddenly shot up at the age of seventeen into a tall youth. He was clean-built and smart the day he appeared a prisoner before a Paris police tribunal. Ample and luxurious meals in prison (to which he did the fullest justice) brought out his Parmesan heredity. He is not one to stint himself at table, and trusts for reduction to Marienbad and much walking. The fatty tendency skipped Marie Amélie and her sons. Save the Duc de Montpensier, who latterly fell into flesh, the Comte de Paris and his brother inherited the May-pole figures of the Mecklenburg-Schwerins. The Comte de Chambord was also very fond of a good and very plentiful dinner, and often went to Marienbad to get rid of the unpleasant consequences. He ended by drinking himself there into the illness of which he died.

Is it true that Mayfair and South Kensington have been worshipping an exotic belle imported under illustrious auspices? She certainly has not been the idol of these fashionable centres all the season. During the last two carnivals she filled a front seat at Cannes. The prominence was greatly due to a maypole figure, and to the admiration of all the Royalties there. The only person with whom she was at all well paired in ball-rooms was Prince Louis of Battenberg. He, you know, is the tallest of the Queen's connections. She towered so far above most of the Royalties, that they really seemed to need a field glass to contemplate her visage as she moved through the quadrille. This belle was often under the wing of an American Baroness. Her name was French, but reminded one of that of the great Renaissance banker who soothed the itching palms of German Princes when Charles V. was candidate for the Imperial throne. As the French think the Venus de Médicis was just the right height, Paris was not a good field for the belle in question.

Li Hung Chang has come rather late to be lionised by society. But he will be an object of curiosity to the crowd, and the official world is sure to heap attentions on him. It is hard to read the face of an Oriental, and especially of a Celestial. But it is a mistake to think that one Chinaman is exactly like any other. Those who write for the papers have discovered that his countenance betrays strong character and astuteness. There is no Madame Li. Chinese ladies seldom leave the Flowery Empire. The Marquise Tseng and her daughter were among the rare exceptions that I can remember. The three Chinese Ambassadors whom the American, Anson Burlinghame, bear-led through Europe in '68 left their wives "at home," by which they meant in China. Japanese ladies are more apt to imitate European ways. They not only come to Europe and place their daughters at high schools, but call for skating-rinks, knickers, and cycles. The Empress and her ladies have taken to the steel horse, and cycle on a maze of walks made on purpose for them in a secluded part of the Imperial gardens.

Louis Philippe's soul has not apparently been released from purgatorial suffering. Last week a requiem was celebrated for its repose at the Chapel of Saint Ferdinand. The Duc de Chartres, who has a distinct recollection of his grandfather, represented the Duc d'Orléans on this occasion. Coming on behalf of "the King," it was arranged that he was prominently to have the pas of all the other Princes who might attend. The Orleanists keep up a perpetual course of annual requiems to call attention to their claims. There are services for the souls of Marie Amélie—who is reputed a saint; the Duc d'Orléans, who was accidentally killed fifty-four years ago; the Duchesse de Nemours, and the Duc de Montpensier. There has not yet been time to have an annual mass for the repose of the Duc de Nemours. The Duc d'Aumale's dead are allowed to rest. If masses are celebrated for them, it is so privately that the papers are never informed. The defunct daughters of Louis Philippe are neglected by the party. They both were wives of heretics, but lived and died in the true faith. The Duchesse d'Orléans was an impenitent Protestant, and lies utterly neglected in a lone vault at Dreux.

Is it true that the Queen has really decided to inhabit next spring quite a new hotel at Cimiez? What were her doctors about when they consented to such a thing? There is nothing more dangerous than to "dry the walls" of a new French house. The gypsum, of which plaster of Paris is made, gives out poisonous emanations long after it has been used in house building. One can always rent a new French flat at a rent considerably less than what will be asked for it some years later. The reason is that the tenant dries the plaster to his personal detriment. When Thiers rebuilt his house in the Place St. Georges, hot-air flues were going night and day to purge the inner walls of deleterious gases. Nevertheless, his doctors strongly advised him not to live there for another year. He was in the best of health when he went back, but no sooner was he there than his health began to fail. The mucous membranes were as if corroded. He had a constant headache and a feeling of unfitness. Madame Thiers was attacked in the same way. I was once myself a sufferer from staying in a new French house.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

DEAR LADY BETTY,—The proceedings of the Royal Commission on the Liquor Licensing Laws last week excited much interest in the West End, for the Commissioners then took evidence which bore upon the question of licensing clubs. It may be as well, therefore, to re-assure those who are anxious about the matter. The Licensed Victuallers, who were desirous that the Royal Commission referred to should be appointed, complain that the numerous political and other clubs—especially in the Provinces — organised for the use of workmen, affect their custom. That being the case, they desire that these clubs should have the same restrictions imposed upon them as are placed upon the proprietors of houses of public entertainment. They have nothing to gain, and there is no public advantage to be attained by legislation which would render it necessary for high-class clubs to be licensed. There is, moreover, no likelihood that the Royal Commissioners will recommend that such clubs should be so treated.

* * * * *

That disposes of one important point in connection with the matter. The evidence given before the Royal Commissioners last week by Mr. Algernon Bourke, the manager of White's Club, is more interesting. Mr. Bourke assured the members of the Royal Commission that, judging by his experience in connection with several clubs, there has been an appreciable decrease of drinking in recent years at the West-End clubs. In saying that Mr. Bourke was partly correct and partly incorrect. It is true that since the collapse of the commercial house of Baring Brothers, the failure of which directly or indirectly affected almost every one associated with the West End, there has been a considerable decrease in the amounts annually spent at clubs upon wine and cigars. The fact is, however, that since the financial crisis referred to, at nearly every club the members have drunk less expensive wines, and have smoked less expensive cigars, than they did. According to the most experienced club secretaries in the West End, champagne—especially the high-priced vintages—and the high-priced clarets, for instance, are now comparatively seldom ordered, whilst cheap clarets, still Moselle, and beer, are more generally consumed. There has, indeed, been a considerable reduction of expenditure all round in almost every West-End club, and, as this decrease is still continuing, the financial position of many of these institutions is rapidly becoming alarming.

* * * * *

To return to the question of licensing clubs of a high-class character, it is amusing to observe that many of the politicians who urge that these institutions should be licensed appear to imagine that clubs like the Carlton, the Turf, the Marlborough, and the Bachelors' are conducted on much the same lines as a gin-palace. Their imagination seems to present vivid pictures to them of well-dressed men stumbling about the gorgeous rooms helplessly drunk, wrestling upon the thick pile-carpets, or having desperate free-fights over the card-table to the accompaniment of indescribably bad language. The same strange inability to understand life at a club is common amongst women, who seem to suppose that men pass their time at these institutions in a state of continual enjoyment, having every conceivable luxury at their command. As a matter of fact, the average man who has average comforts at home seldom cares to enter the club, where two-thirds of the members bore him and he probably bores the remaining third.

* * * * *

There is this to be borne in mind, however, that if at any time the Legislature enacts that high-class clubs shall be licensed, gambling of every sort will at once have to cease at all these institutions.

* * * * *

The Bachelors' Club and the Piccadilly Club are neighbours. The committee of the former charged twenty-five shillings for admission tickets for strangers—including luncheon—to view the procession upon the occasion of the Royal marriage, and the latter charged five shillings. It is true that at the Bachelors' wine was not charged extra, but even allowing for that, why was there so great a difference?

* * * * *

It is understood that Mr. Eric Barrington will succeed the late Sir Percy Anderson as Permanent Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

* * * * *

Should Sir Edmund Monson accept the offer to succeed Lord Dufferin as British Ambassador in Paris, it is generally hoped throughout the Diplomatic Service that Sir Horace Rumbold, the British Minister at the Hague, will be promoted to be British Ambassador at Vienna to replace Sir Edmund. Sir Horace is one of the most talented diplomatists in the British Service; a man possessed of great ability and very brilliant. Fortune has not favoured him, however, in the matter of promotion, and it is hoped by all his colleagues that she will seize this opportunity to make a fitting reparation for her past neglect.

Were Sir Horace Rumbold to obtain the appointment of British Ambassador at Vienna, those who form judgments by the fitness of things suppose that Sir Charles Stewart Scott would be transferred from Copenhagen to the Hague, an appointment which would be popular throughout the Service.

* * * * *

As it is rapidly becoming the custom to present the high prizes of the Diplomatic Service to important supporters of the Government who have had no training in diplomacy, would it not be well to develop the system a trifle further? The "Foreign Office Guide" gives the salary of the British Ambassador in Paris as £9,000 a year. There are many South African millionaires and others who would willingly pay the country twice that sum to obtain the appointment. The salaries given to the British Ambassadors are as follows: At Paris, £9,000; at Constantinople, £8,000; at St. Petersburg, £7,800; at Berlin, £7,500; at Rome, £7,000; at Washington, £6,000; and at Madrid, £5,500, and there are other emoluments attached to some of them. These amount together to a total of £50,800. Were South African and other millionaires to give between them double the salaries to the State for permission to hold the appointments, the community would receive annually a hundred thousand pounds instead of paying fifty thousand. The plan would, moreover, be more sensible than is that of appointing amateurs whose only qualification is that they support the Government by influencing the votes of their tenants at the elections.

* * * * *

With regard to a letter which was published in these columns last week, the following has been addressed to me:—

"I heartily sympathise with 'A Large London Landlord' in his plea for removing the hideous wall that hides Devonshire House. I am sure, however, that everybody who knows Grosvenor-place will sympathise with its residents who face the old, dilapidated wall which separates them from the beautiful grounds of Buckingham Palace. This fine, wide thoroughfare would be vastly improved if the authorities would, at least, have the bricks rubbed and the wall repaired, a not very costly work, but one which would meet with the approval of all those who like to see London look bright and cheerful. The work cannot of necessity be long delayed, why, then, wait?

GROSVENOR PLACE."

Of course, the gardens of Buckingham Palace should be surrounded by a fine iron railing, as the grounds of most Royal palaces are throughout Europe. Besides, these grounds should occasionally be opened to the public by admission tickets during the absence of the Court. All this will be one day, but in England we move slowly. Meanwhile we live but once, and have to do so in discomfort.—Believe me to be very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

I RECENTLY expressed an opinion that Helm will probably turn out to be the Duke of Westminster's best candidate for the Leger. It is now quite certain that Regret can have no earthly chance at Doncaster, for he is evidently a non-stayer, and it will in future be useless to seriously consider his prospects in any race of more than a mile, unless the class of the other competitors is decidedly inferior. The performance of Troon at Sandown greatly disappointed his friends, but why they should have been so sanguine it is difficult to understand, for there seemed to be no affinity with reason in the notion that another fortnight's work would bring him on so much as to enable him to reverse the Newmarket running with St. Frusquin and Regret. I do not believe that Troon can really stay a yard beyond a mile. Of the Duke of Westminster's three-year-olds Shaddock is far and away the best over a long course, and if anything should happen to Persimmon or St. Frusquin during the next six weeks the unaccountable omission to engage this colt in the Leger will be exceedingly regretted at Kingsclere. St. Frusquin is a colt that evidently thrives on work, for he never looked better or went better than at Sandown. My own opinion is that he ought to have won the Derby, and if different tactics had been adopted with him in that race he would not have been defeated by Persimmon, who will never beat him again. St. Frusquin can evidently stay well, and he will win the St. Leger if he goes on all right. Troon was so "groggy" last winter that no fresh engagements were made for him, and the only race in which his name appears is the Jockey Club Stakes, in which event he is held perfectly safe by St. Frusquin, Persimmon, and Regret. I hear that Sir Visto will not run for the Goodwood Cup, but he is to be reserved for his autumn engagements, which include the Jockey Club Stakes and the Champion Stakes.

Goletta managed to win the Chesterfield Stakes, only, however, after a desperate race with Eager, and she ought to have beaten Mr. Fairie's horse easily on the Ascot running, but is believed to have been not quite up to the mark. If it is true that she was shin sore she is not likely to be seen out at Goodwood. Merle, who won the Soltykoff Stakes from a moderate field, is by St. Serf out of Thistlefield, her dam being a half-sister to Common and Throstle. The American filly Terpsichore II., who finished second in this race, is a daughter of St. Blaise, and she belongs to Mr. Belmont, who is bringing over a stud of some thirty horses from the United States, including Henry of Navarre, who is to be trained for next year's Ascot Cup. Mr. Belmont's string includes Don de Oro, by Rayon d'Or out of Belladonna, a two-year-old who is held in very high estimation, and who will probably be heard of in connection with next year's Derby and Leger. Don de Oro is also engaged in the Grand Prix.

Ramapo was very heavily backed for the July Handicap at Newmarket, but he got off badly. He, however, made up his ground in a manner which considerably impressed those spectators who watched his running. It may be true that he has a temper, which makes him unreliable, but unless I am vastly mistaken he will certainly win a T.Y.C. handicap before very long, and my speculative readers will do well to follow him. He must not be discarded by backers on the strength of his defeat last week, as he might take it into his head to astonish them by a display of his best form some day when the British public have plunged upon something else.

Amphora, who has been a great tip for the Stewards' Cup, won the Beaufort Handicap very easily indeed, and she must be an exceedingly smart filly over a short course. The fact that she was not kept for Goodwood shows that the Bedford Cottage stable have something in reserve for the Stewards' Cup, and it will probably turn out that Easter Gift is the best of their lot.

That Velasquez and Chelandry would be two of the cracks of the season was confidently predicted by me four or five months ago, but after the hollow defeat of the filly at Ascot, I had not expected her to win the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park. Chelandry, however, was no doubt suffering from the effects of her two races on the hard ground at Epsom when she ran at Ascot, as she came out on Saturday in very different form. She was expected to run well, but Alfar was the great tip at Newmarket. Simoon has been amiss, and she will not be seen out before the Newmarket First October Meeting, so the Kingsclere stables had to rely upon Mr. Low's colt by Bend Or out of Braw Lass, who was very heavily backed. Chelandry won with consummate ease, and Lord Rosebery ought now to secure the £3,000 stake at Kempton Park in October, for both Velasquez and the filly are engaged, and a breeding allowance of 5 lb. reduces her penalty to 5 lb.

Regret ought to make amends for previous disappointments by winning the £2,500 stake at Liverpool this afternoon, for which seventeen three-year-olds have been left in. Of course St. Frusquin will not run. The Duke of Westminster ought also to win the Knowsley Dinner Stakes of £600 to-morrow with either Regret or Shaddock.

As to the two-year-old events at Liverpool, the £2,000 stake this afternoon has twenty-six acceptances, including Galtee More (9 st. 5 lb.), Alfar (8 st. 12 lb.), Glencally (8 st. 11 lb.), Brigg (9 st. 3 lb.), and Tonquin (8 st. 9 lb.). I am disposed to fancy that Glencally (hitherto the most unlucky two-year-old of the season) will win this race if he can beat Galtee More; and, in any case, he ought to secure the Mersey Stakes of £550 to-morrow, for which event fifteen are left in.

Early speculators on the Liverpool Cup have been indulging in execrative cacklings respecting the scratching of Gazetteer, but people who will rush in directly the weights are published, and put their money on a horse, in utter ignorance of the intentions of its owner, do not deserve a particle of sympathy. There will probably be about ten runners. Lord Derby's Canterbury Pilgrim has been all along a firm favourite, because she has a nice weight for an Oaks winner, and her backers knew very well that they could implicitly rely in this case upon having a good run for their money. Mr. Singer's Telescope, who ran so well in last year's Leger, is much fancied, and so also is Lord W. Beresford's Paris III., but the Australian horse strikes me as being overweighted. Mr. Blake's Bowline would probably do better over a longer course. Mr. Wallace's Spook has been expressly reserved for this race, but I do not believe that he can give 7 lb. to Dule Tree, and I shall venture on a plumper for Mr. Oswald's colt, who has done a capital preparation, and he is much fancied by some good judges at Newmarket.

There ought to be excellent sport at Goodwood next week, as there are large entries for all the principal events, and the course is in first-rate order. The meeting bids fair to be a great success.

The Ham Stakes on Tuesday will be worth £850 even if only three start, and there are fourteen subscriptions. The Duke of Portland's Berriedale, by Donovan out of Caithness, is by no means a flyer, and I know nothing in favour of Prince Soltykoff's pair. If the Duke of Westminster's candidate is fancied by the Kingsclere people it ought to win. He has Arkle, by Arklow (brother to Ormonde) out of Angelica, dam of Orme, and Delamere, by Blue Green out of Sandiway. The large entry for the Richmond Stakes includes Chelandry, Smean, colt by Bend Or out of Braw Lass, Flying Colours, Monterey, St. Agnes, and Bayolia as the best known of the public lot. I should fancy that Mr. Baird's filly Briseis, by Galopin out of Briar Root, will win this race if she can beat Chelandry, who has 12 lb. extra to carry. On Wednesday the Halnaker Stakes, which has obtained thirty-seven entries, may be left to Galtee More. The Lavant Stakes will probably be won by Alfar. Sixty-two animals are left in for the Rous Memorial Stakes on Thursday, including Alfar, Lowly, Princess Anne, Lady Frivoles, Smean, and Blue Water. This race should fall either to Alfar or to Blue Water, each of these animals having the advantage of a 5 lb. breeding allowance. The Prince of Wales' Post Sweepstakes, which will be worth £2,800, should be won by Lord Rosebery with Velasquez. The entry includes his filly Chelandry, Goletta, and Lowly. Among the dark lot are Mr. Bass' own sister to Meddler, Lord Durham's filly by St. Simon out of Primrose Day, and the Duke of Westminster's Guernsey, by Bend Or out of Jersey Lily. On Friday the Molecomb Stakes looks good for Galtee More, who will be able to beat Sauce Tartare and Berzak. Of course, at such a Meeting as Goodwood, dark "flyers" must be looked out for in the two-year-old races. In the absence of Galtee More the Findon Stakes will probably be won by Lord Alington's filly Zarabanda. There are sixty-four entries for this race.

As to the three-year-old events, the Gratwicke Stakes should fall to Labrador. Prince Soltykoff may take the £200 for second horse with La Toison d'Or. Fifty-three animals are left in for the Sussex Stakes on Wednesday, and this race should be won by Regret, while in the absence of the Duke of Westminster's colt, Nouveau Riche may be successful.

There are forty-six entries for the Nassau Stakes, but neither Thais nor Canterbury Pilgrim is engaged in this race, which will fall to either the Duke of Westminster's Helm (winner of the Coronation Stakes at Ascot) or to Lord Zetland's Jolly Boat, who has not run since she finished third for the One Thousand. Jolly Boat will have 12lb. the best of the weights with Helm. It is rather absurd that the penalties in this event are for three-year-old winnings only, the result being that Jolly Boat, who won about £3,200 last season, has no extra weight to carry.

The Goodwood Cup should be won by Count Schomberg, who has a great advantage in the weights. Pride will be his most dangerous opponent, and Mr. Brassey's horse has also undergone a special preparation for the race. The conditions of the Cup, so far as relates to penalties and allowances, ought certainly to be altered before next year. The Gordon Stakes has a very good entry, including Whittier, Galeazzo, Marco, and Roquebrune, but all these animals have been doing little work of late, and not one of them is likely to be seen in winning form before the autumn. I do not suppose that either Thais or Nouveau Riche will start, and the filly will have 10 lb. extra to carry. The Duke of Westminster will probably win with one of his lot, which consists of Shaddock, Conroy, and Helm. The obvious course to be taken with Shaddock is to run him through for his engagements, as he is not entered for the Leger. If Shaddock goes on all right he will be seen out at Doncaster when he is to run for the Scarborough Stakes on Thursday.

People will do well to leave the Stewards' Cup alone until the day of running arrives. Ugly is well in, and the course will just suit Lord Wolverton's speedy horse. Grig must surely have got rather stale by this time, and the Rothschild stable may find a better candidate in Imposition. It would not a bit surprise me to see Ramapo win this event. Omladina has not been doing much work since Ascot, but I dare say she will be ready enough to run next week if she is wanted at Goodwood. Raconteur has been well taken care of, and so also has Red Heart, who has no pretensions on public form to be placed within 1 lb. of Troon. Sir Michael will run well if he is "slipped" on this occasion. Mr. McCalmont's Amphora won the Beaufort Stakes at Newmarket last Tuesday with 8 st. 7 lb. on her back in a common canter, and here she has 7 st. 10 lb. to carry. If her stable companion, Easter Gift, is better at the weights, this race should be won by Bedford Cottage.

Of course there was only one cricket match last week, and that was played at Manchester between England and Australia. The batting of the home team failed miserably in both innings. This was all the more inexplicable because Jones, the Colonial fast bowler, was practically no good at all. There were only two real exceptions to the general rot, and those were Lilley and Ranjitsinhji. The reception that the old Cantab received at the hands of the public showed that they did not appreciate the action of the M.C.C. in excluding him from the first match. It was just as well that he played. In the second innings his style was the perfection of cricket, and he never made a mistake all through his long innings. Lilley, the Warwickshire wicket-keeper, hit hard, and his batting was invaluable. As for the Australians, they fairly collared the English bowling. Giffen was in his old form, and Trott played every ball as though the match depended on his efforts; while Iredale was irreproachable. It seemed impossible to realise that they were the same team that on two occasions failed so miserably at Lord's. But it was not to their batting alone that they owed the victory. Their fielding was very different to what it has been. There were practically no mistakes. They had some little difficulty in getting their runs on a worn wicket that suited Richardson, but Gregory came to the rescue, and they thoroughly deserved to win. They played a great game from start to finish.

At the same time it would be idle to pretend that the selection of the English team gave anything like satisfaction. Taking a line through the Gentlemen and Players match at Lord's, it was obvious that MacLaren had not had sufficient practice to justify his inclusion, while Hayward was batting finely, and he is a good bowler. Lohmann, too, would evidently have been more useful than Briggs, but he could not play owing to a sprain. In the match at Lord's the Gentlemen followed up in a more decisive manner their previous success against the Players at the Oval. Both Woods and Grace bowled admirably, and Ranjitsinhji's batting was excellent. In county matches the feature of the week was the poor display of Yorkshire against both Essex and Hampshire. Essex well deserved its victory, which was due in a great measure to the bowling of Bull and Kortright and the admirable batting of Owen, Carpenter, and Perrin, who made his first century against Warwick. That county, owing to a brilliant innings by Diver, and steady batting by Quaife, was in a very favourable position at the end of the match. The tremendous score of Captain Wynyard against Yorkshire showed that the strength of the county batting, as evidenced by their victory over Sussex, was no mere chance, and it was owing to the consistent batting in both innings of Milligan, Hirst, and Mounsey, and the bad fielding of Hants, that the game was a draw. The success of Hampshire last week was due to a plucky effort after a run of very bad luck.

At Winchester, last week, there was some extraordinary scoring in a match between the I Zingari and the Green Jackets. The former made 437, Lord G. Scott making a century. Their opponents ran up 619 for nine wickets, D. H. Blundell, Captain Majendie, and Prince Christian Victor each making over a hundred.

Probably Mr. Guy Nickalls will admit that in Guinness his brother Vivian has met a better sculler. It may be remembered that last year Mr. Guy Nickalls took my rowing correspondent severely to task for having suggested that in Guinness there was a greater sculler than even Vivian or Guy. Well, the results of the Diamonds and Wingfields have fully justified the estimate that was then formed of their respective powers. At the same time, a finer race for the Wingfields has never been witnessed. They were practically level at Hammersmith, and it was quite three miles before the winner, with his long, easy stroke, shook off his antagonist, who appeared to be rowed out at the finish. Vivian Nickalls has never rowed a pluckier or sterner race. He cannot be too highly praised for the desperate efforts he made to secure a victory. At the Kingston regatta the younger Guinness won the Senior sculls very easily, and Thames had fairly easy wins in the Senior eights and fours. The change in the course obviates the chances of collision, which were so prevalent in the past.

There was a pleasant meeting between the London Athletic Club and the United Hospitals. The latter are decidedly strong at present, and if Woodyatt only trained to start he would be a very fine sprinter. Leggatt's long jump was very good, and Shaw did even time over the hurdles, while Munroe had the three miles all his own way without having been on the path before during this year. It is a great pity he has not tried to get fit. Robertson, the Oxford Blue, won the hammer. In Dublin a representative team of Irish athletes beat a strong Scotch team, the best performers being Welsh, of Scotland, in the half, and Ryan and Horgan (Ireland) in the high jump and weight. The meeting was so successful that it should be possible to organise an International contest between the four countries. At the Salford Harriers meeting Cullum, the Welsh champion, ran brilliantly in both the half and thousand yards race.

The new conditions for entering the competition for the Lawn Tennis Championship at Wimbledon give affiliated clubs a direct interest in the event, and the consequence is that the entry this meeting has been very satisfactory. The final to decide who should meet the holder, Baddeley, was played out between Mahoney and Eaves. But earlier in the competition both players had to meet some tough antagonists. The chief of these were the Dohertys, from Cambridge University, the Riseleys, from Clifton, Nesbit, Simond, H. Baddeley, and Larned, the American. The scores indicate that there was really very little difference between these players and those who met in the final. Mahoney certainly had the hardest work, and he found in Eaves a player who gave him less trouble than some of his earlier opponents. To the great surprise of most people, Mahoney succeeded on Monday in wresting the championship from Baddeley. The latter, however, was palpably out of form. In the Ladies' competition, Mrs. Pickering, by her excellent volleying, beat Miss Austin, who won the Covered-Court Championship last winter. She had therefore to meet Miss C. Cooper, who is also a hard and accurate volleyer.

The Thames Swimming Club had bad weather again, but the meeting was a great success, especially the Public Schools race, for which there were eighteen competitors. Powell, of Wellington, won after a close finish with Farrar, of Oundle, who was gaining rapidly, and next was Deacon, of Westminster. The half-mile was easily won by Green from Cohen. Of course, Tyers won the quarter-mile sea-race at Southport. The Ealing S.C. had a most successful and well-managed meeting. The diving was very good, and the finishes in the open race were remarkably close, Grafton being the winner; and in the Water Polo, after a close game, Richmond were just beaten by the home team.

For about the fourth time in forty years the Gold Prize of the M.C.C. for Tennis changed hands. The holder, Alfred Lyttelton, was clearly out of practice, and there was a touch of sorrow at his defeat by Sir Edward Grey, who has undoubtedly come on a good deal.

MAMMON.

FROM MOSES MOSS TO BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The past week has been a disappointing one from the point of view of the mere market speculator; but the investor has not much to grumble about, for he can afford to wait until the present holiday interregnum gives place again to a more active period.

THE OUTLOOK.

Amongst the favourable influences, the announcement of satisfactory dividends by a number of Home Railways stands out very prominently. These stocks have not so far responded in proportion to the coming distributions, but after a temporary reaction the tone has again become very strong and hopeful. The recent dulness was in part caused by the collapse in the American market, of which the fear of gold shipments and the illness of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt were the principal causes. The gold shipments are, of course, the logical consequence of the silver agitation in the United States, but any one selling Vanderbilt stocks on the paralytic seizure of Mr. Vanderbilt will be ill-advised. It may be taken for granted that all arrangements have been made that even if unfortunately the worst should happen the securities so closely connected with the Vanderbilt family will not be thrown upon the market. In other respects the American outlook is still very doubtful; but it is a very mistaken reasoning, under the influence of which other stocks have been depressed in sympathy with Yankee Rails. It is true that a few of the South African operators have loaded up with big blocks of Yankee Rails, on a tip which was recently put about in the Kaffir Circus that these gambling counters were now on bed rock; but even if these speculators should be compelled to let go on a further spasm, this would not by any means imply that the South African market would suffer. Least of all should Home Railway stocks be affected by events in the American market. Foreigners have been comparatively dull, the dead season having already commenced on the continent, while the issue of the new Russian loan is being awaited there. Argentine Government and Railway stocks have fluctuated somewhat, and are not maintained at top prices; but there appears to be a fair prospect of the unification scheme becoming law, so that for a time at least we might have a further advance. In the meantime I may congratulate readers of TRUTH who have, on my urgent advice, stuck to their Argentine Provincial bonds, when much lower down, on the very marked recovery which has already taken place, and which promises to make further progress. In the Kaffir Circus prices have again been dwindling, but I keep to the view already expressed that, the longer the inactivity lasts, the sharper will be the rally when it does come; and it would be strange indeed if August and September were to pass without a very strong recovery in sound Transvaal Mining and Land Companies. Mr. B. I. Barnato is expected in London early in August, and his advent should also be a stimulating feature. The West Australian market has continued to show a certain irregularity, but some of the groups have displayed great strength, and the news from the goldfields is so favourable that an important improvement may eventually be looked for. All the same, the rush of new enterprises is being overdone, and I would strongly advise my readers to leave the majority of these new ventures alone. Amongst the Companies now on the board almost the only ones which appear to be tempting are the Northern Territories, the Hill End Consols, the Great Boulder Junction Reefs, and the Brownhill Central. New Zealand mines have also had a partial set-back, due chiefly to the excessive number of new issues, and promoters will do well to stay their hand now. Readers of TRUTH, at all events, should keep aloof from those amongst these undertakings which acquire only some plots of land, carelessly pegged out, upon which, so far, very little development work has been done. There is a pause in the Cycle market, and in connection with most of the new enterprises in this section the underwriters have been saddled—a very salutary lesson!

HOME RAILWAY DIVIDENDS.

It is a curious feature of Stock Exchange dealing that the most favourable events when they come off are frequently found to have been discounted, and the various dividends announced during the week illustrate this paradox. It is true that, as I have already stated, the favourable Brighton dividend produced a rise in Brighton "A" to 186, but there has since been some backsliding, and the price is now only 185. Assuming that the dividend for the current half-year will be the same as that for the corresponding half of 1895, the yield of this stock would be £3. 17s. per cent. per annum, and it is quite on the cards that the current half-year will yield better results. Under these circumstances there is still some room for improvement. The Brighton report is satisfactory, and the proposal of the Directors to grant an annuity of £1,000 a year to the ex-Chairman, Mr. Samuel Laing, will doubtless be heartily endorsed by the shareholders who have benefited so largely by his skill in Railway management. Next to the Brighton the South-Eastern dividend has been the most satisfactory, as out of the published gross increase of £55,000, no less than £44,500 has been saved "net." Dover "A" would, if results of the current year were merely to equal those of last year, receive a dividend of 3 per cent., against $2\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. for the previous year; but in view of growing traffics, and of the probability of additional savings in working expenses, owing to the arrangements with the Chatham Company, a further increase in this half-year's result may be looked for, and the present quotation of 103 therefore looks distinctly tempting. The stock is certainly cheap as compared with Great Eastern, which receives a dividend only at the rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum for the half-year, against $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. for the corresponding half of 1895. Should the Great Eastern earn the same dividend for the current half year as for the second half of 1895, the distribution for the year would be only $2\frac{3}{4}$, as against the 3 per cent. of Dover "A." At the present price of $103\frac{7}{8}$, therefore, Great Eastern stock appears to be high enough. The Sheffield dividend, at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum for the half-year, has been a disappointing one, so far as the market is concerned. My readers are aware that I did not anticipate any more, and it is evident that working expenses have increased considerably. There is nothing to be said against the Metropolitan dividend at the rate of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., against $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. for the corresponding half of 1895, but the stock had already risen to $115\frac{1}{2}$ on inside purchases effected in anticipation of this announcement. Expectations with reference to the Chatham announcement have been very favourable of late, the market expecting the full Arbitration Preference dividend with a large surplus. Hence the "Bears" who had sold rather wildly at the time of the decision of the House of Lords are reducing their commitments, with the result of a distinct rally in the stocks. The stocks of the Heavy lines have also displayed a firm appearance, as good dividends are looked for, and there is a lingering hope that some of the Boards will follow the example of the Midland. Some attention has also been given to the stocks of the Central London Railway, now that the erection hoardings at various points indicate that the work in connection with the new stations of the line has already commenced. The Scotch stocks have shown unexpected weakness, yet there is nothing in the position to encourage the "Bears," and sooner or later I look for a sharp recovery both in Caledonian Deferred Ordinary (Coras) and North British Deferred. The decrease in the traffics of the Scotch lines is only apparent, as the comparison is with the holidays of the Glasgow Fair last year.

YANKEE RAILS UNDER THE SILVER CLOUD.

The victory of the Silverites at the Democratic Convention in Chicago is already bringing about the inevitable results. Gold shipments to Europe have re-commenced, and there are rumours of very large amounts to be shipped in the near future. In the meantime there is some prospect of the Democratic Party splitting up over the silver platform, and one of the leaders, Mr. Whitney, has just pronounced against it, but others who are known to hold sound views on the currency question are as yet silent. I repeat that I cannot believe that the American people can in the end endorse the policy which triumphed under the lead of Mr. Bryan at Chicago; but unfortunately there must be a protracted period of uncertainty before the Presidential election can settle the point, and in the meantime the American market will be swayed by the conflicting rumours which will be current with reference to the political position. To these unfavourable influences there has been added the sudden illness of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who, however, it is now reported, is likely to recover again. Those who have effected "Bear" sales in the expectation that the possible decease of Mr. Vanderbilt would cause a slump in the Vanderbilt stocks, are, however, doubtless reckoning without their host; although the persistent stream of sales has had the effect of knocking down the prices of New York Central and Lake Shore about 4 dols. and 7 dols. respectively. The decline has, however, been general in the whole of the active list, although it has not assumed similar dimensions, and, as shown in the following comparison of quotations, the fall ranges from one to five dollars, with the exception of Southern Prefs., which have suffered more heavily:—

—	Price Jan. 2, 1895.	High'st in 1895.	Low'st in 1895.	July 10.	July 19.
Atchison	4½	25	3⅞	14⅛	11¾
Do. 5 per cent.	18⅛	30½	16½	20¼	17¼
Atlantic Firsts	14	27¾	13	25¼	25
Canadian Pacifics	60½	62⅝	35	62¾	60¾
Central Pacific	14½	21⅜	12⅜	15½	14¾
Denver	11¼	18⅜	9⅞	13⅜	12½
Do. Pref.	34¾	56⅝	33⅝	48¾	43⅝
Erie	10½	15⅝	6	15	14⅛
Lake Shore	136½	155½	136	151	144
Louisville	54¼	67½	39½	50⅛	46¾
Milwaukee	57½	80	54⅝	76⅝	70⅞
Mis., Kan., and Texas	13¾	19⅝	9⅛	11⅜	10⅜
New York Central	101¾	107	94⅓	98¾	94½
Norfolk Pref.	19⅛	19¾	6¾	12¼	11½
Nor. Pacific Pref.	17¾	27⅜	10¾	16¾	13¾
Ontario	16	19¾	11⅞	14⅜	13¼
Reading	6⅝	12	2¼	7	5¾
Southern Ordy.	11¾	15¾	7⅜	9	7⅞
Do. Pref.	37½	44⅞	24⅓	26¼	21⅝
Union Pacific	11¾	18½	3⅝	7⅛	6⅛
Wabash Pref.	14¼	27	12¾	16¾	14¾

The above table shows how heavy has been the relapse in quotations from the highest point in 1895, a circumstance which is chiefly due to the currency trouble, which is now being aggravated by the Democratic victory. It remains, however, to be seen whether the Democratic party has really been captured bag and baggage by the free coinage men. As Mr. Chauncey M. Depew recently put it very forcibly, McKinley is now the only buffer between the free-coinage mania and the White House; and he is of opinion that for every vote the Republican party loses on account of its manly and direct repudiation of free coinage, it will gain two, three or more votes from the gold standard Democrats. There is still a great deal of talk in the Wall-street papers of purchases effected for London account. This is an amiable fiction, due perhaps to the fact that some blocks of shares have been transferred through the arbitrage houses to London, although still held for American account. There is at present no public demand here for American Rails, and there will not be until the silver question is settled. Neither have there been any professional dealings on the part of English operators. As one of our leading financiers recently put it to me, it is preferable to wait until the currency question has been decided, and rather then to pay say ten dollars more, than to embark in large commitments on the "Bull" tack at present. One of the stocks concerning which some of my Wall-street contemporaries are expressing favourable opinions is Louisville and Nashville. On this point one of the Wall-street journals says that none have better stood the "Bear" onslaught than Louisville and Nashville. It declined stubbornly, and when other shares fell a point at a time, yielded only a fraction. This contemporary states that this is no doubt due not alone to the fact that the stock is well held, and not honeycombed with "stop loss" orders, but also to the foreign demand. Yet Louisville have now also given way, owing to the general slump. Canadian Pacifics have suffered in sympathy with American Rails, and are finally lower at 60¾. The traffic increase of 66,000 dols. for the second week of July was certainly satisfactory, and brings up the increase from January 1 to 1,680,000 dols. Grand Trunks have about maintained their quotations.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

There has been very little movement in Foreigners, and less disposition to operate; but it is not improbable that the holiday feeling which has already seized upon the Continental Bourses may give way to temporary activity on the appearance of the Russian loan at the end of the present month. It will be for a smaller amount than originally contemplated, and is not likely to affect this market to any extent, as Paris will engineer the issue. It may, however, have the effect of diverting American gold shipments to Russia viâ Paris. Italians at 87¼, and Spanish at 64, have recovered a temporary decline. Turks have been fairly steady, but Ottoman Banks dropped as low as 12 1/16, recovering to 12⅜. The gold premium in Buenos Ayres keeps above 180, and, although the fluctuations are but small, they generally affect quotations of the Argentine Government stocks. The unification scheme of the debt is passing through the various stages, and will apparently become law as far as the Argentine Republic is concerned. It remains to be seen, however, in which way the London issuing houses will safeguard the security of the so-called Customs loans. Uruguay bonds have been very steady, the old loan at 50½, the new loan at 1¼ discount. Considerable amounts of the latter have of late been absorbed by investors. The older Chilian bonds are the turn harder, although the new loan is now offered at par, after having been quoted at a small premium. Brazilians have eased off slightly, and there is nothing doing in Peruvian Corporation stocks, while the South and Central American rubbish stocks are also neglected.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS STILL WAITING.

The expectant attitude of the Kaffir Circus continues, and in the meantime the serious news from Rhodesia is acting as a wet blanket. It seems very unreasonable that the troubles of the Chartered Company should have the effect of stifling operations in Transvaal gold and land shares, and I am still in hopes that this influence will shortly wear off. Chartered shares, however, are being "pegged" at about 3 or slightly over; and I should not be at all surprised if the first great victory over the wretched natives in Matabeleland and Mashonaland were to be made the signal for an advance, as the insiders have a much larger holding than they like. It is rather significant that one of the sub-companies of the Chartered Company (the Colenbrander Matabele Development Co.) should actually contemplate helping the parent with £5,000, and it is conjectured that some kind of general appeal will be made to the other sub-Companies. But this I really cannot believe, as I cannot see what benefit has been conferred by the Chartered Company on the unfortunate sub-Companies, whose work has been so rudely interrupted by the native rising. We are now waiting for two events which may have a favourable influence upon the course of the Kaffir Circus. In the first instance, it is hoped that President Kruger will follow up the initiatory reforms to which I referred last week by further measures of greater importance to the mining industry on the Witwatersrand. The service on the Netherlands Railway is also stated to have been considerably improved, and native labour is becoming more abundant. The other event is the impending return of Barney Barnato to this country. So far the return of the four Reform leaders, which I chronicled last week, has not benefitted the market at all. I should hope, however, that the return of Barney Barnato would, at all events, help the stocks of his own group, while he will no doubt also make a complete statement of the details of his great amalgamation scheme, and influence other operators in the South African Market by that indomitable energy, not to say enthusiasm, which characterises him. Considering the important services which he has rendered to the Reform prisoners, and to the cause of the pacification of South Africa, he will be received here with open arms, and will no doubt be fêted as much as he was at Kimberley and at Johannesburg. As regards the Barnato stocks, I repeat that in my opinion holders should stick tight to their shares, and buy more to average of those specially mentioned by me in my last two or three letters, if they can afford to take up and pay for them. By the way, I hear that some of the South African operators have turned truants to their old love and gone in for speculation in the Yankee Market. They bought some huge blocks of stock and are now shivering in a club not very far from Angel-court at every drop which the cable advises from Wall-street. I think it would have been much better for them if they had stuck to their last. I still hold a favourable view with reference to the leading stocks of the Robinson group, including more especially Langlaagte Estate and Randfontein. The Oceana amalgamation scheme is undoubtedly making much progress in public favour, and when it is once consummated I shall look for a substantial advance in the shares of the new Oceana Consols. In the meantime the discrepancy between the quotations of the old Oceana shares, now standing at $1\frac{1}{2}$, and the Austral-African, at $1\frac{3}{8}$, is gradually disappearing, as these will rank pari passu in future. Woodstock (Transvaal) shares have been very firm at from $1\frac{5}{8}$ to $1\frac{3}{4}$, and I look for a further improvement in these, as well as in Niekerk, now quoted at $1\frac{1}{4}$. A somewhat strange decline has taken place in African Estates, which are only quoted $2\frac{1}{16}$. Can it be that this is still the effect of the non-success of the Paris option? Sheba Hill shares have been actively dealt in at from 3s. to 3s. 3d., and I should again like to point out that the Company's property is between that of the famous Sheba Gold Mining Company and the Royal Sheba. It owns no less than sixty claims, with an area of about 80 acres. If the opinion of Mr. Pegler, that the formations carrying the Sheba lode are practically east and west, should be correct, the Sheba Hill property would be in the direct line of that lode. Mozambique shares have been firm at about $1\frac{3}{4}$, and I hear of some fresh developments which are likely to put the price of these shares higher. I mentioned last week the prospect of the early construction of the Pretoria-Waterberg-Zoutpansberg Railway, and I now hear that final arrangements have been made, so that its construction will be expedited as far as possible. I have already stated that the Oceana group is connected with this enterprise; and this Railway, which will connect Pretoria with Pietersburg, will, of course, greatly increase the value of a number of the farms held by the Oceana in the Waterberg and Zoutpansberg districts. There has been a pause in the activity in Lydenburg shares, and Lydenburg Goldfields are slightly easier at $3\frac{5}{8}$, but this is probably only a case of réculer pour mieux sauter. The Statist is responsible for the announcement that a strong South African group are working for the introduction of fresh blood on the Board of the Spitzkop Company, a consummation devoutly to be wished, as this concern has been monstrously mismanaged in the past. Transvaal Exploring shares have been in good demand, on the favourable statements to which I referred last week, and the price has risen to 1 to $1\frac{1}{8}$, with every prospect of a further advance. A good deal of talk has been caused by sensational advices which have been received viâ Vienna from the Free State as to the discovery of a new goldfield near the Vaal River; but so far there has been no absolutely reliable report on the subject. Rand Reefs are again slightly firmer at 10s. 6d. Willoughby's Consolidated is to the front with an encouraging report; but the surrounding circumstances are so discouraging that it wants a good deal of nerve on the part of the Directors to write in the strain they do. The news from the Paarl Central is to the effect that crushing will be delayed for some time yet. This is again a case of hopes disappointed. With reference to the Bantjes Deep I learn that in the view of insiders this property is not yet rounded off sufficiently, so that further amalgamations and similar operations are contemplated for the benefit, no doubt, of the wire-pullers. The Directors of the Africander Gold Mining Company have at last been compelled to break their silence, and a circular has been issued by them stating that, although there have been difficulties in connection with the delivery of the heavy machinery owing to the outbreak of the rinderpest, the work of opening up the mine has been prosecuted, and that explorations have shown that instead of having only the Africander Reef to depend upon, the ground contains two other valuable reefs, viz., the Green's Reef assaying from 8 dwt. to $1\frac{1}{4}$ oz., and the Worcester Hope Reef assaying from 5 dwt. to 1 oz. 8 dwt. They also state that at a depth of 600 ft., the main shaft on the Africander Reef gives assays running as high as 2 oz. per ton in parts. Other statements equally favourable are made, and the only surprising thing is that the Directors did not think fit to communicate such pleasant tidings to the shareholders long ago. Diamond shares have been fairly steady, notwithstanding the surrounding dulness. De Beers are quoted $30\frac{3}{8}$, New Jagersfontein $11\frac{1}{4}$, and there have been active dealings in Leicester Diamonds at $3\frac{5}{8}$, and in Consolidated Leicester at $1\frac{15}{16}$. It will be remembered that this last-mentioned Company acquired 451 claims, adjoining those of the Leicester Diamond Mining Company. Mr. Parsley, a well-known expert in diamond mining, states that down to the 80-ft. level there are at least 2,000,000 loads of yellow ground, which, after paying all expenses, should yield a net profit of £120,000; and that from 80 ft. downwards the workings will be in blue ground (which should be much richer than the yellow), both quantity and quality of diamonds, as a rule, improving. New Bulfontein shares have been steady at 2. According to the Diamond Fields Advertiser, the new Bulfontein Diamond Mining Company has achieved excellent results in the first quarter of 1896, when the increase in the output was as much as 12,000 carats. The New Bulfontein has now absorbed the Bulfontein Central Mines and the Bulfontein Premier D. M. Company, the latter amalgamation having taken place about a month ago. The New Bulfontein owns 148 claims, of which there are working about 110 claims in the open at a depth of about 300 ft. There are over ten miles of tram lines in use, and the floors extend over 148 acres, on which there are at present some 200,000 loads of blue.

Golden West Australia.

The West Australian market has displayed greater strength since the settlement, although the movements are still somewhat irregular, and advances, in some instances, are offset by a certain number of declines. Yet advices from the goldfields, both by cable and mail, continue very satisfactory, and everything points to the certainty that with every month more of the new issues will fall into line with crushings. The strongest group has again been that of the West Australian Joint Stock Trust, the shares in which have advanced to $4\frac{1}{8}$ premium. Associated Gold Mines have been in good demand at $3\frac{1}{4}$, Associated Southern at $1\frac{9}{16}$, and Nil Desperandum at $1\frac{3}{8}$. Quite a controversy has arisen in the Press concerning the respective share which the West Australian Joint-Stock Trust and the other Finance Companies have in the great Northern Territories scheme, which is Clerk (confidential), thoroughly conversant with the routine of a fashionable West End business, good bookkeeper, &c., requires Re-engagement.—Address, H. 347, Regent-street, W.

shortly to be launched. Mr. Allen Stoneham stated at the meeting of the West Australian Goldfields, Limited, that the West Australian Joint-Stock Trust held only 12½ per cent. interest in the scheme, whereupon the Secretary of the Trust writes that his Company holds exactly double the interest of the West Australian Goldfields in the Northern Territories Syndicate and controls 35 per cent. of the whole capital. The Secretary adds that the Trust had throughout been the pioneer in connection with the scheme, and had up to the present provided by far the larger portion of the funds. Mr. Stoneham now bursts into print, acknowledging that his first statement was incorrect inasmuch as the Joint-Stock Trust holds 20 per cent., and its sister Company, the West Australian Loan and Finance Company, 5 per cent., in addition to which the Trust is to receive a commission of 10 per cent. on the profits of the introduction of the business. This would appear to amount very much to the same thing as originally stated by the Secretary of the Trust, and the fact that eleven other Finance Companies have joined in the Syndicate shows how strong the combination is, and how promising the scheme is considered to be. The whole of the working capital has already been subscribed by these Companies, and it is thought probable that the novel experiment of tender for a number of the shares will be adopted, leaving the public to put their own price upon them. That this price will constitute a considerable premium goes without saying. Mr. Stoneham's speech at the West Australian Goldfields meeting was moderate in tone, yet it clearly set out the excellent position in which the Company finds itself, and the favourable impression created was strengthened by Mr. George Leake's remarks on the wealth of the goldfields of the Colony generally. West Australian Goldfields have not, however, benefited much by the meeting, the shares being quoted 9½. Personally, I do not know of any shares of this group more promising than Hampton Plains at 4⅞, and Block 50, Hampton Plains, at 1 5/16. The Whitaker-Wright Group has shown dulness, partly owing to the absence of the Managing Director, and it seems high time that the latter should take the helm again. There has been quite a shake-out in some of the shares, and when a revival comes about in the market, such shares as Lake View Consols, now at 4¾, Mainland Consols at 3¼, and Hannan's Golden Group and Golden Treasure at 1 5/16, will probably take jumps, with very few shares changing hands. The West Australian Exploring and Finance Corporation, Limited, has declared an interim dividend of 10 per cent. (2s. per share) on the Ordinary shares. This distribution appears to have been limited to 10 per cent., in order to liquidate the prior dividend due to the holders of Ordinary shares before division of further profits equally between the Ordinary and Deferred shares. I hear that a syndicate, named the A1 Syndicate, has been formed for the purpose of floating the Great Pyramid Gold Mine in the Gibraltar district of the Coolgardie Goldfield. This, I am told, has been favourably reported upon by Mr. Leslie Norman, M.A.I.M.E., Manager of the Hainault Gold Mining Company, and Mr. James Fallon, of Coolgardie. From the Ninety-Mile Proprietary, Mr. C. C. Macklin cables a clean up from the Gimlet lease of 80 tons for 80 oz. 18 dwt. of gold. A feature in the dealings was the sharp fluctuations in Lady Loch shares, which reacted to 2⅝, and recovered to close upon 3. The crushing appeared to be satisfactory enough, but the quantity treated was small. Hannan's Brownhill are out of favour on the latest disappointment, and the price has fallen away to 4⅞, which is not surprising. There have been declines in Sir John Forrest, Big Blow, and Mount Margaret Reward, while, on the other hand, Hannan's Oroya, Great Boulder Main Reef, Hit or Miss, and Lady Shenton have improved. An important advance has taken place in King of the West to 2⅜ on very favourable advices from this promising mine. The news from the King of the West Mine is to the effect that the work in No. 1 shaft, north drive, shows a well-defined reef 4 ft. in width; and that in No. 2 shaft the footwall side of the reef is stoped to a depth of 52 ft. This work is producing a very large quantity of ore, some of which is exceptionally rich; and rich veins and bunches of ironstone are also stated to have been found right through the body of the ore. Development is being actively pushed ahead, and early in the new year the Chairman is going to visit the mine, in company with a first-class expert, to decide on the best programme as to the crushing machinery, by which time there will be an ample quantity of ore at grass. The manager states that he is about to forward a box of fine specimens to London. The New Coolgardie Exploration and Finance Association (W.A.), Limited, have received the following cable from Mr. Angel, the Colonial Director, in reference to two exploration parties which the Company equipped and sent out:—"July 16, both parties went yesterday." Miner's Dream and Miner's Dream Extension have improved to 1⅜ on the discovery of a new reef 3 ft. wide on the Extension property. Hannan's Britannia on favourable advices are up at 1¼, and there have again been active dealings in Gladiators at 1 to 1⅛. Royal Sovereigns are quoted 3½, but the "Bear" squeeze does not seem to be at an end yet. The shares of the Company largely interested in this mine, the Anglo-French Colonial Trust, are firmer at 1¾. New Explorers' Syndicate have also been in demand at ⅜ premium. Princess Royal shares are in demand at 7s. 6d. to 8s. in view of the expected completion of the railway to Cue in September, when work will go ahead very actively at this mine. The Great Boulder Proprietary is taking a new departure in making an issue of a new Company, the Great Boulder Junction Reefs. The property consists of 39 acres, comprising the Great Boulder Junction Reefs and two adjoining mining properties upon which Mr. Zebina Lane, Mr. Gibson, the mine manager, and Messrs. Colin J. McCulloch & Co. have reported most favourably. It is no secret that several strong groups are connected with the flotation, and the shares are expected to go to a considerable premium. This will, no doubt, also be the case with the shares in the Hill End Consols, a new Company which acquires the Hill End Consols Mine, situate about half a mile to the east of the celebrated Hill End Mine, in the Broad Arrow district. According to Mr. Fearby's report this is a very rich mine, and the capital of £125,000 is moderate, the necessary working capital having already been guaranteed. Finally, it may interest my readers that a large finance Company, which will deal exclusively with West Australian Mining shares, and will not only pick up cheap shares, but also employ its capital in giving the much wanted facilities in that market, is in course of formation, with a capital of £1,000,000. Strong people, including those of the Great Boulder, are behind it, and a large portion of the capital has already been secured. The Western Australian Development Corporation has issued a circular to the shareholders furnishing information regarding its various properties, amongst which the Armadale is one of the best. Mr. Frank Nicolas is erecting the machinery as rapidly as possible, and crushing is expected to commence next month. On the Rome Consolidated, Professor Nicolas has just reported very satisfactorily. The prospectus of the Central Finance Corporation, Limited, is being circulated privately. It is of Scotch inception, the offices being located in Glasgow, and two of the Directors, Mr. D. N. Shaw and Mr. Robert Stewart, propose to allot to themselves 25,000 shares of £1 each against two options and two agreements to purchase certain claims, which it certainly cannot have cost much to acquire. The total capital is fixed at £100,000. I should like to know if this is the same Mr. Shaw who was connected with a Wood Pulp Company now in liquidation, and where the house of Mr. J. Edgar Paterson is situate. I wonder who is Mr. W. Hunt, of 116, Earlsfield-road, Wandsworth, S.W., who, in order to raise certain money, offers 100 of his Transvaal and Westralian Gold Concessions £1 shares at 16s. as a bargain to strangers. I cannot say that I know much of this concern, but I notice that Sir William Young, Bart., figures in the prospectus as Chairman, and this mode of hawking the shares about is certainly not encouraging. At last the Directors of the unfortunate Londonderry Gold Mine have issued a further circular, in which the position of affairs as far as Lord Fingall, Mr. Myring, and the executors of the late Col. J. T. North are concerned, is explained. The proceedings at next Wednesday's extraordinary general meeting have now to be awaited; but I trust that there will be no attempt to get out of engagements entered into with the shareholders by the two first-named and by the deceased Colonel North, whose clearly expressed intention should certainly be carried out.

Indian, New Zealand, and Other Mines.

Insiders connected with Indian Gold Mines are now looking for increased returns and for higher prices, the cholera having abated. Mysore Gold have already advanced to $7\frac{9}{16}$, and there has been a strong demand for Coromandel, which have risen to $2\frac{1}{4}$, with every prospect of a further improvement. Champion Reefs, Ooregum, and Nundydroog are all better, and there should now also be a recovery in Goldfields of Mysore, which are quoted only 25s. 6d., although a few weeks ago they touched 28s. Kadur Mysore are being dealt in at 7s., and there is a talk of the formation of sub-Companies. Aladdin's Lamp have been quiet at $1\frac{13}{16}$ x.d., Wentworth Proprietary at 1. New Chum (Bendigo), Gibraltar, and Day Dawn P.C. have improved, but Mount Lyell and Brilliant and St. George United are lower. From the property of the Mount Reid Mining Company, to which I referred last week as a promising Tasmanian Company, the following cablegram has been received:—"The main lode in the end is 40 ft. wide, and carries solid payable ore. Lode No. 2 is 6 ft. wide, Lode No. 3 is 8 ft. wide, solid payable ore. The lode looks exceedingly promising." With reference to my remarks regarding the North Queensland Mines Agency, I have received a communication from Messrs. Lupton & Fawcett, solicitors, Leeds, to the effect that an influential meeting of Yorkshire shareholders was held at their offices on the 15th inst., when about 20,000 shares were represented. A resolution was passed appointing a committee of large shareholders, who were instructed to seek an interview with the Managing Director (Mr. Macfie), who is now in London, and to require the immediate and unconditional payment of the dividend declared last January, and the calling of a general meeting of shareholders to be held in London at once. It also appears that very great dissatisfaction was expressed at the meeting at the high-handed manner in which the Directors have acted—a circumstance upon which I have already commented—and I hope that the movement now inaugurated will be energetically prosecuted. In New Zealand Mines Woodstock, Scotty's, and Tokatea (Hauraki) have improved, and there has again been a good demand for Komata Queen, now quoted 4s., Maoriland Gold at 3s., and Preece's Point at 3s. 9d., are also low-priced shares, which have deservedly received attention. In Irene (Hauraki) Gold Mining shares 5s. fully-paid dealings have taken place at 5s. 6d., at which they are a good purchase. On the other hand, Waihi Silverton, Kapanga, Royal Oak, and Waite-Kauri Extended are lower. The Mines Corporation of New Zealand, Limited, which has recently been formed, deserves more than a passing notice, as it is floated under the auspices of the strong Venture Syndicate group, and there is, therefore, every prospect of the Company taking a prominent part in the development of the New Zealand goldfield, especially as the services of Mr. S. Herbert Cox (of Messrs. Bainbridge, Seymour, & Co.), who acted for many years as mining engineer to the New Zealand Government, have been secured. In the general foreign section Tolima B, De Lamar, Frontino and Bolivia, La Yesca and Palmaryo are all lower, but Golden Feather have improved, and there has been fair demands for Malacate at 1. Copper shares have declined under the lead of Rio Tinto. Major Clement F. Buttle, Secretary of the Great Work Tin Mining and Development Syndicate, Limited, of 41, Temple Chambers, Temple-avenue, London, E.C., is continuing his efforts to obtain subscriptions for this Syndicate, which is to work the Great Tin Mine in Western Cornwall. Need I again repeat that this mine has not been worked for thirty years, and that there is in my opinion no prospect of ever making it pay?

The Mercantile Bank of Scotland—A Disclaimer.

My readers will remember that I have repeatedly drawn attention to the touting circulars of Mr. William Anderson, 112, Bath-street, Glasgow, in which he recommends "a guaranteed deposit system," under which he agrees to accept deposits of £5 upwards. He proposes to pay monthly interest at the rate of 16s. 8d. per £5, which would work out to 200 per cent. per annum. This is specially offered to applicants "who wish to receive a stated and positive return, and are unwilling to participate in stock and share transactions." I characterised this as an impossible proposition, and expressed the opinion that people would be very ill-advised to deposit their money with Mr. William Anderson, the more so as the guarantee appears to be that of the philanthropist himself only. What I could not understand at the time was that William Anderson headed his circular with the notice "Bankers—Mercantile Bank of Scotland;" and I asked the question who the Mercantile Bank of Scotland could be to allow its name to be used in this manner. I have now received a communication from the Secretary of this Bank, Mr. William Rogers, who informs me that having submitted to his Directors a copy of Truth with the paragraph regarding William Anderson, he has been instructed by them to inform me that as soon as they learned (June 5) that Anderson was using the name of the Bank for advertising purposes, they instructed him (the Secretary) to write to the said Anderson that unless he desisted from using the Bank's name for any purpose, legal measures would be adopted. The Secretary also asks me to explain that the bank has no connection with Anderson. I must confess that I had not hitherto any special knowledge of the Mercantile Bank of Scotland, which I now learn is a small institution, with the head office at 44, Bath-street, Glasgow, the capital consisting of 10,751 shares of £1 each, of which 10s. per share has been called and paid up; but even if it is a small bank this is no reason why it should not be a respectable undertaking; and I notice from the balance-sheet that it holds deposits to the amount of £19,069. In the matter of William Anderson the Bank has, at all events, acted most correctly, although that gentleman does not appear to have at once complied with their request, as one of the circulars still bearing the name of the Bank was sent to a reader of Truth on July 3.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The C. E. (Civil Engineers) Exploration Syndicate, Limited.—This Association of Civil and Mining Engineers has been incorporated as a professional undertaking, with the object of establishing a professional Association of Civil Engineers, for the introduction and sale of approved properties, mines, &c. The capital is £100,000 in £1 shares.

The British Gas Traction Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and working the British patent rights for the system of working tramways, &c., by means of motor cars worked by gas-engines. The capital is £250,000, in shares of £5 each.

John Lovibond & Sons, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the business of maltsters and brewers carried on as the Greenwich Brewery, Greenwich, and St. Ann's Brewery, Salisbury, together with all properties held in connection therewith. The capital is fixed at £100,000, divided into 5,000 Five and a Half Cumulative per Cent. Preference shares and 5,000 Ordinary Shares of £5 each. The whole of the Ordinary and £10,000 of the Preference shares are taken by the vendors. The present issue is of £100,000 Four and a Half per Cent. First Mortgage debentures at £105, and 4,000 Five and a Half per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares of £10 each at £11.

The Brownhill Central Gold Mines, Limited.—Applications are invited for 135,000 shares of £1 each in this new Company, which is formed for the purpose of acquiring four gold mining leases situated in the centre of Hannan's, Kalgoorlie, Western Australia, containing an area of about 59½ acres. The total capital is fixed at £200,000. The issuing Corporations are stated to have guaranteed the subscription of 50,000 shares for the purpose of providing working capital.

According to a cablegram from Mr. George Gray, the property occupies a good position in the centre of the main ore channel in the Hannan's district, being about 15 chains north of the Brownhill Mine, contiguous to the Crœsus South United on the west and the Oratava Group on the north. Cable advices since received from the manager of the Brownhill Central Mine, dated July 7, state that of six samples, a sample containing no visible gold assays 34 oz., the lowest 2 dwt. per ton; and that the average of assays was 6 oz. per ton.

Bostock & Co., Limited.—This Company is formed to purchase and carry on the sugar refining and saccharine business hitherto carried on under the name of Bostock & Co., at Garston and Liverpool. The capital is fixed at £150,000.

Mount Reid Mining Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and further developing a gold, silver, and copper mining property at Mount Reid, Dundas district of North-West Tasmania. The capital is £150,000 in £1 shares.

This is a property of about eighty acres in extent, and at the base of the mountain from which it takes its name alluvial deposits have been worked for some time past. The source of these, it is expected, will be found on the slopes of Mount Reid itself. Considerable prospecting work has already been done, and the assays of various samples of ore give an average of 1 oz. 5 dwt. of gold, and 21 oz. of silver per ton, in addition to which a large amount of copper pyrites is stated to be on the property, which is at a comparatively short distance from the Mount Lyell and Mount Bischoff Mines. This promises to be a successful Tasmanian venture.

North-American Trust Company, Limited.—The object of this Company is to deal in American and other securities. The capital is fixed at £500,000, in shares of £10 each.

This prospectus contains a long list of the trading and profits of old-established American Trust Companies; but, considering the present unsettled state of financial affairs in America, I cannot see that this is an opportune moment for the launching of this Company, nor can I see any inducement for investors to put their money into it.

Nowthanna Gold Mine, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire and work three gold mining leases of about 24 acres in extent, known as the Nowthanna Mine, Western Australia. The capital is £75,000 in £1 shares.

This property does not appear to be situated in the neighbourhood of any of the well-known mines. As it is, moreover, in a backward state of development, it cannot be considered a tempting venture.

New Marine Rope Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring Haase's British patents for the manufacture of ropes containing cork for England and the colonies. The capital is £100,000 in shares of £1 each.

The use of cork in rope for life saving and other purposes is not new, and up to now it has not met with any success. What the merit of this invention may be I cannot say, but the capital is very large for a comparatively untried invention.

E. Bishop & Sons, Limited.—This Company was recently formed to acquire as a going concern the pianoforte business of E. Bishop & Sons, of Baker-street, and elsewhere. Capital, £150,000 in shares of £1 each.

The capital asked is a very large sum for a pianoforte business. It may be a flourishing concern or otherwise. Personally, I have never heard of the firm before. Under any circumstances, I should hesitate before I ventured to advise any one to place money in a Company so over-capitalised as, in my opinion, this is.

The Hans Crescent Hotel Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the freehold property known as the Hans-place Hotel, Hans-place, Belgravia, S.W. The capital is £180,000.

SPRATT'S PATENT various Dog Foods and Medicines can be obtained of all Corn Dealers, Grocers, and Chemists in the United Kingdom and in all important Continental cities. They are also stocked at 14, Rue des Mathurins, Paris; Rummelsburg, Berlin; and 239, East 56th-street, New York. Your own tradesman or stores will supply you.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &c., BONDS.

W. C. W.—I consider the new Uruguay loan preferable to the old one at present price. Beaulieu.—I think that the new Uruguay loan would be most suitable for you as likely to gain considerably in capital value, besides yielding upwards of 7 per cent. per annum. C. A. B., Leeds.—I do not think that the Swiss loan in question is at all tempting; but you must give me some indication as to what kind of stocks and what yield you require, before I can give you a list of investments for your £4,000. Evesham.—1. It would be preferable to await further developments. 2. 66, Old Broad-street, E.C. 3. Members of the Stock Exchange, but I know nothing as to their standing. Shva.—I cannot see anything in the points you raise, and the security of the new Five per Cent. Uruguayan loan is ample.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

P. A., Stockwell.—Of course the answer is No, and you had better let your solicitor go ahead at once. W. F. T., Bombay.—I have repeatedly stated in these columns that the lottery bonds recommended by Cunliffe, Russell, & Co., of Paris, are bonâ-fide enough, although some are of a very low grade, and all yield but a very small return. This firm in many cases, however, charge prices considerably above market value. If you want to buy these bonds you should only do so through a respectable foreign banker in London. J. F. P.—I have repeatedly expressed my opinion that the tempting circulars of James Edwards & Co., Talbot House, Arundel-street, London, W.C., inviting participation in syndicates, should be disregarded, and I again say so. You should refuse their communications. Dolphin.—Outside dealers, you should only do business through a member of the Stock Exchange. D. L., Lanelly.—If your niece has bought New Zealand Inscribed stock, her name would be on the register. Faint Heart.—A sound undertaking, but yielding a comparatively small return. West York.—I really cannot accept the responsibility of advising you on the investment of your £3,000, you "placing blind confidence in my judgment." You must first tell me what kind of securities you require, what yield you expect, and what degree of risk you are prepared to run. J. E. W.—Why not buy the Argentine Funding Loan? Springfield.—1. These deposits are all right; but I do not like them, and consider investment in sound securities preferable. 2. A good investment. Waterloo.—It is very difficult to give you advice on this matter without knowing what investments you are allowed to make. All high-class securities, into which the £15,000 at present in Consols could be exchanged, are at present at famine prices; and I do not suppose that you are prepared to invest in speculative stocks. Bromtrack.—The amount which figures on the transfer is no guide to the actual sale. C. G. F. T.—As requested, I forward the name of a sharp City solicitor in your envelope, who will no doubt bring the outside stock broker in question to book. He generally appears to settle up when applied to. Kinsale.—I should think that the fall in the shares of the Bank of Australasia was due to the somewhat unfavourable Directors' report of the Union Bank of Australia; but there seems to be no reason for selling in a hurry.

HOME RAILS.

S. D. O.—Dover "A" should certainly be held. The dividend is excellent, and it is a most progressing line. Rover, Liverpool.—Hold North British Deferred, and buy more to average.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Anxious, Chelsea.—There seems to be every possibility of this interest being paid, notwithstanding the very precarious situation in the United States. Scot, Perth.—No fresh information is available, but matters are apparently coming right. Umed.—1. A progressive Argentine Railway stock. 2. A fair Brazilian stock; no particular reason for selling. T. S.—Yes, the American Railroad bonds in question, Nos. 1 to 3, are at a low price, and should be suitable for a lock-up. Instead of the Argentine Railway bonds, you had better buy the new Uruguay loan. Constant Reader of "Truth," Sunderland.—After having held so long, you had better keep your American Railroad bonds now. It is almost impossible to believe that the Silver Party can triumph. R. G.—I have always warned my readers against New Zealand Midland Railway debentures, and you do not appear to be a regular reader of TRUTH. The present quotation is 50½. M. J. M.—You should hold your bonds for a recovery. Torquay.—Cordoba and Rosario Five per Cent. Debenture stock was dealt in at 81¼ on June 26, 1895, and the Six per Cent. Preference shares then stood at 39.

MINING SHARES.

West Cliff.—The African Estates Company is well managed; with regard to the other inquiries you should write to the Secretary. Sheba Hill (2), Komata Queen (3), Maoriland (4) are a good purchase, but I do not care so much for No. 1. Finance, Carlow.—I think that Finance Corporation of Western Australia is quite high enough. Amongst the other shares Hannan's Mount Ferrum, Hannan's Golden Treasure, and Nil Desperandum are the best. You should sell Band F, on an improvement.

Argon.—1. Bradbury Drill shares are an excellent investment. 2. Certainly, I quite expect an improvement. 3. You had better hold, as the news is more favourable. A. J. M.—This is quite correct, and your broker ought to have informed you of it. Neophyte.—Hold Nos. 1 and 2, but do not average. J. H. B.—Hold, and buy more to average. D. A. D.—1. You should take no notice of publications of this class, and there is every prospect of an important advance. 2. Ditto. 3. Hold Barnato Banks. 4. Hold these W.A. shares. 5. The mine is a good one, but it is badly managed. 6. No option but to hold for the present. Cestrian.—You had better make your selection from my remarks under "The Kaffir Circus Still Waiting." A Scotchwoman.—No option but to hold both these shares for an improvement. A. G. A.—It is advisable to hold. Juliet.—I do not like the New California Milling and Mining Company. Viking.—You should hold the shares, a recovery is probable. Roach.—No option but to hold Nos. 1 to 3 for an improvement; but take a fair profit on No. 3. I do not care for the British Colonial Mining Corporation (4), and never have. Simpleton.—You should hold North British Deferred. I should advise holding No. 1, and there is no option but to hold No. 2, although the Directors do not seem to have managed this mine well. 3. I do not care for Palmarejo. 4. No catch. Nos. 5 and 6 should be held. Sharrow.—Associated Southern is a good mine, and the shares are likely to recover. Squelphead.—I think you will do well both with Rand Reefs and Croydon Consols; but make it a rule to take fair profits. Tissel, Tralee.—A fair mining risk. Belgravia.—You should hold Holcomb Valley Pref. and Sheba Hill for an improvement, but take fair profits, also in Hit or Miss. Cherrie.—1. You should hold these shares. 2. I think you will have to exercise a great deal of patience if you want to get out of Roodepoort Central Deeps without loss. 3. No, leave Glynn's Lydenburg alone. 4. Hold Randfontein for an important rise, and buy more to average. W. S. W.—Amongst your shares Nos. 1 to 14 there is no reason for selling any at present; hold for an improvement. Scottie.—1. I do not like Buffelskloof. 2. No catch. Stingo.—1. No. 2. Messrs. Barnato. 3. Yes. Spec.—Take a good profit on such transactions. L. B.—1. You have done quite right to take your profit. 2. No. 3. Gladiators are the best of the two. Gwalie.—1. You have done quite right to buy Woodstock (Transvaal), and hold for an improvement. 2. Yes. 3. These should be held. Castle.—I am referring to the Londonderry board in to-day's issue. Rustic.—All your shares Nos. 1 to 10 are well selected, and should be held for an improvement. Constant Reader, Hyde Park Gate.—You had better sell them on the market again. Pensioner.—There seems to be no option but to hold the shares, as in a recovery of the Kaffir Circus they should improve again. Yachtsman.—The Great Boulder Main Reef is a promising property. Anxious Enquirer, Chelsea.—1. If you had followed my advice you would not now hold Chartered at 7; I have persistently advised selling. 2. No option but to hold for the present. Hold Nos. 3 and 4. Why not take your handsome profit on No. 5. Unlucky.—There is every prospect of a rise, and you should hold. Perplexed.—You will have seen from my letter that I have a very poor opinion of Rooderand Main Reef; why did you not at once cancel your application? Kerry.—These shares should be held. Loughtonian.—1. I do not care for Elandfontein No. 2. 2. Yes, I still think that members of the Stock Exchange afford more protection to the public than outsiders. Peter Simple.—A good property, which will come to the front again in due time. Done Brown.—I still hear that the position of the New Rand is a good one, and it is not improbable that it will be utilised in one of the deep level amalgamations. Bap.—1. I do not like these. 1. Be careful. 3. A is a fair mining risk; B (Woodstock Transvaal) is an excellent property; and C (Randfontein) should be held. Disgusted.—You are quite right, it is very disappointing that this mine should stand so low, but I suppose that they will improve with other West Australians. Hard Cheese.—Not yet; await the return of Barney Barnato. Viola.—At the price at which you bought, it is a fair mining risk. Plen.—1. It is a pity you did not take your profit at the time; at present, hold. 2. Sell when you see a fair profit. 3. Certainly hold Wealth of Nations. 4. You have done quite right. 5. Yes. 6. Yes, now. 7. No reason to sell now. Major.—No option but to hold Springdale; the mine is a good one, but the management is bad. The London agent is T. H. Roberts, 2, Birchin-lane, E.C. Cains.—I do not care for the Gresham Syndicate. E. T.—The best map of the country was published by the W.A. Exploring and Finance Company, which was sent to all their shareholders. W. C. S. Attareen.—Your shares, Nos. 1 to 4, are well selected; although you got in at the top, you should hold for a recovery. Also keep No. 5. Humble Pie.—Hold all your mining shares, Nos. 1-5, for an improvement, but I have very little opinion of No. 3 (Turon Gold). Take a good profit in Brokenhill Proprietary (6). Tikoos.—No option but to hold No. 1. I have no very good opinion of the Gresham Gold Exploring Syndicate. 3. Sell Indian and Colonial Goldfields as soon as you can get a small profit. 4. Bayley's Reward seem hopeless. 5. Associated Gold Mines of W.A. should be held for a further advance. 6. Not promising, but hold for the present. Central Exploration and Investment (7) should be held. Gain, Paris.—Bearer shares are not a good delivery here, and in order to sell in the London market you would have to have them transferred. Ladywood.—1. I do not think much of the Nepean Gold Mine. 2. Yes. Write to the secretary. J. B. B.—No, I do not think St. Augustines should ever be bought. No option but to await a recovery in the case of the other shares. The Lake View Consols are the conversion of Lake View and Boulder East. Gordon.—Your holdings Nos. 1-10 are well selected, and you should hold them for a rise. No option but to hold Nos. 11 and 12. S. D. Brittany.—No option but to hold Poorman's, but do not average yet. Donation.—Write to the Secretary for information. Dreamer.—Amongst the shares Nos. 1 to 14 mentioned by you, I should prefer West Australian Gold Concessions (1), West Australian Joint Stock Trust (2), Coromandel (4), Johnnies (5), and Hannan's Golden Treasure (8). Mac Dhu.—All your shares Nos. 1 to 5 are well selected and should be held. No reason to sell No. 6 or 7. A. B., Ennis.—1. Write to the London agents. 2. Not yet. Amongst the shares Nos. 3-16 mentioned by you, I prefer Balkis Land (5), Block B (9), Barnato Banks (13), and Transvaal Exploring (15), but all should be held.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Preserve.—Yes, the London Canning Company appears to be promising, the new process for preserving meat being apparently very valuable. B. R., Dublin.—There is a fair prospect of the Cavendish Waterproof Asbestos Sole Company achieving success. A. B. M.—I do not think that the Dunlop-Truffault Company will prove a success. I have already expressed an adverse view in previous issues. T. W. W.—I quite agree with you that it is necessary to reform the management of the Lamer Assam Tea Company, the Directors, although having drawn their fees for 30 years, are evidently unable to achieve success. New blood is badly wanted, and I hope that the shareholders will combine to introduce it. W. J. T. C.—1. See remarks re William Anderson in to-day's issue under "The Mercantile Bank of Scotland—a Disclaimer." 2. I do not advise purchase of the Cycle shares at present. There has been a considerable rise, and it would rather be the time to take profits. Skye.—Yes; I think you will do well to exchange into Grand Trunk Perpetual Debenture stock. A. M. S.—I do not like the Premier Cycle Company at all. Bobo.—I do not like the Dunlop-Truffault Company at all, and have repeatedly said so. You should join the other shareholders who propose to have their names taken off the register owing to the change in name. A. S. V.—No; I do not recommend purchase of Holborn and Frascati now. A Lady Investor.—I should not advise you to make the investment in Pryce Jones. E. M.—I do not care for either of the concerns mentioned by you. Dick Swiveller.—1. A fair industrial investment. 2. A fair investment; but neither are a particular catch at present prices. Country Journalist.—I do not think that this kind of investment is promising. There is no market for the shares, and there is just a risk of future results not being equal to those at present. W. P. P.—No; I strongly advise you to have nothing to do with the Great Work Tin and Mining Company, which is being puffed by Major C. F. Buttle. Novice, Liverpool.—1. A fair investment, but no catch. 2. A good investment of the kind, but now high enough. H. O. L.—The investment is a speculative one, but the Company is apparently doing well. Viva.—No; I do not recommend investment in the United Kingdom Tea Company. Oxford.—You had better take your profit on the Cycle shares. Sea Water.—A local concern, about which no information is available here. Shikarry.—1. If you are a holder, sell these Tyre shares now and realise a good profit. 2. I do not like New Beestons at all. 3. I do not advise a purchase of New Premier. J. W. B.—A fair debenture issue, but no catch.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Sirrom.—1. A cheap Indian mining share, but I do not advise a further purchase to average. 2. I do not like this at all. W. Y.—Yes, the Brewery Debentures in question would be suitable for the investment of your £2,500. You should hold Holcomb Valley for a further rise. Edina.—1. The pamphlet is returned as requested; I advise you to deal only through a member of the Stock Exchange, and not through outside brokers of this kind, who make absurd promises. 2. No reason at all, and no doubt a recovery will evidently come about. 3. You should take your profit in these shares. 4. I think under the circumstances you ought to give the letter of indemnification, as you have mislaid the document. R. H. E. A.—You appear to have made a fair selection and should hold for an improvement, although I am not particularly fond of Turks (1). C. M. F.—1. See remarks under "Home Railway Dividends." I think Great Eastern Ordinary are quite high enough, and should prefer Dover "A." 2. I do not advise sale now. 3. I do not like New Beestons; but Singer Cycles may recover. 4. No; I do not recommend the investment. Parrhesia.—A and B. No option but to hold for the present. C. Hold for an improvement. D. Great Boulder South are likely to improve again. E. No, leave the Antimony-Gold and Complex Ores Extraction Company alone. You have done right about Nitrate Rails. Tarts.—I am glad you did so well in Dover "A." Jagersfontein (A) should be sold on an improvement. Certainly keep Mozambique (B) for a rise. I do not advise a "Bear" of Great Western. As regards D, you will see my views under "Home Railway Dividends." J. M.—1. Take a fair profit. 2. Take your profit. 3. A recovery will no doubt come about again. 4. I do not advise a "Bear" of Brighton "A." 5. Louisville are a fair speculative purchase; but it might be advisable to await further developments in the States. Cheque.—1. See remarks under "The Kaffir Circus Still Waiting." 2. I certainly do not advise a purchase of Chartered; and, amongst the other mining shares, I prefer Croydon Consols (I). 3. I do not like the New Beeston. 4. Not at all. Sailor.—No, I do not advise the sale of Alabama Midland bonds. Amongst the West Australia Mining Companies mentioned by you I prefer Lake View Consols, Hannan's Golden Treasure, and Hampton Plains; amongst the Transvaal shares Langlaagte Estate and Randfontein. Yes, you can buy the mines in question. Leontodon.—Yes; you should hold your shares, Nos. 1 to 4; but get out of Cheque Banks at a fair profit. Quid.—1. Hold this stock for the present. 2. Await the sale before you buy other shares. 3. Yes. Heather.—1. I do not care for these. 2. No option but to hold for an improvement. D. 05.—Amongst your shares, Nos. 1 to 23, I see no reason for selling any at present. Most of the Americans should recover, and the others are well selected. T.—1. Not advisable to sell at a loss now that the other Home Rails are doing so well. 2. No reason to make any exchange just now. 3. Hold now, also No. 4. When Mr. Barnato returns some fresh information concerning the Kimberley Roodepoort (S) should be forthcoming. 6. A meeting is to be held shortly. All South Africans should be held. Job.—1. You got in too high, but hold now for a rise. 2. Yes, hold. 3. Very speculative. 4. The best Uruguay bonds to buy are those of the new Five per Cent. Loan, issued at 71½, and now quoted at 1¼ discount. No temptation to buy the Gas stock. Border Boy.—1. No option but to hold and to average when the price is low. 2. Only market influences. 3. Wealth of Nations are a good purchase, and will come along again, also Wealth of Nations Extended. Enquirens, Scotland.—1. Hold Randfontein. Apparently you bought after the shares were ex-rights, in which case you could not claim the bonus. Give me the exact date of your purchase. 2. All these are fair mining risks. 3. No, I do not like Pearson's, Limited. A. R. H.—1. The new Lake View Consols at 4¾ are a tempting purchase. Nos. 2, 3, and 4 are all promising from your point of view. Addis, Birmingham.—I do not like Nos. 1 or 3, but Nos. 2 and 4 should recover again. Oridia.—1. Yes, you might sell on a further advance. 2. I am afraid they are too speculative. 3. The mine is being developed.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

The money market still maintains a semblance of firmness, partly owing to the number of Yankee bills drawn against Railroad securities which are offering here, while lenders of money also rely upon the early issue of the Russian loan to support rates. But it is now known that the issue will not be large, and being issued chiefly in France, it will not affect London much. Consols are the turn firmer at 113$\frac{7}{16}$, and gilt-edged stocks generally display a firm tone. Silver has improved slightly to 31$\frac{7}{16}$d., but it is evident that the silver craze in the States is not taken au sérieux, as otherwise the price would already have advanced more. Rupee Paper is firmer at 64⅜, chiefly on the demand for remittances to the East. Brewery shares have been steady, and Allsopps are slightly firmer at 176. Guinness have also recovered to 670. In Nitrate Rails hardly any business has been transacted, the quotations remaining at 7¼. Notwithstanding a better demand for Nitrate of Soda, the shares of Nitrate-producing Companies have not been in favour. Mexican Rails have experienced an improvement on a report that an effort is being made to bring about a renewal of the pooling arrangement between the four leading Companies. It is greatly to be regretted that this step was not taken sooner, or, in fact, that the pool was ever broken up. In this the Mexican Railway (Vera Cruz line) has been the chief offender. Cycle shares have been very dull, although prices have been fairly well maintained. The Humber Cycle Manufactory in Coventry has, unfortunately, been burnt to the ground. Thus I suppose we must not look for any improvement in these shares in the immediate future, although I hear that the Extension Company is doing very well. I am also told that Cycle Tubes are worth buying; while Beestons, now quoted 4¾, had best be left alone. Dunlop Deferred are steady at ¾ premium, but a good many realising sales have recently been effected, and considering the substantial profits to be cleared, this is undoubtedly a wise policy. Who are William Simpson & Company, stock and share dealers, 66, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.? They are sending out circulars in which they boast of having closed their "co-operative joint deal" in Chatham Preference stock at the magnificent profit of £42. 10s. on each £10 invested, and that they have concluded the whole of the "co-operative joint deals" conducted by them during the present year without having made a single loss. William Simpson & Company must indeed be clever, and it is surprising that they should condescend to share their profits with the public; in fact, they are such complete philanthropists that they are again inviting subscriptions for a "co-operative joint deal" in a stock (not named) in which a rise is so imminent that, without the slightest hesitation, clients may expect a very handsome profit. W. Simpson & Company also give a guarantee against the loss of the subscription; but that, I suppose, is their own individual guarantee only. The wonder is that Simpson & Company have not retired long ago as millionaires, instead of still touting for subscriptions from complete strangers.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

THE MAN IN THE TRAIN.

THE Northern express was about to leave the Tedcroft Junction when two girls rushed into the station. They had just time to hurry into the first carriage at hand and have their bags and rugs bundled in after them, when the whistle sounded and the train started.

"How I hate a rush!" exclaimed Angela Trevor, the elder of the two sisters, a handsome, resolute-looking girl, as she sank breathless into her place. "It is so upsetting to one's nerves."

"Disarranges one's clothes, too," added Molly.

"To think of our not having had time to select a carriage for such a long journey!" said Angela.

Both glanced involuntarily to the other end of the carriage, where their one fellow traveller sat in the corner seat on the same side with Angela. His head and face were hidden from view by the ample pages of the Times spread out before him. Two long, tweed-clad legs were stretched out, finished with flattish feet in well fitting boots. At the side glimpses showed of a shoulder, an arm, and a thin nervous-looking hand.

"He looks all right," Molly said, carelessly thrusting a hairpin into her back hair.

"Undeniably a gentleman," said Angela, with decision. "He has a good tailor, and his boots are unexceptional."

The girls settled down for the journey, extracting from amongst the surrounding impedimenta the usual literary solaces in the way of newspapers and vividly bound books. First, however, they talked over in low tones the visit on which they were going in Yorkshire. Their hostess was a friend and contemporary, who had lately married the Squire of Mapledene. The girls were full of excitement, surmise, and pleasant anticipations regarding the visit to their friend in her new place and position. It was some time before the flow of conversation ceased, and they took up their books. Angela was soon engaged in following the unwholesome career of a modern heroine through all its risky intricacies. Molly had chanced on a volume of short stories, plainly inspired by the triumphs of Sherlock Holmes. They were full of ghastly adventures with criminals and lunatics; the situations, though infinite in variety, were all alike thrilling and blood-curdling. Molly's youthful imagination took fire; one story, an adventure with a lunatic in a railway-carriage, especially excited her. It was not a particularly happy selection for a railway journey. She looked up from the pages with a shudder, her blood running cold. It was only in books, however, that awful, creepy adventures happened to travellers. She had never known a real person who was unlucky enough to meet a criminal or lunatic in a train. As the reassuring thought entered her mind, her eyes wandered to the far end of the carriage. They unexpectedly met those of the man in the corner seat; the shock was sharp and violent. He was sitting up, the Times folded on his knees, allowing his whole face to be seen. Such a face! Just like so many of those described in the stories Molly had been reading. The coincidence was extraordinary and startling. The girl's imagination rushed off on a series of wild flights, as she drew quickly back, cowering behind her book.

MEDITERRANEAN and BALTIC CRUISES for EIGHTEEN GUINEAS, Conducted by Mr. Woolrych Perowne, on the s.s. "Midnight Sun" (3,188 tons).—Particulars. Secretary, 5, Endsleigh-gdns. Ldn. N.W.

She had never seen a stranger looking man: hollow cheeked, gaunt, grim, but, above all, with the most peculiar eyes, staring and prominent. She had so little expected such a development in the harmless-looking man behind the Times that the shock and surprise were very great. She retained, however, self-control enough not to appeal to Angela on the impulse of the moment. Molly was used to having her fears ridiculed. She therefore decided to wait before giving any alarm, for it was possible that her excited imagination was running away with her.

After a few minutes she ventured to peep cautiously from behind her book. The man had turned away, and was looking out of the window, the gaunt face only showing in profile. Molly breathed more freely, relieved from the stare of those terrible eyes; she made a quick, close study of the stranger. As the scrutiny progressed, however, another change came over her face—the composure she had regained began to diminish rapidly. Her eyes noted the man's bare head, then went from it to the rack above, to the seat opposite, to the floor. No trace of hat or hat-box, of bags, rugs, or luggage of any kind could she discover. Her heart stood still. Who but an escaped lunatic or criminal would be travelling hatless and without baggage? The ghastly ideas, vague before, now took terrible and definite shape. She bent quickly across, and touched the unconscious Angela, whom the doubtful heroine's adventures still held wholly absorbed.

"Take care," Molly whispered. "Don't start and look round. I want to tell you something."

"Good gracious! What has happened? Are you ill."

Angela, so suddenly roused from her reading, found it hard not to exclaim aloud at her sister's words, and the sight of her pale face.

"No, no. I am all right. Only it's a great deal worse. It's about the man in the carriage." Molly's voice sank to the lowest whisper.

"What do you mean? Has he been doing anything?"

"No. But he is dreadful-looking, such a strange face and staring eyes. He must be an escaped criminal, or a lunatic. A lunatic, I think, he looks so queer. Oh, it's dreadful."

"Why should you rush at such awful conclusions," Angela expostulated, "merely because a man is queer-looking?"

"But it's not only that. Oh, I wish it was." Molly's teeth chattered with fright.

"What else? What is it? For Heaven's sake speak plainly."

"He is travelling without a hat, his head is bare," Molly gasped out in strangled whispers. "And he has no hat in the carriage, no luggage of any kind either."

"Good gracious! Are you quite sure?"

"Quite. He has nothing with him but the Times. Would any ordinary man travel like that?"

Angela's face bleached to the colour of her sister's; her fears started into just as acute life. No ordinary man would travel bareheaded. There was an awful probability about the conclusions drawn by Molly from his hatless condition.

"Oh!" she gasped under her breath. "It is awful! And to think that we are nearly half an hour from the next station!"

A movement at the other end of the carriage made both girls sink back in their places with beating hearts. As Angela sank against the cushions, she caught a sudden and unexpected glimpse of the suspected stranger. He had turned again from the window, and was re-opening the Times. Alas! Molly had not exaggerated, as fear sometimes made her prone to do. The man's face was dreadful in its gaunt grimness. And then the staring eyes and bare head!

Angela could not but accept the situation, as the more suspicious and timid Molly had accepted it. There was something wrong with the man; he had all the appearance of being a lunatic. Awful though the thought might be that they were alone in the carriage with a madman, it had to be faced. Angela, less helpless than Molly, rapidly began to consider what could be done. The train was not due to stop for at least twenty minutes longer. Would the quiet phase in which the man evidently then was, last during that time?—a terrible and vital question. And if it did not? Angela clenched her hands in the agony of the thought, and thrust it from her resolutely. Better not to think of the worst, not to anticipate a situation which would find them helpless. The thing was to stave off danger, to do all that they could to preserve the man's present state of calm.

Angela made a rapid mental review of all her knowledge—principally gathered from sensational literature—concerning the insane. As the result, she concluded that what they had to do now was to avoid everything which could attract the man's notice, or excite him in any way. They must not, for the world, let him see them looking at him, nor rouse any suspicions in his mind that they were talking or thinking of him. The difficulty was to communicate these decisions to Molly without exciting suspicion.

Angela first ventured a swift glance from behind her book to the other end of the carriage. The man was again concealed by the newspaper; the peaceful, ordinary way in which his long legs were stretched across the carriage would have been more reassuring were it not for the top of the bare head that showed above. He was quiet, however. A gleam of hope kept up Angela's spirit. That calm state, if undisturbed, might very well last until their arrival at the next station.

She snatched the opportunity to stoop over and communicate with the trembling Molly. It was difficult to restore her to the appearance of a normal state to prevent her little gasps becoming audible.

"Try not to look so frightened for Heaven's sake, Molly," Angela softly whispered. "Quiet and calm are our best chance. Don't give way like that, it may not be so bad after all. If we do nothing to attract his attention he will not notice us. They often do not. Perhaps, he will fall asleep; he must be drowsy going over that paper so often."

A smothered "Oh!" answered Angela's well-meant attempt to reassure her sister.

"He's not a bit drowsy," she gasped. "I've just caught his eye over the newspaper. And—and—he looked as if he—was—going—to—talk. Oh! What are we to do! Oh, Angela!"

Angela had turned deadly pale, but her presence of mind did not desert her.

"Let us pretend to be admiring the view," she whispered. "How lovely the light on those fields is!" she said in a louder tone, turning to the window. "Do look, Molly."

"He might spring on us——"

"Look," Angela severely interrupted the faltering whisper, "at that effect. Out of the window beside you, a little to the right; the shadows on the trees."

"Yes—yes—I—see."

"Go on looking, and talking about what you see," admonished Angela in undertones, "and when you can think of nothing more to say we will go on to the weather, and to Yorkshire, and the hours of arrival at the stations."

She gave the lead, taking up the prescribed topics in a quiet, level tone, the least calculated to arouse interest and attention. Her ears, all the time, were fearfully alert, listening for the slightest sound from the other end of the carriage. The chief burden of the conversation rested on her, for Molly's part in it, even with the most heroic efforts, was very weak and disjointed. Sometimes it broke off altogether, when a rustle, or movement in the far corner, made her teeth chatter and all power of speech fail. Though the stronger minded Angela's heart beat just as quickly at these awful moments, she always rose to the emergency and kept up the discourse with unvarying calmness.

To those, stretched in agony upon a rack, minutes are as hours. Never had the sisters dreamed that twenty minutes could be drawn out to such dreadful length. Ten times twenty seemed to have passed, when at last, the engine began to whistle and the train to slacken speed, before pulling up in the station. On the instant that the stop was made, the man sprang from the carriage, and disappeared in the crowd on the platform. It was hard for the girls to realise at once that the danger was over; the reaction after the great strain had such a bewildering effect.

Angela found her voice first.

"Oh"—she drew a deep breath—"what an escape we have had! He is stark, staring mad."

"To think of his rushing off like that! We need not leave the carriage now. Oh, it was dreadful while it lasted!" sighed Molly.

"He is evidently evading pursuit. I hope he may be caught. I wonder if we ought to tell any one about him, Molly?"

The girls had not decided the question when the signal for departure was given, and the train began to move. At the moment there was a rush and a shout, the door was dragged open, the bareheaded man precipitated himself into his former place in the carriage, breathless and panting. The girls, literally paralysed by the terror of the awful surprise, were struck dumb. They could not call for help until it was too late and the station had been left behind.

The extremity of the danger had the sudden effect of steadying Angela's nerves; she stood, as it were, at bay. Everything depended on her, for Molly had utterly collapsed. The situation seemed desperate; the man was now palpably excited, and, what was a thousand times worse, evidently determined to fix his attention on them. A dreadful intuition told Angela that he would address her. It rapidly went through her mind that no matter what he said he must be humoured, at any cost, and not contradicted. It was the only chance with lunatics.

Several awful moments passed in silence. Although Angela did not look, she felt the staring eyes fixed on her, as surely as if she saw them.

The man moved uneasily and cleared his throat. Angela's heart beat wildly, the crisis had come.

"I beg your pardon," he jerked out the words in a peculiar and awkward way. "I frightened you?"

The conventional "not at all" had almost escaped her lips when she remembered. Being mad, he had probably wanted to frighten her.

"Yes," she agreed, hastily. "You did."

"I had to run like a lunatic, I couldn't help it."

Alas! she knew only too well, that he could not help it!

"I failed in my attempt, though I ran half way through the town. I hope to have better luck next time. I shall try again at Darlingham, the next station."

"Oh! I hope so. Indeed, I am sure you will succeed at Darlingham."

"You know the town? Then perhaps you can direct me where to go?"

"Yes, I know the town very well," said Angela, boldly. She had never in her life set foot in the place; but if ever there was a case in which the end justified the means, it was her present one.

"But how do you know what I want?"

The sudden suspicion in the inquiry made her answer quickly,

"I don't know what you want. Certainly not. I haven't thought about it at all."

"But you said you were sure I would succeed at Darlingham." The man stared hard at her.

"Yes—that is—no—that is, I should be very glad if you succeeded in whatever it is."

The man stared harder than ever. How dreadfully mad his staring eyes looked!

"Success would be very convenient," he said, drily. "I was looking for a hatter." He gave a short laugh.

Angela's blood ran cold; Molly, with a still whiter face, cowered more closely in her corner.

"I suppose that does not surprise you, does it?"

"No," Angela managed to answer. "Not at all, it is very nice—very natural, I mean."

Had he also included the search for a March hare it would have seemed only too natural as well.

"Perhaps the train may not wait long enough at Darlingham. Is it a small place?"

"No, a splendid town, with fine streets and shops of every kind. You will certainly have the opportunity you want."

Angela's imagination was rising gloriously to the emergency, under the stimulant of apparent success. Molly's heart gave a first, faint throb of hope on seeing how closely the lunatic was attending to Angela's words. To have his mind well fixed on Darlingham was the best way of keeping deadly thoughts out of it.

"Do you know of a hatter? And can you direct me to the shop?"

"Certainly." Angela ran on with glib inventions regarding streets and turnings to right and left, the name of the hatter even.

"I can hardly go wrong with such copious directions," he remarked. After a pause, apparently spent in considering them, he sat back in his seat and said, as if to himself:—

"It is a question of time."

With his staring eyes fixed straight before him, he began fumbling in his pockets. From one of them he finally produced a small leather case. The eyes of the girls followed his movements with a terror far more deadly than any which had before possessed them. Molly's pupils dilated still more; the man had drawn something from the case. What was it—that thing clasped within his hand? Had not the light caught for a moment an edge of steel? In a quick flash of memory the details of the ghastly story, which had first started her fears of the man, came before her. The lunatic's sudden drawing forth of a razor from a bag, his address to the other occupant of the carriage, "I am about to sharpen this for you. I have been studying your throat; it looks as if it would cut well."

The positive, the appalling certainty possessed Molly that the man opposite held concealed in his grasp a clasp knife. Did Angela know it, too? Perhaps Molly would have shrieked aloud, but that fear fastened her tongue to her mouth; her brain grew dizzy and confused. Several moments, or it may have been minutes, had passed, she was just making a frantic clutch at Angela, when the train pulled up in Darlingham station. Bereft of all perception, save of the mad man and his movements, even Angela had not noticed the slackening of speed.

As on the previous occasion, the man rose instantaneously.

"I shall follow your directions closely," he paused in the doorway of the carriage to say. "Excuse me, I have not a moment to lose. Au revoir, young ladies."

He disappeared from sight at once. The girls clung to each other speechless. As the peril had been so much greater, so was the reaction on this occasion. Angela's nerves broke down completely in the sudden relaxation of the strain. A considerable time passed before she had sufficiently mastered her hysterical sobs to gasp out, "Let us call the porter. Quick, quick."

Even as she spoke the train—which still had to make up for lost time—was in motion. For some awful instants the girl's eyes were riveted in agony on the door. It remained fast shut; the station receded from sight; the train got up speed.

"We are safe, safe at last, Heaven be thanked!" Angela and Molly threw themselves into each others arms in an ecstasy of joyful emotion.

One gruesome memento of the peril escaped lay on the far corner seat—a clasp knife of curious make, with a watch set in the handle. Molly's fears had not deceived her.

At Mapledene the girls' adventure was the sensation of the evening, Angela, the heroine of the hour. Her nerve in danger and her successful strategy in getting rid of the lunatic at Darlingham created general enthusiasm.

Next morning as Angela passed through the hall, a fly, with luggage, drew up at the door. The interchanged greetings, "Hallo, Professor!" "Well, Tom!" reached her ears. The first voice was the Squire's, hearty and welcoming; the sound of the second made Angela start and turn abruptly round. Descending from the vehicle appeared a long, thin figure, with a gaunt face and staring eyes. His head was not bare but covered by a soft hat. Still there was no mistaking—the lunatic!

Some hours later the Trevors were holding private conference with the lady of Mapledene in her boudoir. Tears of laughter still filled the eyes of the latter.

"I cannot help it girls, you musn't mind. It is too killing!" she said. "Any one would have made the mistake. I never saw the man until now. Such a being! No wonder you thought him a lunatic."

"And remember," put in Angela, "that he had no luggage and no hat."

"He explained to Tom the loss of both. He is awfully learned, you know; always in the clouds. He had all his things put in one train and went off himself in another. Just before the junction where you got in, he put his head out of the window and had his hat blown off. At the next station he failed in an attempt to reach the town and buy a hat, and was obliged to rush wildly back to the train. At Darlingham, you know what happened—oh!" the hostess broke off laughing, "you should hear him inveighing against the 'silly girl creature'—he hates all women, and no wonder, for none are ever likely to care for him—who befooled him, and deliberately made him lose his train at Darlingham."

"The worst of it is," said Angela plaintively, "that he is right; and we can never explain. You cannot tell a man that you mistook him for a lunatic, because of his queer looks and style. Oh, it's dreadful!"

"We can never face him again!" both girls exclaimed together, after a pause. "It would be impossible. We must leave at once; we cannot stay."

"Make your minds easy. The Professor has to lecture at York this evening, and then goes on to Scotland. He was to have spent last night here but for the Darlingham mishap. You need not meet him; he goes away before dinner."

"And the knife!" exclaimed Angela.

"Oh, it can easily be smuggled back to him anonymously. He has been deeply bewailing its loss. It appears that it is a special invention of his own, constructed with the most peaceful scientific intentions, instead of those murderous ones which its appearance suggests. You should hear the solemn vow he has registered, never again to travel in a railway carriage with one of our sex."

The lady of Mapledene broke off in peals of laughter, in which Angela and Molly, with minds relieved, were now able to join.

* * * * *

The Professor religiously kept his vow. Never again did he enter a railway carriage which held a lady, young or old. The sight of one always brought him back, however abstracted and absent-minded, from the clouds to the region of practical precaution.

ART NOTES.

THE late Mr. Tom Taylor was probably the very dullest dog that ever edited a comic paper, but in other capacities he achieved well-deserved success. He was a very capable adapter of plays, for example, and as an art critic his judgment was usually sound, and expressed with considerable felicity. More years ago than one cares to remember, Mr. Taylor, writing in the Times of Mr. H. G. Hine's water-colours, said "For wise economy of means and objects, tenderness and sweet sobriety of colour, and the expression of serenity and expanse, Mr. Hine stands alone;" and it would be difficult to characterise more succinctly and truly the impression made by the collection of drawings by the late Vice-President of the Royal Institute, now on view at the Fine Art Society's Gallery in New Bond-street. Mr. Hine, whose recent death at over four-score years will be remembered, was born at Brighton, and his fame as an artist will depend chiefly upon his painting of the South Downs he loved so well. In an artistic sense he may be said to have discovered them, for though his fore runner and intimate friend, Copley Fielding, portrayed some of the beauties of these modest slopes he was never fascinated by them as Hine was, and at most only painted them in a hesitating and tentative fashion. How wedded to Sussex Mr. Hine became, and how closely he studied in all their moods the billowing ranges of downs which form so appropriate a bulwark against the sea, visitors to the Piccadilly Institute have long known; but the exhibition at 148, New Bond-street will do much to widen that knowledge. The drawings on view, some three score and ten in all, were in the possession of the late artist, at the time of his death, and comprise views of the swelling uplands around Lewes and Midhurst, Eastbourne and Hayward's Heath. They exemplify that love of simplicity, gentleness, and repose which not only was ingrained in all the artist's work, but was a reflection of the geniality and unaffectedness in his own nature. It is difficult to realise, as one looks at the drawings, that the late Mr. Hine was as a young man one of the artis s employed on Punch, and that he actually worked as a comic draughtsman on that paper with Birket Foster and other now famous landscapists. Such is the fact, however, as readers of Mr. M. H. Spielman's "History of Punch" will remember. But it was as a painter of the deep combes and leafy shaws, and graceful holts and hangers he loved so well that Mr. Hine found his real métier, and no lover of what is best in English water-colour art should miss the present exhibition of his most characteristic work.

That dainty dilettante and elegant critic, Mr. Frederick Wedmore, has prefaced the catalogue of Mr. J. J. Shannon's pictures at the Fine Art Society's with what Mr. William Morris might call a praise-imparting foreword. Of course it is very nice and kind of Mr. Wedmore to write this effusive appreciation; but this particular mode of log-rolling always reminds one of the method some publishers adopt when they send round to the newspapers, with copies of the books they publish, laudatory reviews of the volumes in question. In this particular case, however, I am not going to say that Mr. Wedmore's language of praise is much too strong. Mr. J. J. Shannon is without doubt one of the most engaging and interesting of our younger painters. He has managed to avoid the Scylla of conventionality without being swallowed up in the Charybdis of eccentricity. He has hit the happy medium between, well, suppose I say Professor Hubert Herkomer and Mr. P. Wilson Steer. Though born in New England, and trained artistically in France, most of Mr. J. J. Shannon's work has been done in this country, and a most agreeably varied selection from that work has been gathered for the present exhibition. It was as a portrait painter he first became known and fashionable, but there is something much more than ordinary portrait painting in such pictures as "The Babes in the Wood," "The Squirrel," and "Tales of Japan," all included in the Bond-street show. There, too, is to be seen that attractive portrait study of a lady, which is called "Spot Red," a happy notion which may suggest a series of similar pictures of fair subjects with such titles as "Thirty, Love!" "Punctured!" and "Three holes up and one to play!" Mr. Shannon's brush-work—invariably excellent—and his colour sense, so rarely at fault, are perhaps seen at their best in "In the Springtime." (No. 15). There is, indeed, only one picture in the exhibition which I could wish away—the sketch of Sir Henry Irving as Louis XI., which is crude even to the extent of repulsiveness.

MUSIC.

THE BAYREUTH FESTIVAL.

THE fact that Mr. Schultz Curtius sold £7,000 worth of tickets in England alone for the Bayreuth Festival, which commenced with a performance of "Das Rheingold," under Dr. Richter, on Sunday evening, speaks very eloquently for the continued popularity of Wagner's music. Whether the cult will still flourish now that Wagner's works are being introduced into the domain of the operatic "star" remains, of course, to be seen. Hitherto the public have been drawn by the music; but experience has proved that whenever M. Jean de Reszke or other great artists have appeared in a work, the public will not accept it with inferior singers. M. Jean de Reszke has now sung in "Lohengrin," "Tristan," and "Die Meistersinger," and next season, both in America and in London, he proposes to add to his repertory Siegmund and Siegfried. At Bayreuth this year they have no artist of any such rank. The Germans, although they would be immensely aggrieved if the howling tenors and voice-worn sopranos of their country were not allowed to accept British gold, are extremely jealous if any engagements for Bayreuth are made outside the Fatherland, and they appear to be quite content that Wagner's music should, in accordance with the Teutonic traditions, be declaimed rather than vocalised. Even M. Van Dyck, who is on the staff of the Vienna Opera, is this year not to sing at Bayreuth; and the whole cast, which includes some venerable sopranos, basses, and tenors, with certain younger ones, are Germans, save such few British exceptions as Miss Brema, who plays Wotan's scolding wife, Fricka, one of the Walkyrie horsewomen, one of the stage prompters, and the second oboe of the orchestra. Considering that a fourth of the whole Bayreuth subscription comes from Great Britain and the United States, Frau Cosima Wagner cannot be accused of excess of liberality towards English-speaking musicians and singers.

The stage mounting is, indeed, the chief feature of Bayreuth this year, and thus we get back to the old pantomime idea, "property" dragon and all. In 1876, when "Der Ring des Nieblungen" was first produced under the composer himself, the festival was a financial failure, and Wagner, in order to cover the debt, sold the scenery and dresses to Herr Neumann, who brought them to Her Majesty's Theatre, in 1882. The tetralogy—of four operas, each being performed five times—forms the entire programme this year, and the cost of the elaborate scenery—painted under the direction of Professor Brückner, of Coburg—and of the costumes, which come from Frankfort and Munich, together with all sorts of new stage machinery, "made in Germany," for the steam curtains, &c., exceeds, I am told, £18,000. Each ticket costs £1 a night, and if we may add the very moderate estimate of £16 a head for travelling and a week's hotel expenses, Bayreuth will take from English musicians this autumn no less than £35,000.

It is, however, to be hoped that foolish people will not again come back with exaggerated notions of the surpassing ability of the vocalists. Most of this is pure cant, although there is something in the atmosphere of Bayreuth which seems to destroy criticism. At any rate, the singers who are fairly raved about at Bayreuth, and who are afterwards engaged here, are found to be very small potatoes indeed, and are, as often as not, condemned by the very writers who previously belauded them. This sort of thing is most disconcerting to managers, although nowadays no manager in his senses would dream of paying the slightest attention to the hysterics of travelling correspondents.

At the Opera, the want of a strong hand is already manifest. Such performances as those of "Aïda" and "Les Huguenots" would never have taken place under the Harris régime. Mr. Maurice Grau who may be one of the Covent Garden managers next year—though as he is expected in London to discuss the affair this week, the matter is not by any means yet settled—gave "Les Huguenots" in the United States with M. Jean de Reszke as Raoul, M. Edouard de Reszke as St. Bris, M. Maurel as De Nevers, Madame Melba as the Queen, M. Plançon as Marcel, and Madame Nordica as Valentina. The de Reszkes have now left England, but a more suitable Raoul than Signor Lucignani could surely have been found; while Madame Albani was in a fatigued condition of voice. Madame Melba, who appeared as Marguerite de Valois and sang in the Garden scene very charmingly, was, indeed, the star of the cast, so much so that it is not very easy to discover the reason why at the performance announced for Friday she is to be replaced by Madame Marie Engle. In Massenet's "Manon" her defects as an actress were more manifest, and here, indeed, M. Alvarez, as Des Grieux, carried off the honours. The Opera closes next week; the projected matinée for the Harris memorial being abandoned. In fact, if the dramatic contingent carry their proposal to annex the whole of the fund for a theatrical charity, it is not impossible that the musical men—the wealthiest among the subscribers—may withdraw, or start a fund on their own account.

"A Subscriber to the Opera for the last Thirty Years" has written me a letter protesting against the practice which Signor Mancinelli has developed of coming before the curtain to bow with the vocalists. It is a very silly custom, and it is the more unmeaning inasmuch as it is generally observed when Signor Mancinelli is conducting the operas of Wagner, in which, beyond all question, Italian musicians must be greatly inferior to the German conductors who make Wagner's music a special study. My correspondent writes:—

> "There is absolutely no reason why the very mercurial gentleman who takes the call should in any way obtrude himself on the audience. No one expects to see him, and very, very few want him. . . . No doubt if this custom is to prevail, the spectators may eventually make the acquaintance of the scene painter, the chorus master, and head carpenter, after an usually brilliant "set." This is, of course, an age of self-advertisement, but an orchestral conductor should advertise himself by his own musical merits if he can; or, if he cannot, he should imitate the conduct of such real masters of their craft as Costa, Vianesi, and Arditi, in the past, and Mottl, Levy, and Richter in the present."

The Philharmonic Society met last week and passed a resolution forbidding encores next season. I should rather like to know how they propose to carry this scheme out. The artists will certainly have a word to say, and as great pianists play at the Philharmonic for almost a nominal fee—often, by the way, eked out by pecuniary contributions from the pianoforte manufacturers, who in return are allowed to plaster the instruments with advertisements—they certainly must be listened to. Also the encore-piece insisted on after the pianist has made two or three returns to the platform is, beyond question, wanted by the public. To encore a song in the middle of an opera, or a movement in the middle of a piece, may possibly destroy its symmetry and balance. But the only objection to an encore-piece after a pianoforte concerto at the close of the first section of the concert comes from a few atrabilious writers, who have the matter in their own hands by taking a walk while the encore is being played, and by not mentioning the incident at all.

Some of the artists who disappointed last season have again promised to appear at the Philharmonic next year. Among them are M. Paderewski, who will produce Mackenzie's Scottish Fantasia, Madame Sembrich, and possibly Herr Rosenthal, although the terms offered are not very large for so great an artist. Mr. D'Albert will also return, together, it is hoped, with Madame Menter, Herr Sauer, and others.

M. Paderewski was in town a few days ago, but he kept his journey from Paris very secret, as he did not wish to be asked to play in public. It was a matter of a consultation with an English physician, who, it is hoped, is curing the great pianist's only child—a cripple.

A magnificent gift would be the Mustel Organ, which is suited to orchestral purposes, and therefore invaluable for private operatic theatricals, as well as church music. It can be made to sound like a full military band, but the delicate tones of the violin or flute can be heard as a solo."—World, 11th Dec., 1895.—METZLER & Co., 40 to 43, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

It is not very easy to understand the reason of the semi-privacy attending the banquet given to Mr. Cummings last Thursday. It is perfectly true that many leading musicians took part, but it appears that from some oversight the Press was not invited, so that the oratory was wasted. I am told, however, that Professor Bridge made a most laughter-provoking speech in reply to the toast of the ladies. Professor Bridge and Mr. Cummings are indeed the best speakers in the musical profession. Two days earlier Mr. Cummings had a most enjoyable reception at the Guildhall School of Music, given by the Professors, 120 in all. The album, with its flowery address, might, however, have been omitted. This testimonial business is being vastly overdone.

Although Promenade Concerts were not anticipated this year, it is very possible that a short season may be given at Queen's Hall, starting on August 29. This, of course, is miserably late in the season, for the Musical Festivals will then be commencing, and the ordinary London concerts will start immediately afterwards. In the old days it was considered by Promenade Concert managers that every day lost in August was so much lost money.

The death of Alfred Novello at the fine old age of eighty-six brings us back to the very early days of choral music here. When he started in business in 1829, there was really only one important choral society, the St. Cecilia, who were making a great fuss about a performance, with a band and chorus of "at least a hundred," of "Messiah" at London-wall. The engraved music was then so expensive, vocal scores coming to about £2 each, that each member made a manuscript copy of his part for himself. Alfred Novello, by using Messrs. Clowes' movable types and by adopting stereotyping, altered all that, and he and his former manager and successor, Henry Littleton, made choral music cheap, and therefore popular. It is exactly half a century since the first cheap copies of the "Messiah" and "Creation" were issued, in twelve monthly parts at 6d. each, although now the "octavo" edition consists of nearly 100 oratorios and other sacred or secular works, which can be got at prices from 1s. to 5s. each. Music has therefore been placed in the hands of everybody, and choirs have multiplied throughout the land. In Germany they still stick to the old costly prices for music, and this is one reason why England has in oratorio gone so far ahead of the Fatherland. Alfred Novello retired thirty years ago, and has since enjoyed the placid life of an annuitant. He lived in Genoa with his sister Mrs. Cowden Clarke, author of the "Shakespeare Concordance." Another sister is the once famous prima donna Clara Novello, who is still living in Italy.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—What were things like with you on Thursday? Here we had a morsel of winter inserted in the midst of summer by the damp and ghostly finger of that depressing old saint, St. Swithin. It blew, it poured, it shook down heaps of poor little leaves, dried up with previous drought, and the thermometer dropped a trifle of thirty degrees or so. On the Tuesday it was 87 deg. in the shade, and on that dripping Thursday it was 57 deg., and nothing but shade. I want to know what you were feeling like. A little bit dismal? We bore up bravely, looked out of window as little as possible, and I found consolation in a delightful book, an old one, that I had picked up at a bookstall a few days before. It is "John a-Dreams." Have you ever read it?

Princess Maud has had lovely presents. The Queen has given her a diamond and ruby necklace, the stones being very fine; the Empress Dowager of Russia an enormous turquoise mounted in splendid brilliants, forming a brooch; her sisters, brother, and sister-in-law, a parure of turquoise and diamonds; some ladies and gentlemen combining, a diamond tiara; the Queen's Household, a diamond and turquoise necklace; the Prince of Wales's Household, a beautiful pony, with Ralli cart, harness, clock, and fur rug, and a Simpson bicycle with a Simpson lever-chain to the bridegroom. The Prince and Princess have given a handsome dressing-bag, and the Princess, in addition, a lovely circular cloak of violet velvet, lined with sable, and made with a collar of dark Russian sable. A rivière of diamonds is among the wedding presents, being a legacy for Princess Maud on her marriage, from the late Duchess of Inverness. I hunted out this lady in an old Peerage, and found that she was a daughter of the second Earl of Arran, that she was married in 1815, and that her husband died in 1825. In 1834 she took her mother's maiden name, Underwood, and adopted her maternal grandfather's coat of arms. She was created Duchess of Inverness in 1840. I fancy this must have been rather a unique distinction, and should like to know all about it. The Duchess lived at Kensington Palace for many years before her death in 1873.

Lord and Lady William Nevill's wedding present is a lovely one. It consists of a dessert and coffee service of old Sèvres, the ground in the deep rich blue shade of blue known as bleu du roi, and the whole richly jewelled and gilt. The monogram is in the centre in raised and chased gold, surmounted by a coronet. This was designed by Messrs. Goode, South Audley-street, and manufactured by Copeland, Stoke-upon-Trent. The beautiful Sèvres green dinner and coffee service, richly gilt, with a crossed M in gold and a coronet in heraldic colours, presented by the inhabitants of South Yarmouth, was also executed by the co-operation of these two firms.

The Countess of Gosford's present is a unique and beautiful service of table glass so fine of texture that the various articles were practically imponderable. We often hear people say, "Oh, it's no weight!" but in this instance the phrase has an almost literal meaning. The glasses have an M engraved in oak leaves and a coronet surmounting the letter.

Another beautiful gift is an Early English lantern, a fine specimen of the old English handicraft of hammered iron, revived by the members of an Art Guild at Sandringham, who present the lantern. The glass has been engraved by Messrs Goode with a coronet and an M.

A lovely wedding cake has been made for Princess Maud by Searcy, of Connaught-street. It is in three tiers and stands 4 ft. 6 in. in height, including the three-step silvered pedestal plateau, with its allegorical and finely-modelled angels and lions, signifying peace and power, and its sprays of water-lilies. The top is surmounted by an open-work tazza carried out in sugar, very graceful in outline and supported by three Cupids, exquisitely modelled and portrayed in a light and happy dance, the sense of motion being very cleverly conveyed. The tazza above is heaped with flowers, all carried out in sugar, every bit of the ornamentation being edible, with the sole exception of the green leaves. A garland of orange blossom is lightly laid round the border of the topmost tier; on the others, where they extend beyond the tier above, are disposed sprays of roses, orange blossom, narcissus, and lily of the valley, with pears, apples, oranges, grapes, cherries, strawberries, and peaches modelled in marzipan, the tint being a soft cream colour. The rose petals were touched with pink, and the narcissus with orange round the central cup. Shields with the initial letters of bride and bridegroom, M. and C., placed alternately, are bordered with pearls and illuminated in the correct heraldic colours. These are hung, four square, on the second tier. On the one below are the coat-of-arms of England and Denmark, also bordered with pearls (edible) and emblazoned in the tints approved of Heralds' College.

The Hungarian Ball was a great success this year. It was held at the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-colours, Piccadilly. The Blue Hungarian Band was in attendance, and at midnight there was a grand quadrille danced, which was a pretty sight. Countess Deym, who is a very pretty woman, with large grey sparkling eyes, and quantities of hair nearly white, danced with the Duke of Teck, who wore a broad red ribbon across his breast. So did Count Deym, whose partner was the Duchess of Portland, dressed in white satin and wearing superb pearls. A cluster of Malmaisons was fastened in her dress. Madame von André, a subject for Whistler's highest art, with her white dress, white hair, creamy complexion, and exquisite diamonds; the Duchess of Roxburghe and her two tall daughters; Lady Sarah Wilson, in black, with a star tiara and a diamond necklace; Lady Randolph Churchill, in pearl grey with black tulle ruchings, and her sister, Mrs. Jack Leslie, all took part in the quadrille, which formed a large square. I also noticed the Countess of Mar and Kellie, looking very pretty, and Mrs. Ronalds. Mrs. Arthur and her handsome daughter, Muriel, were present.

Many of the skirts worn at Sandown on the Eclipse Stakes day were bordered with some slight trimming, such as a band of sequined braid, a ruche of coloured ribbon, two or three rows of black velvet laid on a band of gold galloon, or some device of the kind. It was apparent that these trimmings had been added, at the close of a busy season, more in order to conceal the effects of wear-and-tear at the hem of the dress than because fashion has decreed any such additions.

French muslins with flowers of bright tints printed on them were worn by several, and plain white muslin was adopted by many young girls. One of these was supplemented by a fichu of palest green chiffon frilled with its own material. A large bow of pale-green ribbon was tied on the brim of the rustic straw hat, and seemed to fasten in the stems of a dozen large and beautiful roses, pink and red. A tall girl in white had a very short zouave of shot yellow and orange silk, embroidered in cream colour. Iceland poppies trimmed the hat.

A club for ladies is going to be opened in Brighton under the title of the "Brighton and County Ladies' Club." It has secured a home in the King's-road, a convenient centre, where there are to be reading, writing, luncheon, drawing, and bedrooms; also rooms where members can interview dressmakers, servants, &c. Among those who have already joined are Lady Alice Morland, Lady Dora Yeoman, Lady Isabella Stewart, and the Hon. Mrs. Hastings. The subscription is two guineas per annum and one guinea entrance fee. This latter is to be remitted in the case of the first fifty members. If you would like to join you can do so, though you do not live in Sussex. The subscription for such temporary members is 15s. a month. If you want to know more about it, you must write to Miss Thorold, 14, Montpelier-terrace, Brighton, one of the secretaries.

I have a sad confession to make to you. I mixed up the millinery of two plays in writing to you last week. Lilla told me about the frocks in "The Little Genius" and in "My Girl" at the Gaiety, and rattled on so inconsequently about both that I was under the impression that all the gowns belonged to the first-named at the Shaftesbury. As a matter of fact, the beautiful seaside gowns in "My Girl" are made by Redfern, and are acknowledged to be an immense success. Mr. George Edwardes was determined to spare no expense in turning out the play, and as a result the costumes are a great draw, even in July. The way in which the changes are rung on the simple motif of blue and white is surprisingly clever.

I know you are a great enthusiast for the support of home industries, so I must not omit to tell you of the afternoon party Mr. J. L. Wanklyn, M.P., gave at his rooms in Hyde Park Court to view samples of Bradford manufactures. No doubt you saw in the papers that Mr. Wanklyn was instrumental in inducing the Princess of Wales to select some pieces of his constituents' products for her daughter's trousseau. It was a good idea of his to give a wider circle an opportunity of inspecting patterns of the Bradford goods, and among those who accepted his invitation were a number of well-known people. Of course, the Countess of Bective was there—you remember the splendid efforts she made in the interests of Bradford trade years ago—and so also were the Marchioness of Salisbury, Viscountess Cranborne, and Lady Evelyn Cavendish. Many of the materials exhibited—alpacas, mohairs, velvets, plush silks, and what not—were very handsome and artistic, and I suspect that others, like myself, regretted that the beauties of some of the things for summer dress had only been revealed to us so near the end of the season. Cannot Mr. Wanklyn arrange later on a similarly agreeable function to show what Bradford can do for us in the way of winter wear?

Arthur, who was so fearfully-ill in the Spring, writes from Dieppe in terms of high eulogium. He says:—

The place is marvellously recuperative. Look at me, for instance. People who saw me at first were sure I was dying; doctors told me I could not expect to get well under a year; but in three months I was playing tennis! A lady came here a month ago who had not been out of her room all the winter. Rheumatism and nervous debility were her chief ailments. She was taken out in a bath-chair all the first week, and then gradually took to getting out for a stroll on the front. In three weeks she was walking by the sea all day, and a few days ago went off to Rouen sight-seeing. We have already seen several other cases of great benefit to visitors. Then as to amusements. There is a delightful and well-managed Casino here, where there are most excellent concerts every afternoon and evening, at which there are occasionally Parisian stars—indeed, one star at nearly every performance. Hikku, who is said to be the finest living 'cellist, is here this week. To-night they are doing Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon" with Parisian talent. At the Casino there is, of course, the bathing from the boxes, and baths in the building, reading-room, café, and, above all, the petits chevaux tables, which are much patronised, and find the funds for the building. A few folks win, but most lose, as at all gambling places. Outside, in the casino grounds, are charming walks, and every afternoon a conjurer or Punch and Judy performs for the children; and there is a capital tennis club, with two lawns. There is a baccarat room there, too (open only to special members of the Casino).

Then visitors may like to know that there is a pigeon shooting club here—I have been to the opening of it to-day—where the sport is practised with glass "birds;" also a golf ground is being prepared at Puys, a suburb one and a half miles away where Lord Salisbury's villa is, or rather the villa that was his for fourteen years.

The town authorities have just acquired the plage from the Government, and are going to create a new esplanade, and lay it all out with trees and seats galore. They have begun by running a line of electric lights from end to end, which look very striking. The place is not cheap in the season, of course, any more than other resorts, but it is not so ruinously dear as it is reputed to be; far less than Trouville or Ostend.

Is it too hot to think of cookery? If not, try these "Creams of Trout;" they are very delicious and have a most appetising appearance:—

Take the flesh of a nice trout weighing about ½ lb., pound until it is a pulp; add 2 oz. of butter and the yolks of 2 eggs, pound again, season with salt and pepper and rub through a hair sieve into a basin. Work the mixture with a wooden spoon until it is quite light, adding a gill of thick cream gradually. Grease eight or nine cutlet-shaped moulds with creamed butter, fill with the fish cream, and place them in a stewpan with very little water; put a greased paper over, and steam without allowing them to boil for twenty minutes. Then drain on a cloth and place aside to cool. Meanwhile the bones and skin of the fish should be stewed with very little water, and a bead of shallot; then strained through a cloth, and returned to the stewpan. Add 2 sheets of soaked gelatine, 2 tablespoonfuls of thick cream, and half a gill of aspic jelly. Stir the sauce briskly on the ice until on the point of settling, and use it immediately to coat the creams. Garnish each one with picked tarragon leaves and lobster coral, and arrange them on a border of aspic jelly. Garnish the base with a border of sliced cucumber and chopped aspic, and fill the centre with picked lettuce mixed with mayonaise sauce. Put a little thick mayonaise on the top, and crown it with picked chervil and lobster coral.

"Mock Chicken Pie" is a good luncheon dish:—

Cut scallops of lamb from the thick end of the loin. Season with salt, pepper, a very little pounded mace, chopped parsley, thyme, and shallot. Arrange a layer in a pie-dish, which must be lined with slices of bacon, then put a layer of crumbled vermicelli and hard-boiled yolks of eggs. Repeat the layers of lamb, vermicelli, and egg until all the ingredients are used, cover with good puff pastry, and bake two hours and a-half in a moderate oven. Fill the pie with good gravy and serve either hot or cold.

This chicken pie is a recent invention, and is lovely for any cold collation :—

Remove the fillets from a couple of chickens, split, and place them aside. Scrape the remainder of the meat free from skin and sinew, and pound it, with the breast of an old hen, thoroughly in the mortar; add 6 oz. of scraped fat bacon and 2 oz. of butter, pound until it is thoroughly amalgamated, then add the yolks of 4 eggs, season freely with salt, pepper, and a pinch of cayenne pepper; work the ingredients thoroughly together until it is a compact mass. Now line a game-pie dish with slices of bacon, put a layer of forcemeat in the bottom, garnish it with slices of cooked red tongue, hard-boiled eggs, and truffle, sprinkle with chopped parsley, a suspicion of shalot, and a pinch of chopped thyme; cover with a layer of the fillets of chicken, then put a layer of forcemeat, which garnish in the same way as before; cover with the remainder of the fillets and forcemeat, on the top of which put slices of bacon. Cover the pie with pastry, composed of flour and water, and bake nearly 3 hours in a moderate oven. Meanwhile, the bones of the birds should be stewed in weak stock, with a carrot, an onion, 6 peppercorns, a blade of mace, 2 cloves, and a bouquet of herbs. After it has boiled some hours, strain and reduce it by boiling to about a gill and a half. When the pie is done remove the pastry, fill with gravy, skim off the fat, which will rise to the top, put a small plate and a 2 lb. weight on the top, and put it in the larder until next day. Then scrape off the fat, and pour on 2 oz. of clarified butter, place it on the ice to cool, then decorate it tastefully with pieces of aspic jelly and sprigs of chervil.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
For Mutual Life Assurance.
Established 1835.
Paid in Claims ... £9,500,000
Accumulated Fund ... £4,800,000
Profits already divided £4,600,000

Profits.—At the last (1892) Division, £651,000 Cash Profit was apportioned amongst the members, being more than 37 per cent. of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years. There were then nearly 800 Policies, in respect of which not only were the premiums entirely extinguished, but also annuities were granted, or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus additions.

The Next Division will be made as at November 20th, 1897, and all existing policies will participate according to the time they shall then have been in force.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost, with Provision for Old Age.

Among its attractive Contents are included :—

THE FAN (facsimile reproductions of water-colour drawings).

HARDWICK HALL. By the special permission of the DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, sumptuous Illustrations of the Art Treasures which embellish this historic treasure house are added to the description.

THE CAMBRIDGE A.D.C. Is an article upon the famous club which forms one of the centres of social life in Cambridge. Its value is enhanced by the illustrations given of well-known living personages, politicians, dignitaries of the church, all former members of the club, in their impersonations of women's parts at the club's entertainments.

THE KINGDOM OF KERRY. (Richly Illustrated.)

THE COUNTRY AND TOWNS OF THE DART is a charming illustrated record by the DUCHESS OF SOMERSET of one of the most beautiful English rivers.

AN UNPUBLISHED POEM BY WORDSWORTH. A literary curiosity consisting of an unpublished verse by WORDSWORTH. It is well authenticated, and is reproduced in facsimile.

FORTUNE-TELLING BY THE STARS is a popular article dealing with the evolution of one of the so-called magic arts. The horoscopes of the Queen and of the Prince of Wales are carefully detailed. For those interested, instructions and diagrams are given for casting their own horoscopes, without the aid of a professional medium.

Hunyadi János

BEST AND SAFEST NATURAL APERIENT.

25 Years Success in the United Kingdom.

Recommended and Prescribed by Medical Men Everywhere.

"HUNYADI JÁNOS has established itself in favour with leading physicians and therapeutists of every country, whose testimonies bear witness to its action as a speedy, sure, and gentle Aperient for ordinary use; it is remarkably and exceptionally uniform in its composition, and free from defects incidental to many other Hungarian Bitter Waters." —British Medical Journal, Aug 30th, 1884.

PROFESSOR VIRCHOW, the celebrated Berlin Physician, says that "HUNYADI JÁNOS" has always given him prompt and satisfactory results, and he considers it to be "one of the most valuable of the Curative Agents at our disposal."

DISTILLED FROM FRESHLY GATHERED RHINE VIOLETS.

A SCENT OF RARE FRAGRANCE.

A VERY ECHO OF NATURE.

CAUTION.

Owing to the phenomenal success of this popular Scent, some perfumers are offering essences of their own manufacture under the name of "RHINE VIOLETS." The public must not be deceived, but insist upon "MULHENS" brand, which is distilled from the flower itself. Don't accept any bottle not bearing Ferd. Mülhens' name. This alone ensures genuineness. Ferd. Mülhens, of Cologne, is the originator of this exquisite perfume, and was the first to introduce it into England.

The Fashionable Press of London are unanimous in praise of it.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the important freehold property known as the Hans Place Hotel, containing about 20,000 square feet, and an adjoining piece of freehold land containing about 10,000 square feet, and erecting as an annexe to the Hotel, a magnificent Ball Room, Banqueting Hall, and numerous additional suites of apartments.

The hotel is situate in Hans-crescent, Belgravia, at the Knightsbridge end of Sloane-street, in one of the most fashionable parts of London, within three minutes' walk of the Albert Gate entrance to Hyde Park. The hotel, which is completely detached, comprises basement, ground floor, and five floors above, and contains about 159 rooms in all, and when the annexe is completed there will be about 242 in all.

The entrance hall, staircase, and public rooms are all of exceptional beauty, as will be seen by the illustrations accompanying the prospectus, reproduced from photographs, and include drawing-room, grand dining-room, banqueting saloon, billiard, reading, and smoking rooms, and a palmery, or Winter garden, formed by an ornamental structure in iron and glass, with a high domed roof, splendidly proportioned, and having a floor space of about 2,500 superficial feet. This Winter garden is a very attractive feature, and quite unique in a London hotel.

The first and upper floors have many suites of rooms, admirably planned on the principle of flats, all separately enclosed, each suite having its own bath-room and lavatory, and as many or as few sitting-rooms and bedrooms as may be required, with private hall and entrance from the corridor, thus ensuring complete privacy.

The hotel has been erected by Messrs. Stephens, Bastow, & Co., of Bristol, from designs by Messrs. Read & Macdonald, of 4A, Cork-street, W.

A full hotel licence has already been obtained, and there is also a fully-licensed Saloon Bar (with separate entrance), a source of profit which most London hotels are unable to secure.

It is considered that the architects have most successfully dealt with the very important considerations of light and ventilation, the spaciousness and light of the corridors being particularly striking.

Great attention has been given to that which is now properly regarded as one of the most important essentials of a modern building, viz., the drainage and sanitary arrangements. These have been executed under the superintendence of the London Sanitary Protection Association, who are to periodically examine and test the drainage system, so that it shall be maintained in perfect order. All the corridors and staircase are heated by hot water, ensuring perfect comfort during the coldest weather.

The whole of the plumbing work, and hot and cold water and heating service, have been executed by Messrs. Wenham & Waters of Croydon, in the most satisfactory manner.

The electric lighting has been carried out by Messrs. Strode & Company, and Messrs. Verity & Company, according to plans and specifications prepared by the Consulting Engineers, Messrs. Kincaid, Waller & Manville, who have adopted an improved system of carrying the wires in specially prepared iron tubes, by means of which accidental fire is absolutely prevented; and Messrs. Merryweather & Company have supplied and fitted hydrants and fire-extinguishing apparatus throughout the building, so that the utmost has been done in this direction for safety.

The decorations, furniture, and appointments by Messrs. S. J. Waring & Sons, of Liverpool and London, are of great artistic merit and far superior to those usually found in hotels even of a luxurious class.

The hotel was opened on the 20th day of May, 1896, and there have been so many expressions of satisfaction from the visitors as to indicate that the hotel has acquired an excellent reputation.

The annexe, which it is intended to erect on the freehold land adjoining the hotel, will have an entirely separate entrance from Basil-street, so that balls and banquets can be held there without in any way disturbing the privacy and quiet of the main portion of the hotel. The plans for this annexe have already been prepared by Messrs. Read & Macdonald, the architects, who estimate that the cost and equipment of the building will not exceed the sum of £40,000.

The erection of this annexe should command a large and remunerative business in the way of balls, banquets, and receptions, as the accommodation for such purposes will be perfect at this hotel, and can be had nowhere else in Belgravia.

Messrs. George Trollope & Sons', the well-known valuers, report accompanies the Prospectus.

For contracts, see full Prospectus.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained of the Bankers and Solicitors, and at the Offices of the Company.

The SUBSCRIPTION LISTS will OPEN THIS DAY (MONDAY), the 20th day of July, 1896, and CLOSE on or before FOUR o'clock on WEDNESDAY next, the 22nd day of July, 1896, for Town and Country.

PROSPECTUS (ABRIDGED).

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring four gold mining leases, situated in the centre of Hannan's, Kalgoorlie, Western Australia, containing an area of about 59½ acres, the properties being held under the usual leases, and known as Nos. 1,170E. 1,596E, 1,013E, and 989E.

As is shown by the maps accompanying the prospectus, the Brownhill Central property is in the very heart of what is believed to be the richest gold-bearing field at present discovered in Western Australia, and is adjacent to well-known and successful gold mines.

The following particulars of the acreage of these principal surrounding mines are taken from "The Stock Exchange Year Book, 1896," and show in each case the value of their lands per acre upon the basis of the market value of the Shares on the 13th July, 1896, and the working capital provided, as compared with the price per acre and the working capital of the "Brownhill Central."

Mine.	Acreage.	Market Price per Acre.	Working Capital.	Market Price per Share.
Hannan's Reward	39 acres	£5,833	£22,000	3¼
Hannan's Brownhill	†21 ,,	19,643	20,000	5¼
Hainault	20 ,,	13,125	20,000	3¾
Kalgurli	18 ,,	11,805	10,000	2½
Ivanhoe	24 ,,	16,666	20,000	8
Great Boulder	‡79 ,,	16,337	30,000	7⅜
Brownhill Central	59½ ,,	3,400	50,000

† "The Stock Exchange Year Book" gives the acreage of "Hannan's Brownhill" as twelve acres, but it is actually 21 acres; presumably, nine acres have been added since "The Stock Exchange Year Book" was published.

‡ The Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mine, Limited, have lately sold 24 acres of their property, thus reducing the acreage given in "The Stock Exchange Year Book," namely, 103 acres, to 79 acres.

The leases comprised in this property were taken up for the late Mr. G. McLeod Matheson, the well-known mining engineer, of Sydney and Kalgoorlie, who contemplated working the property himself, but, owing to his death, it is now offered to the public.

Three shafts have been sunk on the property to a depth of 112 ft., 45 ft., and 60 ft. respectively; cross-cuts have been put in from the two first-mentioned shafts through large gold-bearing lodes.

Extract from the cabled report, dated June 1st, 1896, since confirmed by letter, of Mr. George Gray, the well-known mining engineer of the Hannan's Proprietary Development Company, Limited:—

"Systematic developments should prove the property to be a valuable one, as the experience of the district shown in mines such as the Boulder, Lake View, Crœsus, Brownhill, the mines of the Hannan's Proprietary Development Company, Limited, Hannan's Reward, and the Associated Gold Mines is that at greater depth, where the country is more settled, the lodes have been found to carry rich values. I, therefore, recommend this property, believing that when it has been opened up at a greater depth it will be likely to justify the sanguine anticipations I have formed after a consideration of the position, the superficial features, and of the developments already completed."

Extract from the cabled report dated June 17th, 1896, of Captain William Oats, Manager of Hannan's Oroya and Brookman's Boulder Gold Mining Companies, Limited:—

"Brownhill Central admirably situated in the centre of main ore channel, Hannan's district 70 chains along known strike lodes. Have made a careful examination of the ground.

"I have seen Gray's report. I can fully confirm his statements and figures. The position (and) general indications, (and) the work already completed, lead me to expect valuable discoveries at a greater depth."

The following is a report from the manager in charge of the mine, Mr. Edgar Giles, dated 19th February, 1896, in which he states:—

"I herein send you my report on the 'Brownhill Central' property, contained in Leases Nos. 989, 1,013, 1,596, and 1,170.

"A shaft has been sunk on Lease No. 989 to a depth of 100 ft., and a cross-cut has been put in at the 60 ft. level about 20 ft., showing the lode about 14 ft., but no footwall has been met with. At about 80 ft. another cross-cut has been put in showing the lode, but without a footwall. This lode was only a few inches wide on the surface when discovered. Gold was got the whole way down, going from 1 to 3 and 4 oz. per ton. The formation is of a soft, schisty slate, and similar to the 'Brownhill' in places; at about 60 ft. large blocks of stalactitic ironstone were met with, and fine gosson and quartz sand; this continues to go down, and is 2 ft. to 3 ft. wide, but at a somewhat cross angle with the country. It seems of too loose a nature at this depth to hold only very fine gold, but I am of the opinion that heavy gold will be met with at a lower level. This is the only formation of the kind, I believe, that has been found on the field, and is well worthy of following down. It was intended, before work was suspended, to put in drives at 120 ft., and test this and the other lode thoroughly.

"To the eastward of this shaft, about a chain or so, another surface vein similar to the above has been discovered, running parallel with it, and carrying gold up to 4 oz.; it has only been sunk on a few feet, but is rapidly widening as did the other. As these veins or lodes are so hidden, it may be possible that in driving from one to the other at a lower level that others may be met with.

"On Lease No. 1,013 the same lode has been carefully traced, and a shaft has been sunk on a 12 in. outcrop to a depth of 40 ft., and at that level the lode is 7 ft. wide, carrying fine gold. Further up the rise another shaft has been sunk, to strike this lode at a greater depth, and is now 117 ft., with a cross-cut at that level in 40 ft.; here the lode has just been struck, carrying gold up to 1 oz. from one small sample; but what width the lode is, and what it carries throughout and on the footwall, remains to be proved, as work was suspended at this point.

"Still further up this rise, and on the summit, the same formation exists, and similar parallel lodes, only more defined, and extending fully three chains wide. As gold was discovered in one of these, it was intended that a main shaft should be sunk, and cross-cuts put in east and west at a low level, and test the width, &c.

"There is also a splendid machinery and battery site here, and with so many lodes a large supply of water will undoubtedly be met with. This same formation continues on in the same direction, and should be easily found on 1,596 and 1,170. The strike is about N.N.W., and the underlay to the W.

"In conclusion, I consider this one of the finest properties on Hannan's line, and certainly the best obtainable for flotation. The country is easily worked, and with further development should turn out to be one of the best mines on the field."

Extract from letter received from the Manager, dated April 29th, 1896:—

"Lode in Brownhill Central at 117 ft. level is now over 30 ft. wide and not through it yet. Gold has been got the whole way, less 2 ft., and is improving. Shaft on the nine-acre lease is also improving, and I really do not know what width it is there, but I am now getting gold beyond what was supposed to be the hanging wall."

In this same letter, speaking of the 45 ft. lode formation, the Manager writes:—

"I test the stuff daily, and always get gold up to one and two ounces (per ton) in this immense formation."

The Directors have secured the services of Mr. George Gray, whose name is so well and favourably known as an eminent mining manager and expert, and especially associated with the Hannan's district, as general manager to the Company.

The only contract entered into to which the Company is a party is one dated the 16th day of July, between the Mines Investment Corporation, Limited, the Discoverers Finance Corporation, Limited, and the Universal Corporation, Limited, of the one part, and the Company of the other part, whereby the Company will acquire the properties for the sum of £150,000, payable as to £30,000 in cash, as to £65,000 in fully-paid Shares, and as to the balance in cash or Shares, or cash and Shares, as the Directors may determine. Under this contract the three issuing Corporations, who are the Vendors to the Company, and who are reselling to them at a profit, undertake to pay all the expenses of issuing this Prospectus, and guarantee the subscription of 50,000 Shares to provide working capital.

There are also two agreements, dated the 12th day of June, 1896, and the 15th day of July, 1896, respectively, between Alexander Matheson, of the one part, and Herbert Skyring Stoneham, of the other part; and between Herbert Skyring Stoneham, of the one part, and the Mines Investment Corporation, Limited, the Discoverers Finance Corporation, Limited, and the Universal Corporation, Limited, of the other part. The above contract of 16th July, 1896, together with the original reports and cablegrams mentioned in this Prospectus, and the Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be inspected up to the date of Allotment by intending subscribers at the office of the Solicitors of the Company. Mr. Alexander Matheson, one of the Directors, is interested in the purchase price. Mr. Josceline Bagot, Mr. John McDonald, and Mr. W. Maclaren Walker are also Directors of and Shareholders in the issuing Corporations.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and from the Bankers, Solicitors, Brokers, and Auditors.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and further developing the well-known gold, silver, and copper mining property at Mount Reid, in the Dundas district of North-West Tasmania. This property comprises an area of 80 acres or thereabouts, and is situate in a rich mineral locality.

At the base of the Mountain from which the property takes its name, in the Ring River Valley, alluvial gold deposits have been worked for some time past, and in the opinion of several mining engineers the source of these deposits is to be found on the slopes of Mount Reid itself. Within comparatively short distances are situated the Mount Lyell Mine, the Mount Bischoff Mine, the North Dundas Tin Fields, and the Zeehan Silver Fields, all of which properties are being successfully worked.

Mr. Montgomerie, the Government Geological Surveyor, in his official report dated 6th April, 1893, says:—

"At Mount Reid, in what appears to be the same belt of country in which the Mount Lyell Mine is situated, a somewhat similar pyrites deposit has been found, and in this case the ore seems very plainly interlaminated with the country rock. There are reported to be several deposits of pyrites in and near the line of country connecting Mount Lyell with Mount Reid, which goes far to bear out the theory of their sedimentary origin."

And Mr. Montgomerie further states in his report on the Mount Reid Mine (quoted in Mr. Luke Williams' report of the 5th February, 1894) of the 20th May, 1893:—

"Heavy spar (baryta) is one of the most notable minerals in the Mount Lyell Mine, and its occurrecne here strengthens a belief which I entertain that the Mount Reid lodes are of a similar origin to the large deposit of pyrites at Mount Lyell."

Mr. James McMurray, M.E., in his report dated 8th April, 1896, says that "there is no shadow of doubt but that these two mines are on one and the same run of country;" and Mr. A. M. Reid, in his report of the 28th March, 1895, states:—

"It is now admitted by all competent mining authorities on the West Coast, including Dr. Peters, M.E., that an almost unbroken belt of mineral-bearing country extends from Mount Lyell to Mount Bischoff, and a straight line drawn between these two points will show that Mount Reid, and further on, Mount Peters, where large deposits of rich ores have been recently discovered, come directly within its scope."

Considerable prospecting work has already been carried out on the property, and, describing this, Mr. McMurray reports as follows:—

"In the northern part of the mine the deposit consists of two branches, which converge southwards, and junction near the centre of the claim, continuing thereafter to the southern boundary of the property as one undivided mass. The deposit strikes N.N.W. through the centre of the property, so that while a length of 600 yards are available along the outcrop, abundant room is left on either side to follow the mass in depth within the boundaries of the mine, whether it should be found to dip towards the east or west. The work expended on the property has proved the course of the lode matter for upwards of 1,000 lineal feet in length, and over 100 in width. The outcrop of the deposit consists of oxide of iron and quartz, from which gold can be freely washed, but at a shallow depth this oxidised material gives place to iron pyrites, copper pyrites, and silver lead carrying gold and silver. Some assays of the ore have yielded from a trace of gold to the wonderful amount of 671 ounces to the ton, and in silver from a few ounces to 419 ounces to the ton, and at the depth of 50 feet, copper has assayed from a trace up to 40 per cent."

Working assays of 14 different samples of ore taken from this property gave an average, according to Mr. McMurray, of 1 ounce 5 dwts. of gold, and 21 ounces of silver per ton of ore.

As regards means of communication and transport, Mount Reid is situated about 30 miles from Strahan, the seaport of Western Tasmania, and the greater part of that distance is already traversed by a railway, and the Board have reason to believe that the construction of a tramway to the immediate neighbourhood of Mount Reid is under contemplation,

In respect of both water and timber, supplies are immediately available for the company's requirements.

Steps are being taken to secure a thoroughly capable and experienced engineer as General Manager of the Company's property, and in the meantime Mr. James McMurray, who possesses special experience in the methods of working in Tasmania, is acting as mine manager.

The above is published for public information only, no Shares are offered for Subscription.

The List will open on Monday, July 20th, and close on or before Wednesday, July 22nd, for Town and Country.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring, working, developing or otherwise dealing with the British Patent Rights, including all improvements thereon, for Great Britain and Ireland for the system of working Tramways, light Railways, &c., by means of Motor Cars worked by gas engines, invented by the late Carl Lührig, of Dresden, and Mr. Henry P. Holt.

Amongst the principal objects of the Company are to build and sell Gas Motor Cars in Great Britain, and to equip and work Tramway lines by contract.

The cars are similar in appearance to ordinary horse-tramcars, and are propelled by specially-constructed gas-engines. The engines and driving-gear are so arranged that no part of them is seen, and they do not encroach on the space for carrying passengers; no inconvenience arises from noise or vibration of machinery, and the car runs as smoothly as a horse-car. There is no smell from either gas or oil. As evidence of the safety with which gas traction can be worked, it may be stated that during the years 1894-5 there were at Dresden 212 accidents with horse-cars, 88 accidents with electric cars, but not a single accident with gas motor cars.

The advantage in this system (apart from the diminution in cost) is that each car carries its own power and is thus in no wise dependent upon a central station as in the case of electric and cable lines, where, if any accident occur, the whole traffic is stopped.

The danger, inconvenience, and unsightliness of overhead electric circuits are avoided.

A further consequence, which is of immense economical value in facilitating the adoption of the system, is that the whole of the fixed plant can be obtained at the moderate cost of £300 to £400 and that no special form of line is required. The cars can thus be tried on any properly laid tramway at a trifling expense, and can be adopted to the extent found convenient. The system has been thoroughly tested in Germany. Five cars were put in traffic in Dresden in 1894, and their successful working is attested by the Managing Director of the Tramway Company in the following letter:—

"Dresden, 8th February, 1896.

"To the GAS TRACTION COMPANY, Ltd., London and Dresden.

"Dear Sirs.—In reply to your enquiry we have pleasure in confirming that the five Gas Motor Cars have been worked here successfully since July, 1894. The cars are the first ones built according to your system, and are of a somewhat old design; but although they have been worked on a most difficult line with five railway lines to cross, they have done their work successfully, and are in good condition.

"These satisfactory results have induced us to build further lines for working with gas cars as soon as those with your latest improvements are ready.

"For the Deutsche Strassenbahn-Gesellschaft, (Signed) "STOESSNER,
"Director."

In Dessau a company was formed, and a line laid down and fully equipped, on this Company's system. It was opened for traffic in November, 1894, with nine cars. It worked so satisfactorily that in the early part of 1895 the public agitated for the construction of further lines to connect other parts of the Town. The company decided to do so, and the requisite capital was subscribed in the Town of Dessau alone. The Managing Director's report of this company and statement of accounts for the year ending 31st December, 1895, are published, and show a satisfactory profit on the first year's working. The result of the year's running up to December, 1895, as shown by the published accounts, proves conclusively the cheapness of the system as against every other mode of traction, the cost per mile for gas, including compression, being less than one penny with gas at 2s. 11d. per 1,000 cubic feet.

In Dresden, according to the accounts of the tramway company, the cost of the three modes of traction which are worked by them is given for the year 1895 as follows:—

Single Horse Cars	5¾d. per mile.
Electrical Cars with overhead wires ...	4¼d. ,,
Gas Cars	3¼d. ,,

It will thus be seen that the cost of traction by gas is much less than by any other known mode of traction.

It must be borne in mind that this result is obtained without the large initial expenditure on fixed plant required in all other systems of mechanical traction, since a small compressing station is all that is necessary.

A contract has been entered into with the Blackpool, St. Anne's, and Lytham Tramway Company for the supply of cars and for working their system by gas traction, the benefit of which will be transferred to this Company.

From the last Board of Trade Returns the total mileage run by tramcars in the United Kingdom was over 75,000,000 miles; of these about 66,000,000 miles were worked by horse-traction. Supposing that gas-cars were used for one-eighth of the last-named mileage, say 8,000,000 miles per annum, this would, at 2d. per mile saving, give an increased profit of over £68,000 per annum.

Professor A. B. W. Kennedy, LL.D., F.R.S., in exhaustive reports upon the Company's system of traction states:—

"The comparatively small Capital expenditure, as well as the ease with which the system can be used on existing lines if they are reasonably well built, the fact that gas is everywhere available, and that in many cases the Gas belongs to the Corporation to whom the Tram Lines may also ultimately belong, are all points very much in its favour. Until now it has no doubt been a question whether a scheme which looked so promising on paper, and in experiments, could stand the rough usage of actual work. So far as I can judge, the experiments in Dessau answer this question definitely and satisfactorily."

"I have to-day (July 17th, 1896) inspected the gas-cars at Blackpool, and am pleased to find their running very satisfactory, and even a distinct advance on the results at Dresden and Dessau."

In addition to the above Mr. Corbett Woodall, M.I.C.E., has also favourably reported upon the system and working.

Mr. John Imray, of Messrs. Abel & Imray, Patent Agents, having examined the specifications of the Company's Patents, says:—

"From what I have seen of the working of the Patented Cars, and from what I know as to the proposed improvements, I am satisfied that there is a great future for this undertaking, and I consider that the inventions embodied in it will be well secured."

The following letters have been addressed to the Solicitors by Mr. J. Fletcher Moulton, Q.C., and Mr. R. W. Wallace, Q.C.

"11, King's Bench-walk, Temple,
July 15th, 1896.

"Dear Sirs,—It is impossible for me to advise upon the validity of the English Patents owned by the Gas Traction Company, Limited, because I am a considerable shareholder in that Company and take a large interest in its proceedings. Indeed, the original purchase of the Patents was made under my advice, and the numerous Patents that have been taken out by or on behalf of the Company have been drawn up or settled by me, so that substantially I should be advising upon what I have myself done.

The following Contract has been entered into:—

Contract between the Gas Traction Company, Limited (the Vendor Company), and this Company for the sale and purchase of the Patents and Patent rights for Great Britain and Ireland for Traction by Motor Cars and the benefit of the Agreement with the Blackpool, &c., Company above referred to.

The purchase price has been fixed by the Vendor Company at £105,000, payable as to £55,000 in cash and as to £50,000 in fully-paid shares. The Vendor Company pays all the expenses of the formation of the Company and preliminary expenses of every kind up to the first general allotment.

A print of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, the Sale and Purchase Agreement, and the Agreement with the Blackpool, &c., Company, the originals of the Reports of Professor Kennedy, Mr. Corbett Woodall, of Messrs. Abel and Imray, and of the Managing Director of the Dresden Tramway Company, and the originals of the letters from Messrs. Moulton & Wallace, and Herr Stoessner can be seen at the Offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

It is intended to apply for an official quotation and settlement of the present issue on the London Stock Exchange.

Applications for shares should be made on the accompanying form, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application. If the number of shares allotted be less than that applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the payments on allotment, so far as necessary, and any balance will be returned. Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full. Failure to pay any instalment will render all payments previously made liable to forfeiture.

Prospectuses and Application Forms may be obtained from the Bankers and Brokers, and at the Company's office.

July 18th, 1896.

This form to be filled up and sent entire, with a cheque for the amount payable on application, to Lloyd's Bank, Limited, 222, Strand, W.C., or any other branch, or to the Bank of Ireland, Dublin, and branches.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to purchase and carry on the well-known and old-established Sugar Refining and Saccharine business hitherto carried on under the name of Bostock & Co., Garston and Liverpool.

The Company will acquire the valuable freehold Saccharine works, land, dock, railway siding and property at Garston, together with all the fixed and loose plant, rolling stock, casks and drums, railway and other waggons, and stock of sugar, saccharine, glucose, caramel, charcoal, stoves, &c., and the entire goodwill of the business.

The Refinery is exceptionally well situated for carrying on its business and handling its products on the most economic lines. On the one side there is a river frontage of 457 feet on the Mersey, and a dock sufficiently large to accommodate a vessel of 2,000 tons, while on the other side a railway siding from the London and North Western Railway runs directly into the works, thereby obviating the necessity of cartage. The plant and machinery are in perfect order, and capable of much larger production than the present out-turn. The products of the Company are of excellent quality, and give every satisfaction to the customers, the most important of whom are brewers and brewery companies.

The business was carried on up to February 20th, 1895, by the late Mr. William Bostock. After his death, his estate was ordered to be administered by the Court of Chancery of the County Palatine, and on February 28th of that year, Mr. W. H. Cochran of Liverpool, Chartered Accountant, became Receiver and Manager under the Court, for the management of the business and property.

Under this Receivership, satisfactory profits continued to be earned, as will be seen from the certificate of Mr. W. H. Cochran.

The business was purchased from the Court by the Vendor as from March 6th, 1896, since which date certain economies and improvements have been effected.

Mr. William Thomson, of No. 7, Cook-street, Liverpool, the well-known Valuer, has valued the properties to be acquired by the Company, and the following is a copy of his certificate.

7, Cook-street, Liverpool, June 30th, 1896.

Dear Sir,—I have inspected the Garston Sugar and Saccharine Works, formerly called the South Garston Dock, situate at Garston, near Liverpool.

The Property is freehold, and comprises about 28,372 square yards, adjoining Messrs. Bibbys' Copper Works, and having a frontage on the River Mersey of about 457 feet. It is bounded on the north by the property of the London and North-Western Railway Company, and on the south side by land belonging to Messrs. Bibby.

The buildings upon the land consist of offices, warehouses, sugar house, kiln house, charcoal house, engine beds, boiler houses, all modern and substantially built and specially adapted for the purposes of the sugar and saccharine business.

There is also a dock, and lines of railway are laid with turn-tables, giving access from the main line to the buildings, dock and river.

On the river frontage there is a sea wall, and the remainder of the land is enclosed by walls.

There is a well upon the property giving a good supply of fresh water, which is very favourable for these works.

The dock is outside the jurisdiction of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, and exempt from all dues.

I am of opinion that the value of this property as a going concern, inclusive of fixed plant and machinery, railway lines and turn-tables, is the sum of sixty-three thousand six hundred and eighty-two pounds (say, £63,682).

I am of opinion that the value of the moveable plant, including railway waggons, barrels, drums, &c., is the sum of one thousand two hundred and thirty-three pounds (say, £1,233).

The total amount of my valuation is the sum of sixty-four thousand nine hundred and fifteen pounds (say, £64,915).

Yours truly,
WM. THOMSON,
Valuer and Property Auctioneer.

Wm. Clarkson, Esq.

In addition to the assets, valued by Mr. Wm. Thomson at £64,915, the stock-in-trade stood in the books on March 6th at £12,682 4s. 9d. As this issue provides for £25,000 working capital, there will be ample margin, after payment for the stock-in-trade, for the future conduct of the business.

The Vendor to the Company has fixed the purchase price of the property being acquired at £65,000 in cash and £60,000 in fully paid ordinary shares, the balance of the Company's capital, viz: £25,000, being set aside for working capital.

Arrangements have been made for enlarging the scope of the Company's operations, and with the improvements already made, it is believed that the profits can be materially increased, for the output of the works can be nearly doubled with very little additional machinery.

The Directors are satisfied that the business is an increasing one, and that last year's profits are in excess of those of previous years.

The following is a copy of the Certificate of Mr. W. H. Cochran, alluded to above.

5, Cook-street, Liverpool, W.,
June 1st, 1896.

To WILLIAM CLARKSON, Esq., Liverpool.

Sir,—I have carefully examined the accounts appertaining to the sugar business of Messrs. Bostock & Co., of Garston and Liverpool, for the year ended the 6th March, 1896, during which period the business was managed by me under the direction of the Court of Chancery of the County Palatine of Lancaster, and certify that the profit (exclusive of any charge for my services) was the sum of £10,245. 10s. 8d.

It appears from the books kept by the late Mr. Bostock that a considerable sum was expended in boilers, plant, machinery, &c., during the previous year; and during the above-mentioned period of my management, whilst no deduction is made from the profits for depreciation, a sum of £1,650 was expended by me and charged against profits, for repairs and renewals of plant, buildings, and machinery, rendering any further provision for depreciation, in my opinion, unnecessary.

Yours faithfully,
W. H. COCHRAN, F.C.A.

It will be seen that the profits as certified amount to £10,245, and if this sum is taken as a basis, after payment of—

5 per cent. interest on £90,000 Preference Shares..	£4,500
There will be a surplus of	£5,745

available for management, reserve, and dividend on the Ordinary Shares.

It will be observed that the certified profits are more than double the amount required to pay the Preference dividend.

No Debentures or Debenture Stock or further shares can be issued without the consent of an Extraordinary Resolution passed at a meeting representing at least two-thirds in value of the Preference Shareholders.

Application will be made for a quotation for the Preference Shares on the London, Manchester, and Liverpool Stock Exchanges.

The following contracts have been entered into, viz.:—(1) Dated July 15th, 1896, made between Mr. William Clarkson and the Company; (2) Dated July 15th, 1896, between Mr. William Clarkson and the Omnium Contract Corporation, Limited, whereby the Omnium Contract Corporation, Limited, undertakes to pay all expenses attending the incorporation and registration of the Company, and also all brokerage, commissions, printing, advertising, and all other expenses attending the formation of the Company up to and including allotment. There are also divers contracts or arrangements by the Omnium Contract Corporation, Limited, and Mr. William Clarkson, with other persons, entered into in relation to the formation of the Company, and the guaranteeing of the Preference Capital, to none of which the Company is a party, and there are also contracts connected with the business as a going concern. All applicants for the Preference Shares will be deemed to have waived any right to further particulars of contracts, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise, and to have agreed with the Company, as Trustee for the Directors, the said Mr. William Clarkson, and all persons authorising or taking part in the issue of this Prospectus, not to make any claim upon them or any of them under the said Section, or upon any other ground except wilful mis-statement, and allotments will only be made on this condition.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, the originals of the two contracts referred to above, and the report and valuation of Mr. Wm. Thomson, and the certificate of Mr. W. H. Cochran, can be inspected at the offices of the Solicitors for the Company by applicants for Preference Shares.

Applications for Preference Shares should be made on the forms accompanying the prospectus and forwarded to the Bankers, accompanied by a remittance for the amount of the deposit. Cheques should be made payable to the order of Parr's Bank Limited.

If the whole amount applied for by any applicant be not allotted, the surplus amount paid on deposit will be appropriated in payment of the sum, or part thereof, due on allotment. Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and at the offices of the Company.

The Subscription List will close on Wednesday, July 22, for London, and Thursday, July 23, for the Country.

The Interest on the £50,000 5½ per cent. Preference Shares amounts to	2,750
	£7,250

Thus it will be seen that the profits of the year ending September, 1895, were sufficient to pay the Debenture Stock and Preference Interest twice over.

Messrs. Lovibond & Sons, who have fixed the purchase price and sell direct to the Company, have entered into a contract to transfer all the above assets, together with the goodwill, free of all liabilities for £190,000, payable as to £90 000 in First Mortgage Debenture Stock and £100,000 in Preference and Ordinary Shares, the Company undertaking to offer for Subscription at a premium the whole of the Debenture Stock and £40,000 of the Preference Shares.

The Vendors agree to pay all expenses of the formation of the Company up to allotment, including all stamps incident to the registration of and transfer to the Company, and also the expenses and subscriptions of this issue, which is made on their behalf.

The following Contracts have been entered into:—

Contract dated the 3rd day of July, 1896, between Joseph Williams Lovibond and Edward Lovibond of the one part and Frederick Walter Hull, for and on behalf of the Company, of the other part, being the contract for sale from the Vendors to the Company.

Contract dated the 7th day of July, 1896, between the said Joseph Williams Lovibond and Edward Lovibond of the one part and the City of London Contract Corporation, Limited, of the other part, being a contract for the payment of certain expenses undertaken by the Vendors and a guarantee of subscription for the present issue of First Mortgage Debenture Stock and Preference Shares.

In relation to this Contract the said Corporation has entered into various arrangements which may constitute contracts within the meaning of the 38th Section of the Companies Act, 1867. There are also various Trade Contracts. Applicants must be deemed to waive the insertion of dates and names of the parties to any such arrangements or contracts, and in order to prevent any question must accept the foregoing as a sufficient compliance with Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

Copy of the Report of Messrs. Rattray Brothers & Cairney is annexed to the Prospectus. The original Report, the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, the above-named Contracts, &c., and the draft Trust Deed securing the First Mortgage Debenture Stock, can be seen at the Offices of the Company.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or at the Bankers, Brokers, and Solicitors, or at the Breweries, Greenwich and Salisbury.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 905.

I am unexpectedly prevented this week from making the promised statement as to this Competition. It will appear without fail in the next number of TRUTH.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 909.

The Prize in this Competition has been awarded to CARFAX for the following answer:—

"Edinburgh is the prettiest, Dublin the wittiest, but London is the one that I love best."

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 913.

In the opinions of many the age of the horse is soon coming to an end. This long prized and trusted quadruped is fated, it is said, to be the next victim crushed beneath the Juggernaut of machinery. The particular car in which the Juggernaut, which is to crush the horse, is to be borne, is, of course, the auto-car! Who can say in how many ways and to what an extent the mechanical motor will supersede the horse? Perhaps the turf will ere long be affected by the change; possibly even the hunting-field itself may be invaded. It will, at any rate, for the purposes of our competition, be interesting to anticipate the presence of the auto-car at the meet, and to imagine what may happen when the sportsman rides to hounds on a petroleum or electricity-driven machine. The usual prize of two guineas is, therefore, offered this week for

THE BEST HUNTING SONG, OF NOT MORE THAN THIRTY-TWO LINES, APPROPRIATE TO THE NEW STATE OF THINGS FORESHADOWED ABOVE.

The songs may be parodies of well-known hunting songs or entirely original compositions. They may be in any metre, and all of them must reach me by the morning of Monday, August 3, at the latest.

SHORT SIGHT.—This form of defective vision is, no doubt, alarmingly increasing, but many kinds of defective vision are constantly mistaken for short sight merely because clearer vision is obtained by bringing an object closer to the eyes. If such are treated with ordinary short-sighted spectacles the mischief is greatly aggravated, and serious and permanent injury is done to the sight.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to arrive at Balmoral, according to the latest arrangements, on Friday, August 28th, and her Majesty will stay in Scotland for eleven weeks, returning to Windsor Castle on Saturday, November 14.

Her Majesty is to hold a Council at Osborne on Saturday. It was necessary to have a Council this week, but why, in the name of common sense, is Saturday selected for the function? Every one knows that the Saturday before the August Bank holiday is one of the heaviest days of the year for passenger traffic, and nothing can be more troublesome for the railway authorities than to have to provide special trains between London and Portsmouth for the individuals attending the Council.

There was a good deal of change connected with the Court Wedding arrangements last week. In the first instance the Queen was inclined to think that the marriage ought to be put off owing to the Court mourning; and when she forewent this delay, she insisted that everything should be done as quietly and with as little state as possible. The bridesmaids were at first not to be allowed to appear in the carriages, and, only after a lengthy discussion and many counter-orders, were they permitted to follow the happy pair after the ceremony had been performed. The result of all this was that the procession was deemed a failure by the sightseers. The outbursts of cheering that were chronicled by the Press were for the most part efforts of journalistic imagination.

The Lord Steward's arrangements, however, were excellent, and the guests' luncheon in the ball-room was very much better served than on the occasion of the Duke and Duchess of York's wedding. Lord Pembroke called the toasts with much effect, standing by the buffet at the end of the room. The Royal luncheon in the State dining-room was served on a number of round tables, which were beautifully decorated. There were four toasts, three of which were proposed by the Prince of Wales, and the other by the Crown Prince of Denmark.

It has always been the rule to invite the Ambassadors to such functions as the Royal Wedding, but on the present occasion only those who represent "Family Sovereigns" (the German Emperor and the Czar) received cards for the chapel, and this innovation has caused considerable comment.

Nothing astonishes me more in connection with such functions as that of last week than the struggling and fighting of the crowd for no conceivable purpose. Let me advise any one who feels a philosophical interest in his fellow creatures to take the following course when there is next anything in the shape of a Royal Wedding going forward. Secure a room in the Hotel Albemarle high enough up to command a good view of Piccadilly and St. James-street. Enjoy the excellent lunch which you will get at that irreproachable hostelry, and then, in the spirit of calm contemplation thereby induced, settle yourself down to watch the frantic struggles of the mob massed in Albemarle-street and eastward along Piccadilly to force themselves into a position where they can see something. Hour after hour, held in check by a cordon of police, they struggle unceasingly. They are half crushed and half stifled by their own weight. They surge to and fro, like a huge sea, every individual powerless and helpless. Those who are forced or who fight their way to the front are incessantly buffeted and rammed back by the police, and trodden on or kicked by horses. They groan, perspire, and fight blindly with one another and with the police. Women shriek and faint, are dragged out, and borne away by ambulance men. Even the front row can hope to see little or nothing of the procession, for beyond the masses of police on foot and horseback are parties of mounted Guardsmen. The people behind the first row are able to see nothing whatever, except the shoulders, backs, and heads of their neighbours. Reflect from your window that every individual before you might, if he chose, be seated in his chair at home in as much comfort and ease as yourself, and you will surely say, like old Hans Sachs after the riot at Nüremberg, "Wahn, Wahn!" . . .

The Duchess of Connaught will probably go next month to France, in order that she may take a course of waters at Bourboule-les-Bains. H.R.H. derived great benefit from her last visit to that place.

The Duke and Duchess of York are to proceed from Goodwood to Cowes, and, on leaving the Isle of Wight, they will go to Sandringham for a short time before their annual trip to Scotland, when they are to visit the Queen and the Duke and Duchess of Fife. Their Royal Highnesses will return to Sandringham for the winter at the end of September, and during the first week in October they are to attend the Musical Festival at Norwich.

Princess Louise is next week to be the guest of Lord Crewe, at Crewe Hall, Cheshire, and on Thursday H.R.H. will open a bazaar, which is to be held in the park, in aid of the Crewe Memorial Hospital. Crewe Hall is one of the finest Jacobean houses in England, and it has beautiful grounds, but the surrounding country is very ugly indeed.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden will probably pay a brief visit to the Queen at Osborne about the middle of next month. The Grand Duchess is the sister of the late Emperor Frederick.

The papers state that the Duke of Marlborough visited the Queen at Windsor the other day "partly on business," in order that he might present to Her Majesty the flag of tenure by which he holds the estate of Blenheim. This is nonsense. The Duke and Duchess were merely invited to dine and sleep at Windsor Castle, and their visit had no reference whatever to "business." It has never been the practice for the Dukes of Marlborough to go to Court in order to present the flag to the Sovereign.

Captain Malony has recently succeeded the late Major Burslem as Governor of the Military Knights of Windsor. A vacancy was thereby created among the Knights of the Lower Foundation. It has been the invariable practice to promote the senior Knight of the Lower Foundation under such circumstances, but on the present occasion a scandalous job has been perpetrated. The senior Knight who has been passed over not only served with great distinction during the Indian Mutiny, but he has the Victoria Cross, and is also a Companion of the Bath. His eminent services in 1857 and 1858 caused his promotion by brevet to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and he was four times mentioned in despatches. It is monstrous that so thoroughly deserving a soldier should be unceremoniously superseded by a junior officer, whose services are comparatively nil.

There is also a complaint that the newly-appointed Knight of the Lower Foundation (who has filled up the vacancy caused by these promotions) is not qualified for the position, as he is said to be in receipt of retired pay amounting to about £240 a year. The statutes by which these appointments are regulated state that only those officers are eligible who have "but little or nothing whereupon to live," and are therefore brought to necessity. It is impossible to understand upon what principle an officer, with retired pay to the above amount, is regarded as having "but little or nothing" to live on, and especially when the amount of his income is compared with the resources of so many other deserving old soldiers.

Lord Cadogan has just completed his first year of office as Viceroy of Ireland. No one, for many years, has worn the cares and duties of the Irish Viceroyalty so lightly as he; in no case did so little performance ever follow such enormous promise. Well might he exclaim, "Save me from the prophets of my Party!" This time last year the welkin rang with predictions of the dawning era of social brilliancy for Ireland. Twelve months have passed and the brilliancy is yet to come. The fact is, Lord Cadogan is a courtier, and Ireland is not in favour at Court. The Royal mourning, which destroyed the Dublin Castle season, was in strong contrast to the Royal Wedding, which gave some sort of brilliancy to the London season. In the Royal rejoicing Ireland had no part whatsoever; Royal mournings are its only share of Royal favours. Lord Cadogan did not even give the country the benefit of a Viceregal wedding, though he would have been following precedent in doing so.

Lord and Lady Cadogan return to the Viceregal Lodge next month. The Horse Show begins on August 25, and will be attended each day by a Viceregal party. After the Horse Show, Lord and Lady Cadogan will pay some visits in Ireland to the west and south. They will probably stay with Lord and Lady Arran in Sligo, where Lady Arran has been so active in promoting Irish Cottage Industries and helping the work at Foxford. In the south Mr. Smith Barry will entertain their Excellencies, who will have the opportunity of seeing the southern capital of Ireland, Cork. Up to the present time Lord Cadogan has only visited the warlike north.

Miss Stewart, daughter of Lady Nairne's sister, Mrs. Stewart, of Dalguise, died last Tuesday at Edinburgh in her hundredth year. Miss Stewart had a host of interesting recollections of her famous aunt, of Sir Walter Scott, and of all the Edinburgh celebrities of his epoch. She was a most accomplished musician, and has often played to Sir Walter Scott, with whose family she was on terms of close intimacy, and she was present at the marriage of John Gibson Lockhart and Sophia Scott.

Charles Dickens the Younger was a man of considerable abilities and of most amiable character, but he entirely lacked concentration or perseverance, and no sooner had he put his hand to a plough than he withdrew it again.

In early life he had great opportunities, but he utterly failed to make use of them, and his career was a disappointment from first to last. He was always drifting hither and thither. The Baroness Burdett-Coutts (who defrayed the cost of his education), and other influential friends of his father, did their best to push him on in the City, and he would have done well indeed if interest, zealously exerted, could have made his mercantile career a success. He failed also in his literary undertakings, and for many years past his life must have been something of a struggle.

Dickens himself was both mortified and exasperated at his eldest son's various failures. In 1862 he allowed Wilkie Collins to introduce a character into "No Name" (which novel was then coming out week by week in All the Year Round), whose inglorious mercantile career was simply that of the younger Charles Dickens; and it was so vividly depicted that all the Gad's Hill circle at once recognised where the original of "Francis Clare" was to be found.

On behalf of two young ladies who recently crossed to the Continent by the Flushing and Queenborough route, a statement is made to me which calls for the prompt notice of the steamboat and railway companies controlling that route. The two young ladies in question were mere girls, about eighteen years of age. On embarking at Flushing they were told that the steward would allot them berths. On the plea that the ladies' side was full, the girls, with two others, were taken to a small cabin on the men's side. Owing to the heat and the absence of other ventilation, the door was left open when the girls lay down. Before long, one of them became aware that persons were standing in the doorway, after which the steward entered, woke her up (as he thought), and handed her a slip of paper, which he said was from a gentleman. On the paper was scribbled the words, "Can I speak to you?" The significance of this incident is obvious, and I trust it will be inquired into and proper steps taken to prevent its recurrence.

On one of the balconies of the Reform Club a dove has made its nest, and is engaged in hatching its eggs. It would seem that there is something dove-like in the nature of Liberals which puts this bird at its ease with them. The blind of the window opening on the balcony may be raised or let down, or the window itself may be opened, without the dove taking any notice. There are some who think that the dove has made its appearance at the Reform Club as did the dove of the Deluge at the ark, in order to show that the Tory waters which submerged Radicalism last autumn are falling.

No power on earth will ever persuade me that in the matter of getting on and off, the man's bicycle is as convenient as the woman's. I suppose that when first the present form of bicycle was invented, the cross bar was deemed necessary for strength, and that when women took to this mode of progression the bar was found not to be needed. But bicycle makers probably make a larger profit on masculine frames, and therefore they insist on perpetuating the absurdity, whilst buyers are such fools as to fancy that there is something unmanly in riding on what goes by the name of a woman's cycle.

I was reading the prospectus of a company that proposes amongst other things to derive a profit from the sale of cycles as middlemen. The estimate of profit on this head shows that commission allowed by manufacturers is about 15 per cent. This would be all very well if manufacturing companies did not sell direct to the public. But they do, and as a rule charge this 15 per cent. in addition to their trade profit, which is excessive. Competition between companies will probably soon bring down prices, and, considering the vast number of persons of small means who buy cycles, this day will, I trust, not be far off.

A good many people are much exercised about the perils which ladies incur by riding bicycles in London. I wonder if any of them ever turn their attention to the dangerous practice of a rider carrying a young child on the front of his machine. Whether serious accidents have occurred in consequence of this practice I have no means of telling; but the danger seems beyond dispute. Boys in particular seem to have a fondness for carrying their younger friends or relatives in this way. It seems to be a matter in which the police might well be empowered to interfere.

The cruelty inflicted on omnibus horses by the incessant stoppages of the vehicles has been under discussion again in the Press; and a lady has been moved thereby to express to me her willingness to pay for advertisements in all 'buses, beseeching people not to stop the vehicles on steep gradients—or anywhere else where it can be helped. My advice to this lady is to save her money. The public in this matter are not intentionally cruel, but the vast majority are actuated before all other things by a desire to get as much as possible for their money; and this majority will always insist on their right to get out exactly at the point that suits them, as long as they possess that right, regardless of horses or any other consideration.

The only way in which my tender-hearted lady friend can hope to do any good is by bringing any pressure she can upon the Home Secretary or the Chief Commissioner of Police, to get the stoppage of omnibuses regulated by superior authority. I long ago obtained counsel's opinion to the effect that the Chief Commissioner has power under the existing Acts to appoint fixed stopping places for all omnibuses, and to forbid them to take up or set down passengers elsewhere. Were he to exercise this power, it would be a good thing, not only for the omnibus horses, but for the whole street traffic of London. And I believe, on the whole, it would be an advantage to omnibus passengers, for the vehicles would get along much faster under this arrangement, and the annoyance of passengers incessantly getting in and out during the journey would be removed.

The Agricultural Show at York was the best ever got together by the Yorkshire Society. A finer muster of horses has seldom been seen, and there was a splendid collection of Shorthorns and Aberdeen Angus cattle. Indeed, all classes of stock were well represented.

A Scotch correspondent writes:—

"The "reports from the moors" which the papers have been publishing are as usual most roseate in their statements. So far from 1896 being likely to prove the record grouse year as has been announced, it is probable that the average bags will be little, if any, better than those of the last two or three seasons. Young birds are remarkably scarce in many districts, and there has been a great deal of disease, particularly in Perthshire.

Mr. M. H. Spielman points out to me that in my notice of his Contemporary Review article I did not do full justice to one of the allegations against South Kensington incompetence. Not only is it true that "200 volumes of the Builder, Gardener, Architect, and other trade journals were bound up at the public expense in half-morocco, with gilt edges, all the advertisements being carefully preserved; but the fact is that the advertisements were taken out only to be bound up in separate volumes, and these volumes alone amounted to nearly two hundred. A more outrageous robbery of the public has rarely been perpetrated, and now that it has been brought to light, the proper course would be to make the official responsible for it pay the bill himself.

The ingenuous editors of the Pall Mall Magazine have been dreadfully hoaxed by some wicked wag. The great feature of their new number is "an unpublished poem by Wordsworth," which is announced as "a well-authenticated literary curiosity." This precious "unpublished poem" positively consists of six lines out of one of Wordsworth's most popular sonnets, beginning "The most alluring clouds that mount the sky," which was published some sixty years ago. To any one with any literary knowledge there would be a preposterous absurdity in the very idea of any work of Wordsworth's having remained unpublished for nearly half a century after his death. Where was this "poem" supposed to have been concealed all this time?

The Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall is to be succeeded by a military exhibition of a different character. From August 1 to August 10 the Salvation Army is to hold the Hall with Gujeratis, Bheels, Zulus, Kaffirs, Scandinavians, Finns, Germans, Dutch, French, Swiss, and Italians as performers, and villages, kraals, slums, laundries, and factories, &c., as exhibits.

St. Margaret's, Westminster, is my parish church, and I shall frequent it henceforth less than heretofore, because the sight of two banners affixed in a prominent place will be so offensive to me that they will disturb my devotions. That the inhabitants of a country should be ready to defend it against an invading army is no special proof of patriotism; indeed, were they not ready to do so, this would be evidence of all absence of patriotism. In 1798 certain persons in Westminster volunteered to defend England against any invasion, and they were given two banners. These worthy persons remained prepared to cover themselves with glory until 1815, when, on Napoleon being removed to St. Helena, it was felt that there remained no foeman worthy of their steel, and they were disbanded. The mind of man can conceive nothing more utterly absurd than that their two banners, innocent of battle and breeze, should be treated as trophies of valour and victory, and should flaunt the congregation of St. Margaret's with idle state until the end of time. We have now a number of Volunteers, and I make no doubt that they would do good service, if an invasion were to take place. I should be sorry to see Volunteering checked, and consequently I regret anything which taints the movement with ridicule. The affectation of the citizens commanding Volunteer Regiments to be known under a military title is foolish, but this banner business, promoted as it has been by Colonel Howard Vincent, M.P., Colonel of a modern Westminster Volunteer Regiment, and of Mr. Tomlinson, M.P., parishioner of Westminster, ought really in the interests of Volunteering to be discountenanced. If this sort of nonsense goes on, every Volunteer Colonel will expect on retiring to have his sword hung up in his parish church.

Canon Wilberforce is to be in residence at Westminster Abbey during the first fortnight of August, and he will preach on the afternoons of the 2nd and 9th. Canon Gore will be in residence from the 15th until September 1, and he is to occupy the Abbey pulpit on the afternoons of the 16th, 23rd, and 30th.

Canon Newbolt will on Friday replace Archdeacon Sinclair as the Canon-in-Residence and Sunday afternoon preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral, and he is to be on duty until September 1, when he will be succeeded by Canon Scott-Holland.

I am assured by Lieut.-Colonel Newton-Dickenson, Seneschal of Canterbury Cathedral, that the paragraph in TRUTH of the 16th inst. respecting the Catholic pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Thomas is inaccurate; and it seems clear, from what he says, that Dean Farrar was wrongly blamed in the matter, which I am glad to make known. The official version of the affair may be best given in the Seneschal's own words:—

A Fair Beautiful Skin.—By washing with Sulpholine Soap the natural tint and peach-like bloom of a perfect complexion is ensured.

May I, as the official who arranged the matter (on behalf of the Dean and Chapter) say that your informant appears to have misunderstood the circumstances? For some years past the Roman Catholics have been allowed certain privileges when they have annually visited the Cathedral, and when they wrote this year asking for the same again, Dean Farrar was willing that they should do as they have done before; but it was pointed out to him that within the last twelve months the whole system of showing the Cathedral and of arranging for parties to visit it has been reorganised. It only remained, then, to consider their request by the light of the Rules.

The Catholics asked (1) to be allowed the use of the Chapter House for an address by one of their number; (2) to be allowed (numbering about 600) to go all round the Cathedral unaccompanied by the usual guides; and (3) to do this without paying the usual fees. The two first requests were acceded to, but the rules did not admit of the third being granted, and under the circumstances they declined (as a party) to go round at all. . . .

With all respect to Lieut.-General Newton-Dickenson, the last sentence reduces the matter to very much the same form in which I originally stated it, except only for the plenary absolution of the Dean. The complaint was that the pilgrims were unable to visit the holy places except as ordinary public sight-seers, i.e., on payment of a fee, and under the eye of a verger-guide and the music of his descriptive drone. It is now officially admitted that the usual conditions were imposed on the pilgrims, and that they refused to visit the Cathedral on these terms. In his letter the Seneschal goes on to quote a letter from the Hon. Secretary of the Catholic visitors, who says that the Catholics cannot complain of having to pay the usual fees, and expresses his thanks for the courteous treatment he has received. But it is clear that in regard to the fees the Hon. Secretary does not here accurately represent the feelings of his clients, for the Seneschal tells us that the Catholics declined, as a party, to go round the Cathedral on the terms offered, and I can answer for it that some of them, at any rate, warmly resented the terms. The fault seems to lie with the "new rules," which apparently permit of every condition being relaxed except the payment of fees. There is no reason why these new rules should be as immutable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, and I hope they will be modified before the next pilgrimage.

I would recommend the charitable to exercise caution in responding to any appeals made to their charity by the Rev. James Flamank, Vicar of Cold Ashby, near Rugby, on behalf of a distressed lady in whom this gentleman is interested. In one of the last of these appeals, the lady in question is described by Mr. Flamank as the daughter of a late General Officer, whose husband is out of employment through an injury to his hand, and who is bringing up a family of five children on an income of £72 a year. Mr. Flamank is making a special appeal for a specific sum to pay the schooling of the second boy. No name is mentioned, but, unless I am very much mistaken, the lady referred to is a Mrs. Woodcock. For many years past this lady has been appealing, directly or indirectly, for charitable support, and there is considerable reason to doubt whether all her statements respecting her means are strictly accurate. There are, at any rate, good grounds for insisting upon more information than the Vicar of Cold Ashby gives before responding to appeals on this lady's behalf.

From one or two letters received it would seem to be expected by some of my readers that I should say something respecting a reference to TRUTH in the current number of the Review of Reviews. Mr. Stead has there devoted a lengthy article to Dr. Barnardo and his work, and has wasted a page or more of his valuable space in dealing with some supposed feud between TRUTH and Dr. Barnardo. All I have to say about it is that Mr. Stead appears to have been "spooked." On one occasion, and one only, has unfavourable reference been made to Dr. Barnardo in TRUTH, and that was about two years ago. Dr. Barnardo issued a sensational appeal for a very large sum of money, which he required to be in his hands within a few days, in order to defeat an alleged Popish plot for the ruin of his homes and the destruction of his work. He got the money, and more; but before he got it the existence of any such intention as that on which he based his appeal was emphatically denied by every one competent to speak for the Roman Catholic Church.

I pointed out that, under these circumstances, Dr. Barnardo owed it to the public, to those who answered his appeal, and to himself, either to show that he had good grounds for what he had stated, or to apologise and return the cash which he had obtained from the public by means of his statement. To this day he has never done either one thing or the other. He has sheltered himself behind the opinion of personal friends and adherents, who have declared their conviction that he had reason to believe what he said; but no particle of evidence in proof of his bona fides has ever been made public, and there can be very little doubt in the mind of any impartial observer that the "Popish Plot" was a myth—a myth which, by his own admission, brought into Dr Barnardo's coffers £7,000, "and more."

On this business I formed a very strong opinion, and took the liberty of expressing it. That opinion I still hold, and am ready to repeat and justify it whenever necessary. But I have hardly once alluded to the subject without acknowledging the merits of Dr. Barnardo's work; and if any unfavourable reference to the work has appeared in TRUTH, I have no knowledge of it. When, therefore, Mr. Stead speaks of the Proprietor and Editor of TRUTH as playing the part of the thorn in the flesh to the St. Paul of Stepney-causeway; appeals to the honour and duty of those stony-hearted cynics for recognition of the philanthropists' "good works;" and adjures them to abandon "the somewhat unworthy rôle in which they have persisted so long," he is talking, if he will forgive my speaking frankly, nonsense. If he will allow me to give him a piece of advice in return for his homily, it is that before he next attempts to answer TRUTH, he would do well to ascertain what TRUTH has said.

My attention has been called to a letter in the Western Morning News headed "The Kilburn Sisters," and signed "Mabel Bouchier, Local Secretary, C. E. A., Ivy Lodge Branch." After having stated that she is personally acquainted with several of the Sisters, this lady says:—

> I feel I must raise my voice against the misleading statements that are still being made and circulated. I will gladly send a pamphlet to any one who will give me an address, in which it will be seen that all the accusations have been thoroughly investigated by a special commissioner from Church Bells on their own account, for the benefit of the public. All the serious allegations have been proved to be false. . . .

If Miss Bouchier will send to my address, which she will find on the cover of TRUTH, a copy of this wonderful pamphlet, I shall be deeply indebted to her; for, so far from the allegations against the Kilburn institution having been "proved to be false," I am under the impression that up to the present time no serious attempt has ever been made to answer them.

With regard to the Church Bells "commissioner," it is sufficient to say that in the course of the investigation which I undertook at the request of the Sisters, I did not come across a single witness outside the Kilburn homes who had ever seen or heard from any one connected with Church Bells, while the Charity Organisation Society have publicly stated that this "investigation" was undertaken and completed without reference to them. In other words, the journal in question has simply heard what the Sisters had to say, accepted their testimony without hearing any evidence on the other side, and gives the result to its readers as the outcome of an independent inquiry. A report arrived at by such a process is undeserving of serious notice, and can only be accepted as an ex parte statement. For these reasons I have not, in considering the questions affecting the Kilburn Sisters, paid any attention to what has appeared in Church Bells. So far as I have seen these articles, however, I should say that they are unquestionably open to the charge which Mr. Loch makes in the Guardian of being "obviously inspired" by the Sisters. Except on that assumption, it is difficult to understand much that appears in them.

Perhaps the most remarkable fact about the attitude of Church Bells in this matter is that no allusion whatever to the TRUTH inquiry and its result has, so far as I can discover, ever been made in that paper. Whatever else the friends of the Kilburn Sisters may think about the TRUTH inquiry and report, they must at least acknowledge this—that the inquiry was undertaken at the request of the Sisters themselves; that it made known everything that could be said on both sides of the case (so far as the Sisters allowed of that being done); and that the result was extremely unfavourable to the Sisters. It is difficult to believe that the journal which has so strongly taken up the cause of the Sisters would have observed absolute silence on the subject unless at the desire of the Sisters themselves, who, as it now appears, have decided that absolute silence is the only answer that can be given to the TRUTH report. Let the Sisters and their journalistic friends by all means keep silence if they please; and let the public draw their own conclusions. But do not let us have lady secretaries of the C. E. A. writing to local papers that "all the serious allegations have been proved to be false," while the Sisters have decided that all the most serious of them must be left unanswered. And do not let us have the Church Bells' pamphlet advertised (as it has been advertised) as a full and complete reply to the whole case against the Sisterhood, while Church Bells has studiously refrained from any notice of the TRUTH inquiry and its result. Tactics of this sort are only calculated to further discredit the character of the Kilburn party for straightforward dealing.

I take this opportunity of mentioning that, in response to the large demand for the TRUTH report on the Kilburn Sisterhood, I have had the article reprinted as a pamphlet, price 2d., and it can now be obtained either direct from the publisher of TRUTH, or through the usual agents.

The Daily Chronicle on Monday published a letter from Mr. Robert Frewer, which was avowedly a puff of the "Women's Convalescent Home Association," run by that individual under the style of "Hon. Secretary." Had the editor of the Chronicle been aware of all that has appeared about Mr. Frewer in the columns of TRUTH, I feel confident that the letter would never have been published. I would more especially refer him to a recent article entitled "Home Truths on Frewer's Homes," which is at his service if he cares to see it; and when he has perused it, I feel confident that he will do his best to counteract the effect of Frewer's letter in Monday's Chronicle.

Innumerable exhortations have been addressed to me during the last two or three weeks not to let the 4th Hussars' scandal drop. I can assure my readers and correspondents that I have no intention of so doing. It must be remembered, however, that the promised personal inquiry by the Commander-in-Chief and the Adjutant-General into all the allegations that have been made is now in progress, and must necessarily take some time, if, as I take for granted, it is to be anything but an empty form. Until the result of this investigation is known, I cannot see that any good purpose is to be served by further discussion of the case. But I do trust that the Adjutant-General will have concluded his labours before the time comes for the departure of the 4th Hussars for India, which, unless I am mistaken, is only about two months distant. If the regiment goes abroad under the present circumstances, at least the incriminated officers ought to be kept back till the inquiry has been completed.

Among others who have recently communicated with me on this subject was a gentleman who has a son in preparation for the Army, and who asked my advice on the subject, feeling hesitation about committing the boy to the chances of a military career after reading particulars of the Hodge case. I am certainly not prepared to warn parents, individually or generally, against putting their sons into the Army merely on the strength of the misconduct of one particular gang of rowdy subalterns; though no doubt there are several cavalry regiments into which a father would be unwise to put a son who is not of "fast" tastes and blessed with unlimited cash. I have no reason to doubt that the majority of British officers view the kind of blackguardism to which Mr. Hodge was subjected with as much disgust as I or any other civilian. The bullying evil, from what I can hear, is a kind of tradition in a few well-known regiments; but it is one of those diseases which spread if not stamped out.

A worthy citizen of Northampton calls my attention to a recent Battalion order in the 1st Northamptonshire regiment now at Secunderabad. The order in question fixes a scale of charges to be made by the armourer-sergeant for cleaning and repairing rifles. It is contended that this order is at variance with paragraph 385, part 1 Equipment Regulations, 1890. I do not know what the general practice in the Army may be, but if an armourer-sergeant is paid by Government, it is not easy to understand why he should be permitted to levy these charges on his comrades for doing his regular work. Of course, if a soldier damages his rifle by his own negligence, he ought to pay for it; but some sort of damage to weapons is bound to occur in ordinary use without any negligence on the part of the soldier, and I should have thought that an armourer-sergeant was paid by the Government to make this class of damage good. They tell me the way this arrangement works out in the 1st Northamptonshire is that all weapons are sent periodically to be looked over at the armourer's shop, and the armourer detains as many as he thinks fit, and charges the owner accordingly. This is very much what might be expected.

Another instance of the way taxes are levied on the unfortunate Atkins. Some men from the 2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment recently joined the 1st Battalion at Karachi. They brought with them tin bed-head tickets with a space for a card to be fitted in, and this arrangement so delighted the quartermaster that he forthwith ordered the whole of the 1st Battalion to provide themselves with similar tickets in place of the brass ones they had previously had. This cost every man 12 annas. After mature consideration, however, the quartermaster seems to have come to the conclusion that he likes the brass tickets best after all; so he has ordered them to be replaced. As most of the men have got rid of their old brass tickets in the meantime, this means a further expenditure of 12 annas per man. Far be it from me to prevent the quartermaster having whatever style of ticket meets his taste and fancy; but if the tickets are changed for his gratification, clearly he ought to pay for them.

As I am not able to give a further instalment of "Military Pillory" this week, I would call special attention to the glaring travesty of justice which has just been perpetrated by a district court-martial at Sheffield. The prisoner was a sergeant in the Connaught Rangers, named Byrne. He was accused of conduct to the prejudice of discipline in using certain language about a colour-sergeant named O'Brien. As I have sometimes been accused of taking a biassed view of matters of this kind, I will give the account of the case as it has presented itself to the editor of the Sheffield and Rotherham Independent. After stating that relations between the two N.C.O.s had for some time been very strained, that paper says:—

> The two non-commissioned officers ultimately appeared before the Commanding Officer, Sergeant Byrne as a prisoner, and Colour-Sergeant O'Brien as his accuser, on the minor charge of not having warned six men for fatigue duty. In answer to the charge, Byrne—smarting, no doubt, under the sense of what he seems to have rightly deemed O'Brien's personal animosity—said that the colour-sergeant was telling lies about him, and added that O'Brien was in the habit of telling lies about him. The minor charges were then dropped, and the prisoner remanded for court-martial, and thus in solemn seriousness a military tribunal of the first importance was yesterday occupied in trying a man for denying, in emphatic terms, a charge made against him by another man. We have always been accustomed to regard a court-martial as something dignified and impressive, but this surely tends to reduce the affair to a level of ridicule beneath the most trivial trial in a minor police-court.

This was written before the trial had ended, as it now has, in Byrne being found guilty and reduced to the ranks. I understand that there is to be an appeal to the Judge-Advocate General on the question of law whether such a charge will lie on the strength of a mere observation made in the course of a prisoner's defence, when under trial for a minor offence before his Commanding Officer. For the sake of common-sense and common justice, it is to be hoped that the law will prove to be in Byrne's favour. Nothing said in a civil court, whether by way of plea or of evidence, can be made the subject of legal proceedings, except, of course, for perjury; and a court of justice would be a pretty place if this were not the rule. In this instance, the prisoner, by pleading not guilty to the first charge, necessarily implied that the prosecuting N.C.O. was guilty of falsehood; and to prefer a new charge against him and punish him with the utmost severity, merely because, instead of using some delicate periphrasis in denying the prosecutor's statements, he blurted out the repudiation in the simplest and most direct form of words, is nothing better than a vindictive abuse of legal powers.

At the last training of the 4th Battalion South Wales Borderers, "camp damages" were assessed at two shillings per head for officers and sixpence for N.C.O.s and men. As the same amount was levied last year, it is apparently a fixed charge. It is difficult to believe that this amount of damage is really done, the more so, because in the sister battalion, the 3rd South Wales Borderers, the amount does not exceed twopence per man. No account seems to be issued respecting these camp damage fees, which makes the thing look even more suspicious.

Complaints are made by soldiers at Malta about the restriction of the wearing of khaki. I understand that while khaki is worn on parades, guards, &c., no soldier below the rank of warrant officer is allowed to walk out in it. The men of the Navy and of the Marines are allowed to walk out in white clothing at Malta, and there can be no reason, beyond the caprice of some one in authority, why soldiers should be compelled to disport themselves at a sub-tropical station in red serge.

The Madras papers have recently contained some reference to the case of a young warrant officer of the Madras Public Works Department, who died from heat apoplexy, apparently owing to his not being able to get proper house accommodation in the hot season. There are certain Government regulations with regard to the posting of European subordinates of this Department to those places only where they can obtain both proper lodging accommodation and medical attendance. But it would seem that in this case these regulations have not been observed, and the officer responsible ought to be called to account for his share in the matter.

There are also similar complaints as to the military subordinates in the same Department being posted where they are unable to get medical attendance, and I have correspondence before me referring to two recent cases in which men have been informed, in reply to applications for medical attendance, that it was impossible to send an officer to attend them. If there are regulations on this subject, why are they not observed?

The editor of the Broad Arrow is to be congratulated on a curious journalistic performance. In February last, as most of my military readers will remember, a shocking exposure was given in TRUTH of the hardships and sufferings endured by invalid soldiers in removal from India to England, the backbone of the article consisting of a personal narrative describing the journey of a detachment of invalids from the north-west frontier to Netley. The matter has been under notice in TRUTH from time to time ever since, and I give elsewhere this week a further contribution to the discussion. It would seem that the Bombay Gazette has lately turned its attention to the subject, and it must have practically reproduced the original personal narrative from TRUTH.

In its current issue the Broad Arrow suddenly wakes up to this question, and in its turn reproduces, at third hand, all the more material statements which appeared in TRUTH last February. I have not seen the Bombay Gazette article, but the Broad Arrow is so profuse in its quotations that I have no difficulty in recognising my own literary property in its new setting. "The matter must be investigated most thoroughly," is the Broad Arrow's concluding reflection, "and without loss of time." Better late than never, of course, but if my contemporary had made the observation when the facts appeared in TRUTH six months ago, the possibility of "loss of time" would have been considerably lessened. I do not know whether the editor of this Service journal is really ignorant of all that has appeared about the trooping service in TRUTH since the article which has now reached him viâ Bombay; but considering the extraordinary amount of attention which he every week devotes to my remarks, it seems to me a pity that, while wasting so much of his valuable space in carping, sneering, and straw-splitting, he has managed to overlook a matter of urgent public importance.

It will be good news to British residents in Malta that the recent hint in TRUTH about the desirability of a little more steamship competition between England and that island has not been thrown away. I hear that the Prince Steam Shipping Company, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, intend to start in September three commodious steamers between Manchester and Malta at regular intervals of twenty days. The first-class fare by this line is to be £9. 9s. single and £16. 16s. return.

Another item of intelligence which will interest many of my readers is that the Directors of the Great Western Railway Company, at their meeting last week, decided definitely upon the doubling of their line between Twyford and Henley, and gave orders for the work to be completed in time for next year's Regatta. This cannot fail to lead to a great improvement in the Regatta service, and will probably be of advantage to Henley all round.

Apropos of the Drummond Castle inquiry, I have been asked whether Parliament intends to adjourn without taking further notice of Mr. Goschen's answer some weeks back on the subject of the provision of life-saving appliances in the Navy. Mr. Goschen, if I remember rightly, stated that there were no regulations in force in the Navy on this subject similar to those applicable to the merchant service, and he gave no indication that the desirability of such regulations is in any way recognised by the Admiralty. It is difficult to see why, if private shipowners are compelled to take certain precautions for the protection of their passengers and crews, the Government should not be required to do the same. On the contrary, I should have thought that the "model employer" ought to set an example to private owners in all such matters. The truth is that the Navy is conducted on the principle that a sailor has no business to leave his ship, whatever the emergency, and this seems to be carried to the length of assuming that if the ship goes to the bottom, it is the sailor's duty to go to the bottom with her. Is Mr. Goschen prepared to support this contention in the House of Commons?

Some time ago attention was called in TRUTH to the sweating of the mail-cart drivers at Portsmouth, and the result of my remarks was that the men got another two shillings a week, although they still seem to be doing a most extravagant day's work for the eighteen shillings a week they are now earning. It would seem, however, that the contractor in whose service these men are harbours some grudge against them in consequence of the publicity that has been given to the case. Three of the men have been discharged within the last two months, without any reason being given them, except that they had grumbled—which is denied—and last week a fourth was discharged in the middle of the day, at a moment's notice, with equally little ground. The impression prevails that every man who was in the service at the time when TRUTH drew attention to the matter is to be got rid of, and the contractor, who, by the way, is a lady, would do well, in her own interest, to contradict the suggestion, if she can. The men are not responsible in any way for what was said in TRUTH, nor ought they to be punished because their shabby treatment has provoked public comment. I hope it will not be long before the subcontracting system in the Post Office is done away with altogether, and all these employees put on the footing of established public servants. What has been going on at Portsmouth demands the attention of the Post Office, and Portsmouth is not the only place.

"GOUT AND RHEUMATISM" permanently cured by Post's "C.B.Q.," the only effective remedy. Absolutely free from Colchicum, Calomel, or Mercury, or other equally injurious ingredients. Prices, full particulars, and testimonials free on application to A. M. POST, 98, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C.

The examples of Post Office stupidity or negligence which find their way to the TRUTH office are, of course, only a small proportion of the total number of such occurrences, and I am glad to see that the Times has again devoted some of its space to gibbeting a few more of these eccentricities. The most remarkable example it gives is that of a gentleman living at a village just out of Cromer, who has had his letters addressed to him "near Cromer." By the wisdom of St. Martin's-le-Grand it has been ordained that this particular village is "near Norwich" (a distance of about fifteen miles), and not "near Cromer" (a distance of a mile and a half). The consequence is that this gentleman's letters, which are addressed "near Cromer," are first sent from London to that town, then sent back to Norwich, and then back again to their destination, virtually at Cromer. This triumph of the most idiotic red-tapism means a delay of twenty-four hours in the delivery of the letters, and goodness only knows how much trouble and expense to the Department.

I do not wish to be unduly hard upon the Duke of Norfolk, who is a very amiable and estimable gentleman, and has, of course, no special training or aptitude for the duties which at present devolve upon him. At the same time, the Duke is Postmaster-General by his own wish, and not, I should imagine, by the desire of any other individual in this country, and under these circumstances he must bear the responsibility of the consequences of his occupying his position. One of these consequences is that the Post Office is without any capable and efficient head, and in such a state of things every fool or idler among the subordinate officials necessarily has a free hand, and takes full advantage of his liberty. Hence the growing demoralisation of the Department.

Last week an iron staircase at Waterford Post Office gave way without a moment's warning, precipitating two employees who were on it at the time down a distance of some 15 ft. Fortunately they escaped with nothing worse than a shock and some bruises, but the accident might easily have been of the most serious character, especially if the staircase had been crowded at the moment, as I am told it frequently is. Such an accident points clearly to defective construction, and I understand that the main support of the staircase was only driven about an inch into a wall of masonry, and held there with mortar. It is to be hoped that there will be some searching inquiry into the circumstances, which will lead to the responsible party being brought to justice. Whether it is an example of the incompetence of the Irish Public Works Board, or of the vicious system of allowing private individuals (with interest in the right quarter) to put up Post Offices and lease them to the Government for their own profit, in the manner recently described in TRUTH, I am not able to state, but it would seem to be one or the other.

The following case may be added to others of the same kind given in last week's TRUTH. A newspaper addressed from London to a house in "Carmarthen, South Wales," reached its destination some three months after it was posted. It then appeared that the paper had been sent to New South Wales, although the address was quite legibly written. Accidents of this kind will happen in the best regulated Post-office, and if they only happened occasionally no one would be entitled to complain. But I have often heard of letters intended for South Wales being sent to New South Wales, and it is a mistake which all Post-office employees ought to be on their guard against. The true cause, I believe, of all such blunders is the disgraceful sweating of the sorters, and the unfavourable conditions under which the important work of sorting is done at St. Martin's-le-Grand. From what I have heard on this subject, I fancy that it is much to the credit of the staff that mistakes are not of more frequent occurrence.

The Sabbatarians have won the battle at Linlithgow, and the harmless pleasure of Sunday boating on the loch is to be stopped after this week. Mr. Akers-Douglas did not wish to interfere, but Mr. Wilson, M.P. for Falkirk Burghs, has worried him pertinaciously to withdraw the new rule, which he represented to be opposed to the wishes of the respectable bigots of Linlithgow, most of whom, doubtless, are Unionists.

It cannot be said that the water famine at the East End of the Metropolis has come to pass without due warning; yet the means taken by the East London Water Company to obviate it appear to be thoroughly inadequate. Their chief engineer asserts that the drought of the present year is far worse than that of 1895, the flow of the river Lea, from which the greater portion of the water is drawn, being 40 per cent. less this year than the preceding one. The Company's efforts to carry out their duties efficiently seem to have been limited to the construction, at the beginning of the year, of a new reservoir with a storage capacity of 200,000,000 gallons. This has enabled them to carry on four weeks longer than last year. But this is not enough. When the monopoly of one of the great necessities of life is placed in the hands of private individuals, no excuse should be allowed for the non-fulfilment of their liabilities, even to the very uttermost limits.

At last week's meeting of the Cowes Urban District Council it was stated that the steamer Anglesea had arrived in the Roads with a large cargo of "dangerous explosives," but she was not allowed to enter the harbour. This was all very well, but it turned out that these "dangerous explosives," which are used for blasting purposes, were transferred to a barge and quietly taken to a special train which conveyed them to Merstone. A number of parcels are said to be stored at Newport in the borough police-station, which is a pretty sort of place to keep "dangerous explosives."

It was recently reported to the Sevenoaks Rural District Council that the curate at Shoreham had been going about while "peeling" after an attack of scarlet fever. The case was a particularly bad one, for it seemed that the reverend gentleman had acted in defiance of the warnings of the sanitary officers, and that when refused a ticket at Shoreham railway station, he had driven to another station and travelled thence to London. The Medical Officer considered that a prosecution should be instituted; but all the Council did was to write letters to the curate's doctor and the curate, pointing out to the latter "the considerable risk he had run of spreading infection." One councillor said the poorer people at Shoreham "complained that it was not just that they should not be allowed to go out of doors after a case of infectious disease whilst their parson could go anywhere —even out of the district." Some of them have expressed their intention to ignore in future the notices of the sanitary inspector, and if they do so the Council will only have themselves to thank. This case was precisely one of those in which proceedings ought to have been taken, and after letting off the clergyman with a remonstrance, it will be difficult for the authorities to enforce the law against some poor and ignorant parishioner.

If the evidence given at an inquest held in Dublin on Thursday last upon the body of a child three years and a half of age, who had died through eating rotten fruit, is correct, it reveals a shameful amount of incapacity in connection with the management of the Meath Hospital. The mother took the child to the hospital between 9 and 10 p.m., but the outcome of the visit seems to have merely been a casual examination by a student, who recommended brandy as a specific. The child was taken away by the mother, but brought back again at eleven. By this time the resident surgeon was in attendance and recommended the detention of the child, but as he was left lying at the foot of a bed with another patient, with his clothes wet through and unchanged, the mother at 4 a.m. took him away. Once again the mother went to the hospital to ask if anything could be done for the child, now growing cold and stiff, but without result. The whole treatment seems either to show a cruel callousness to suffering, or a desire to save trouble and to shirk responsibility. In either event it is a case in which the managing committee of the hospital would do well to make searching investigation.

The privileges afforded to the local public at the Fever Hospital of the Douglas Corporation are certainly not undervalued by the local authorities. The five year old child of a tailor's assistant earning 50s. per week was removed to this hospital suffering from scarlet fever. After seven weeks' detention the child was sent home, and the happy parent received a bill for £8. 2s. 6d., being one guinea a week for board, nursing, and medical attendance, and the balance for disinfection and carriage to and fro. The father, declining to pay, was sued in the County Court, when the Corporation relied in support of their charges upon the fact that a trained night-nurse had been employed to attend the child for a considerable period; but the judge held that the father was not liable for this, and gave judgment for the reduced amount of £6. Even that seems a pretty stiff price, considering that the father was a working man, the hospital a municipal institution, and the removal compulsory; and I should think that the Douglas public would do well to inquire into the principles on which such charges are fixed.

The Hampstead Guardians had a discussion the other day on the advisability of sending patients to Beach Rocks Home at Sandgate, and a minority of four out of nine members voted for a resolution against sending more patients until the Home is certified by the Local Government Board. It seems a pity that the resolution was not carried. Although I have never suggested that the practical management of this Home is open to adverse criticism, it is perfectly true, as Mr. King, one of the Guardians, reminded the Board, that TRUTH has alleged that the director, Mr. John James Jones, has "made a good thing" out of the "philanthropic" work with which he has been connected; and it is wrong in principle that public bodies should in any way countenance a so-called charitable concern which has been handled in public as the London Samaritan Society has been, and has allowed the impeachment to pass practically unanswered. A Local Government Board certificate may not be worth very much from a financial point of view, but it would at any rate imply that John James Jones was subject to some sort of supervision, and was not (as I contend he always has been) absolutely master of the situation. Which is probably the reason why John James does not already possess a Local Government Board certificate.

Verbal faction fights of the most extraordinary description have for some time past been the rule at the meetings of the Dungarvan Town Board. These culminated at the last meeting in an exhibition of blackguardism which, I trust, will remain unprecedented. I have far too great a respect for my readers to reproduce in these columns any of the expressions which were freely bandied about amongst the Councillors. It is sufficient to say that the language was of the vilest description; and how the citizens of any town could have selected such representatives of all that is vulgar and brutal can only be regarded by the rest of the world as an inscrutable mystery.

I have received the following letter in reference to a matter dealt with in last week's TRUTH:—

Chambers, 123½, Union-street,
Aberdeen, 23rd July, 1896.

The Editor of TRUTH,
Carteret-street, London, S.W.

Sir,—I received your letter of the 21st inst., which I submitted to my clients, and I have since had the opportunity of advising my clients in reference to the terms of the paragraph in your issue of this week.

Although my clients have, I think, good reason for not resting satisfied with the character and form of your retractions, having regard to the very serious nature of the slanders published concerning them, they have no desire to be vindictive, and if they are relieved of all cost they are prepared to let the matter drop. The sum tendered by you, both as regards amount and the manner and style of your offer, are not calculated to induce generous dealing, to which your paper on this occasion, will not, I presume, make any claim. The precognition of parties, meetings, correspondence, and trouble require to be provided for, of course free of all expense to my clients.

In the whole circumstances, however, and to facilitate a final settlement, I am willing to modify my account to £1. 11s. 6d., that is, send me 24s. 3d. to settle.

Failing this my instructions are to instruct my correspondents, Messrs. Black & Moss, Lincoln's-Inn-fields, to at once serve a writ, in which case no previous offer is to be founded on, and is entirely without prejudice.—Yours, faithfully.

H. MACDONALD.

With all respect to Mr. Macdonald, I must say that his clients appear to have shown a much more reasonable appreciation of the position than their legal adviser. As inaccurate statements in the local Press had been reproduced in TRUTH, it is a matter of course that they should be corrected and apologised for on the inaccuracies being pointed out, and I have no objection to pay any reasonable costs that may be incurred in calling attention to the error. But for the terms of Mr. Macdonald's original letter, and for the demand of £5. 5s. costs for writing it, the solicitor alone is responsible, and I must say that both the demand itself and the terms in which it was made were such as I was entitled to take exception to. Mr. Macdonald virtually admits this by now reducing his demand from £5. 5s. to £1. 11s. 6d.—a very handsome and substantial reduction. When in the first instance I tendered this gentleman the sum of 7s. 3d., I had, I thought, reckoned up every possible item of expense which could reasonably be charged against me. I had not, however, allowed for "the precognition of parties, meetings, correspondence, and trouble," requisite for the purpose of writing a very simple letter and despatching it from Aberdeen to London. Neither can I now admit that any one who considers himself aggrieved by inaccuracies in a newspaper report is entitled to charge the editor with all the cost of these various legal operations. However, I am a man of peace, and I have no desire that Mr. Macdonald's clients should be in any way out of pocket in consequence of a mistake to which I have innocently given currency; and as Mr. Macdonald himself has become so much more reasonable in his estimate of the expense, I have cheerfully paid him the balance of £1. 4s. 3d., which is his present price for a final settlement. Knowing what I do of solicitors' costs, I cordially agree that Mr. Macdonald has been very moderate in estimating the cost of "precognition of parties, meetings, correspondence," &c., at the modest figure of £1. 11s. 6d. But I would respectfully suggest to his clients that when they next have occasion to write to a newspaper, it would be possible to have the thing done on even more economical terms than this.

I must apologise to the learned friend whose suggestion on the subject of the employment of counsel by prisoners was noticed in last week's Truth, and who complains that I have done him an injustice. I can best put the matter right by allowing him to speak for himself:—

I was serious in what I said, and I have often known cases when solicitors have asked £15 to defend some impecunious delinquent, who could easily scrape together a guinea, and who has a fair defence. But I certainly should never encourage such an idea as leaving cards, which would in my view lead to the very most undesirable forms of "touting;" whereas were a notice exhibited in the gaol, a prisoner would communicate with his friends, and they generally know how to get hold of some one who is fairly good, and yet not too big a gun to take a guinea. The only prisoners who are up to the dodge now are the old hands.

There is a great deal of force in this, and Heaven forbid that I should weaken it by undue levity. It is a monstrous thing that a prisoner in needy circumstances should be sweated out of an amount like £15 for the benefit of a legal middleman, when a fee of £1. 3s. 6d., or even £2. 4s. 6d., to counsel is the most he need spend; and if any steps can be taken, either in the prison or elsewhere, to give the accused an opportunity of obtaining proper legal assistance, by all means let it be done. It would be an advantage all round if the public could be brought into more direct relations with counsel, and if my correspondent can suggest any means by which the above advantages can be extended to defendants in civil actions, I shall be delighted to give the suggestion publicity.

At Shropshire Assizes, Sir Henry Hawkins once more had occasion to severely lecture the Great Unpaid on their refusals to grant bail to prisoners, and on their harsh treatment of unfortunate girls charged with concealment of birth. In two instances in which servant girls were tried and acquitted on this charge, it appeared that they had also been committed by the magistrates for wilful murder, though there was not a tittle of evidence to support the capital charge. As the result of this preposterous and utterly unjustifiable action on the part of their worships both prisoners had been kept in gaol awaiting their trial, and one had actually undergone four months' imprisonment—a term which, the Judge said, would in the circumstances have been four times too long even if she had been found guilty of concealing her child's birth. In their dealing with cases of this kind, the magistracy frequently appear to be bereft both of common sense and compassion.

There were some edifying disclosures at Liverpool last week at an inquest on a woman who had died after taking a quack medicine advertised as somebody's "Marvellous female remedy." A man named Dennis Collins, who stated that he was formerly a qualified practitioner in London, but had been struck off the register two years ago for advertising, deposed that he was employed in the shop where the mixture was sold, and got a salary of £2 a week. The shop belonged to a Mrs. M'Conville, whose husband had formerly carried on a business of the same kind at another address, but is now, according to Collins, "down in Portland," where he is "serving the Queen." A clerk in the business conducted under these delectable auspices produced books showing that as much as £14 and £15 was taken in a day, and that £30 a week was spent in advertising the "female remedy." Another "surgeon"—by name Fitzgerald—employed in the business, "appeared to be in a dazed condition" when called as a witness, and answered "in a rambling way," but denied that he had been drinking "to any great extent." Doctors of a more reputable character gave evidence that the deceased woman had undergone an illegal operation. After the coroner had denounced in the strongest terms the business carried on at this shop, and had deplored that "advertisements of the character he had read should be allowed to appear in the public Press," the jury returned an open verdict, and the proceedings terminated. A more lame and impotent conclusion can hardly be conceived. If they had their deserts, all who are concerned in running places of the kind above described would join the worthy M'Conville in serving the Queen at Portland, and if the law is not capable at present of bringing about that result, it ought to be amended. But the worst feature in the whole scandal, to my mind, is the part played in this infamous traffic by the newspapers who fill their columns with advertisements of these quack "remedies." There are scores of them, as I have again and again pointed out, in London and the provinces, and their conduct is a disgrace to the whole Press.

Some horrible particulars of a case in which the body of a girl has been kept uncoffined and unburied to await the attendance of the coroner have been sent to me from Chadlington, Oxfordshire. The girl met with an accidental death on Saturday, the 18th inst. The coroner was informed of the occurrence the same day, but owing to previous engagements the earliest date he could fix for the inquest was the evening of Tuesday, the 21st. Consequently throughout the tropical heat of the three days the body remained lying in a labourer's cottage occupied by the father, mother, and ten children. When the jury viewed the body it was a mass of corruption, while the odour was perceptible to passers in the street, although the cottage stood back from the road. Apart from the needless pain which these circumstances inflict upon the relatives, the danger to the public health is a real peril, and one well deserving of the attention of the county authorities. The appointment of a deputy coroner would obviate once for all the recurrence of so hideous a scandal.

A very similar case, though due to a different cause, has also occurred at Eton, where the inquest upon the body of a lad who met with a fatal accident on the 20th inst. was not held until the 23rd. The coroner made clear his freedom from liability for the delay by explaining that he had not been informed of the circumstances until the 22nd, and the blame obviously rests with the police for the unconscionable time occupied in forwarding the information. This is easily understood, for the Buckinghamshire County Council are of opinion that two constables form an efficient police force for the Town Ward of Eton during the twenty-four hours.

Which offender deserves the more severe punishment—the bank cashier who commits a series of frauds, and purloins hundreds of pounds belonging to his employers, or the working-man who obtains a cheap watch by a false pretence? Most people would say the former. It will be seen from my Legal Pillory, however, that at Scarborough Quarter Sessions the working-man in such circumstances is awarded two months' hard labour, after being kept in custody for three months before his trial, while the bank cashier, who has been for four months a fugitive from justice, gets his case disposed of by the magistrates in Petty Sessions on the very day he surrenders to the police, and is let off with a month's imprisonment without hard labour. I am always reluctant to say a word in depreciation of magisterial lenity to first offenders, but on this occasion it really appears to have been stretched too far, and, with all deference to the Bench, I consider that, instead of dealing summarily with a case of such gravity, they ought to have committed the prisoner for trial at Quarter Sessions or Assizes. The course they adopted is admirably calculated to confirm the popular belief that there is one law for the rich or well-to-do criminal and another for the poor man. Other cases in the list illustrate more familiar characteristics of Justices' justice, those from Stamford making a particularly instructive contrast:—

Scarborough Police-court. Before Captain Darley and other magistrates. James W. H. Cattley, lately cashier at the local branch of the York City and County Bank, charged with embezzlement. He absconded nearly four months ago, but surrendered to the police on the morning he was brought before the Bench. A large amount had been taken by the prisoner, but only one charge of stealing two sums of £81 and £75 was proceeded with, and to this he pleaded guilty. One month, without hard labour.

Lurgan Petty Sessions. Alfred Alford, charged with cruelty to a dog. Defendant consigned an Irish terrier from Lurgan to Liverpool, cramming it into a box about five inches shorter and four inches lower than the animal itself, with small holes for ventilation. the dog died in the agony of suffocation, being found with its tongue protruding from the mouth and pierced through by its teeth. Fined £2 and costs.

Nottingham County Police-court. Before Messrs. A. Heyman, R. B. Bagnall-Wild, H. Barker, and C. H. Hill. John Maltby and Thomas Taylor, convicted of assaulting William Widdowson and Elizabeth Powdrill. Complainants were walking together when defendants, after demanding money from them, struck Widdowson several times, and knocked him into a ditch. Powdrill was also struck and knocked into the ditch, and both complainants bore marks of violence. Fined £2 for each assault.

Searborough Quarter Sessions. Before the Recorder. Joseph Edward Mulvannah, sawyer, pleaded guilty to having obtained a watch, value 7s. 6d., by false pretences. He got the watch by saying it was for his employer. He had already been in custody over three months, and was now sentenced to a further two months' hard labour.

Derby County Police-court. Before Hon. W. M. Jervis, Colonel Noel, Messrs. H. Boden, H. V. Mellor, H. Swingler, R. Waite, W. H. Marsden, and J. H. Smith. John Steeples, and Levi Bull, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of rabbits and nets. Bull fined £3 and costs; Steeples £5 and costs.

Nottingham Police-court. Before Mr. T. Hill and Mr. W. Lee. William Smith, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Maidenhead County Police-court. Before General A. B. Thompson, Colonel F. Clayton, and Mr. J. Whitehead. Arthur Thomas Woodbridge, a boy of 14, charged with breaking into a house and stealing a silver watch and 5s. 1d. in money. Six weeks' hard labour.

Stamford Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. F. Dickinson, H. Knott, C. Chapman, H. T. Betts, W. J. Battle, and Major Hart. Thomas Lincoln, charged with being drunk and disorderly on two occasions, and with assaulting a woman. With regard to the first two charges, it was stated that defendant behaved like "a raving madman," was very violent, and attacked a policeman. As to the assault, he insulted complainant in the street, followed her into her house, struck her on the face, and twice knocked her down. There were many complaints of prisoner having assaulted people while drunk, and fourteen previous convictions were recorded against him. For the three offences he was fined altogether £2. 2s.

Doncaster Borough Police-court. William Thompson and John Henry Kelly convicted of assaulting John O'Dowd. Complainant was thrown to the ground and kicked, receiving injuries which had to be attended to at the infirmary. Thompson fined 40s. and costs; Kelly 10s. and costs.

Crediton Petty Sessions. Before Mr. H. Elston, Major Montague, and Mr. L. B. Gamlin. Henry Ware and Frank Brealy charged with assaulting Ernest Walsh. Defendants assaulted Walsh in a most brutal manner, knocking him down and kicking him while he was on the ground. Fined 20s. each, including costs.

Kilmarnock Police-court. Before Bailies M'Grau and Morton. William Strain, convicted of indecently assaulting a young woman; also of assaulting a married woman who had remonstrated with him on account of his behaviour. Fined £2.

Irvine Police-court. William Garrett and William John Garrett, charged with assaulting John Cunningham. The accused made what was described as a murderous attack upon the prosecutor, felling him to the ground, beating him on the head, face, and body, and kneeling on him. Fined 15s. each.

Pollakshaws J.P., Court. James M'Cullum, junior, convicted of brutal and unprovoked assault on his mother by compressing her throat, knocking her down, and kicking her on the face and body. Fined £2.

Upton-on-Severn Petty Sessions. Before Sir C. C. Johnson, K.C.B., R. S. Bagnall, and E. Tennant. Robert Smith, farmer, charged with cruelty to a mare by allowing it to be worked while in an unfit state. It had a greasy, swollen leg, twice the size of the other, covered with wounds. The hoof was full of maggots. Fined 10s. and costs.

Stamford Borough Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Thomas Mountain and Thomas Lee Lattimore, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of eighteen rabbits and two nets. There were previous convictions against them. Fined £5 each and costs, or two months.

Clay Cross Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. P. Jackson, J. S. Jackson, and W. B. M. Jackson. William Shakespeare, a youth, convicted of stealing sixpennyworth of bones. One month.

Horncastle Police-court. Before Rev. Canon Wright, Rev. J. Graham, Messrs. H. M. Hawley, N. L. Calcraft, and C. Conington. Thomas Lovely and Henry Hardy summoned for unlawfully using a gun for the purpose of taking game. Fined £4. 9s. each.

Honiton County Police-court. Before Messrs. D. W. R. Buchanan and J. Ashley. Frederick Hurford, charged with sleeping out. Fourteen days.

Belfast Custody Court. Before Messrs. F. G. Hodder and D. Corbett. Patrick M'Keown pleaded guilty to the larceny of a coat. One month.

Alloa Sheriff-court. Before Sheriff Johnstone. Robert Allan and James Cook, miners, charged with trespassing in pursuit of game. They had caught two rabbits. Cook, fined £1. 5s., or seven days; Allan, £2. 9s., or fourteen days.

Blackpool Police-court. Before Messrs. H. Fisher, E. Bryning, T. Riley, and J. Fish. John Stewart, charged with stealing a pair of trousers from a shop-door. One month.

Greenock Sheriff Criminal Court. Before Sheriff Begg. Julia M'Allister, an old woman of 74, charged with stealing a pair of slippers. There were previous convictions against her, the last about eighteen months since. Sixty days.

Perth Police-court. Before Bailie Smart. Ellen Joyce, an inmate of the workhouse, charged with breaking a number of panes of glass in the probationary ward. Fined 30s., or in default twenty days' imprisonment.

A disgraceful story is told in the Irish papers of the experiences of a little girl, barely ten years old, who was summoned the other day as a Crown witness in a case at Belmullet Petty Sessions. No provision having been made for her conveyance to the Court, this child was left to trudge on foot in heavy rain from Rossport to Belmullet, a distance of fourteen miles. The Rev. Michael Smyth, of Aughoes, reports that he found her a few miles from Belmullet barefooted and bareheaded, wearing a thin cotton dress and a little shawl, and drenched to the skin; and he states that it was only by the kindness of a friend that she was able to appear in Court at all. His reverence personally endeavoured to bring the matter before the Bench, but the presiding magistrate refused to let him say a word on the subject. The presiding magistrate ought to be ashamed of himself, and so ought the police and other Crown authorities who required the little girl's attendance.

I am curious to know what price is paid by the purchaser in South Africa for a khaki coat. The following facts in regard to the cost of making them came out at a trial last week before Judge Emden at the Lambeth County Court. George Glenie, a clothing manufacturer, of East Dulwich, is engaged on a large export order for South Africa. He gets 4½d. per coat for cutting, making, button-holing, and pressing, and out of this he pays tailoresses 9d. per dozen for working in each coat by hand five button-holes and sewing on four buttons. The tailoress out of this has to pay for thread, and a 2d. fare for fetching the coats and carrying them back. It takes one hour to finish each coat. Therefore the rate of wage is a trifle below ¾d. per hour. Glenie pleaded that, owing to the small amount that he himself received per coat, he had to "cut it very fine," that he had big orders from Messrs. Cook & Son, of St. Paul's Churchyard, and that almost all profit goes to the capitalist. From Messrs. Cook & Son we ought to have —if Glenie's contention be true—what is the price of material of each coat, and at what price each is sold by them. We should then be able to estimate the relation between the profit of the capitalist and the wage to labour in the matter of khaki coats.
